was undoubtedly the explosion of the boiler in the basement. This boiler, of sixteen-horse power, was built by the Pitkins of this city in 1882. It was not insured by the Hartford Steam Boiler and Inspection company, but was inspected by an officer of that company last August and was then pronounced all right. No engineer was on duty at the time of the explosion, the custom being for the night engineer to bank his fires at midnight and go to bed. He does not sleep in the hotel. This engineer, Alexander Thuer, was arrested this afternoon on an indictment charging manslaughter. It is conjectured that Gaines, the colored porter, may have started the pumps, throwing cold water into an overheated boiler. But this is only conjecture, and Gaines is dead. The force of the explosion was terrific. People in all parts of the city were awakened by the shock. Huge stones were shattered and iron pipes bent and twisted. Windows in adjoining buildings and across the street were demolished and panes of glass two blocks away were cracked. At the new railroad depot, a block away, a huge pane of plate glass was cracked and many slates were dislodged from the newly completed roof. Night employes in the railroad station and offices fled to the streets in terror.

Advices from the Indian Territory say that the journal or diary of Belle Starr, the noted female bandit of the territory, has been obtained from the Starr ranch. Belle intended to publish it as an autobiography. The matter contained therein is replete with thrilling incidents of personal adventures, but the most remarkable features of all are certain disclosures concerning crimes in Texas and the Indian Territory which will tend to prove that innocent men have been sentenced on various occasions. It is also a matter of curiosity that the names of prominent persons are connected with certain crimes that have been committed in recent years. Some of the sketches in Belle Starr's journal are lively and humorous.

Sheriff Estes of Madison, Wis., has returned from England, bringing with him Hans Kuhn, the murderer who was arrested at Liverpool a few weeks ago. Kuhn was locked up at head-quarters in New York until the sheriff was ready to start for Wisconsin. The prisoner is to be tried for a most brutal crime. On Dec. 13 he murdered his room-mate, William Christian, at Madison, Wis. [illegible] Sheriff Estes started in pursuit, and traced Kuhn to Philadelphia, where the murderer had bought a ticket for Liverpool. [illegible] he was locked up in London until Sheriff Estes went there with extradition papers.

IT'S PASSED AT LAST.

Both Senate and House Adopt the Report of the Territorial Conference Committee.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 20.—Congress has now done all it can do for the four northern territories, and did it at the last frankly and graciously. The report of the conference committee was agreed to by both houses this afternoon, by the house of representatives in fifteen minutes without a division and by the senate after an hour of senseless and fruitless debate. Also without a roll call. It now goes to the president for his signature. Senators Platt and Cullom and Mr. Springer sat up till nearly midnight last night giving the finishing touches to the perfected bill, but made no material changes in the draft sent you last night. Soon after the house met this morning Mr. Baker marched proudly across the floor with the ponderous roll of the engrossed bill under his arm. It was laid upon the speaker's desk while Springer was temporarily in the chair during the closing of the debate on the direct tax bill. That was finished about 2 o'clock, whereupon Springer arose in his seat, and, in a voice scarcely audible from hoarseness, presented the conference committee's report accompanied with a statement giving a history of the conference and the features of the perfected bill.

PROMPTNESS AND DISPATCH.

The statement was signed by the three house conferrees and the report by Springer and Baker only. Reading the bill was dispensed with, the house being satisfied with the explanatory statement of the conferrees. This was a welcome gain of time, but the Dakota people assembled in the galleries were not prepared for the rapid dispatch of business that followed. The only debate was a brief statement by Mr. Barnes that he could not conscientiously sign the report, but that he would confine his opposition to a simple vote against it. The significance of this guarantee against this obstructive delay had hardly been grasped when the question was put by Speaker Carlisle, and the report declared adopted amid a volley of yeas and a scattering fire of noes. This was the signal for joyful clapping of hands not confined to the Republican side, drowning a few faint cries for a division which were ignored by the speaker, deprecated by Mr. Cox and not insisted upon. In the meantime, half the members were on their feet shaking hands and exchanging congratulations. Springer modestly and generously bowed his acknowledgements to Cox and presented him with a yellow rose from his own buttonhole. Every member active in the fight for the territories notably each of the three delegates, was the center of a handshaking, congratulating crowd. The scene was spirited but brief, the house passing immediately to other business, while Springer hurried the conference report over to the senate. This action was everywhere accepted as final and decisive, and the delegation of visiting Dakotans, prominent among them Delegate Matthews, held an informal jollification meeting in the main corridor.

EVERYBODY CONGRATULATED.

They intercepted Springer on his way to the senate, and he had to run another gauntlet of congratulations. Springer was half-sick with a cold, caught sitting up nights over the bill, but happy as a boy. His chief satisfaction seems to be that he has realized his dream of bringing in the territories at the same time and on exactly the same basis. The Dakota visitors were uniformly satisfied, although Judge Moody would have been more so if he could have secured the admission of South Dakota in the spring. Matthews was significantly congratulated as the next congressman from South Dakota. The conference report reached the senate about 4 o'clock and was at once presented by Senator Platt, who moved its adoption. The senate was moderately full, though it thinned out before the tedious debate was finished. The Northwestern senators, however, stuck to their seats. Springer and the three territorial delegates followed the report over from the house and sat on senate sofas during the debate, while Judge Moody and several other Dakota visitors occupied seats in the galleries. An attempt was made to dispense with the reading of the bill, as in the house, but Edmunds objected, and an hour was consumed listening to the resonant elocution of Charlie Johnson. The rest of the time until a quarter past 6 was frittered away by cranks on one side and partisans on the other. The members of the committee explained their position very briefly, and did everything in their power to hasten the vote. Dawes tried to pick flaws in the land sections, but was speedily satisfied by Platt. Then Mr. Hoar wanted to know why the conference committee had ignored a petition sent to them by him, signed by twenty-two senators, favoring woman suffrage in Washington Territory. This brought Blair to his feet with the same old speech in behalf of the down-trodden half of humanity to which the senate chamber has so often echoed. Meanwhile impatience increased in all parts of the chamber to such a degree that the protests of Vest and Morgan against the exclusion of New Mexico were scarcely listened to on their side or replied to on the other.

THE DEED COMPLETED.

In the absence of a roll call it will interest the people of the territories to know that both Morgan and Butler declared their purpose to vote for the bill, notwithstanding their objections on behalf of New Mexico. Finally Harris of Tennessee threatened to move to go into executive session unless the debate ended and a vote was taken. As in the house the ayes were general and the noes scattering, and nobody insisted on a division. The loudest and most conspicuous negative votes were those of Cockrell and Vest of Missouri. This finished a good day's work, and the Dakota people went off satisfied. The slight fear of a pocket veto which haunted the friends of the territories yesterday has been entirely dissipated by the easy triumph of to-day. The bill is completely engrossed, and will be signed by the speaker of the house and president of the senate early to-morrow, and sent at once to the president. Springer makes no sort of doubt that he will sign it without delay. Mr. Springer, indeed, has a plan to induce him to sign it with a dramatic flourish on Washington's birthday. Not to be outdone in the invention of private theatricals, Mr. Matthews proposed, with the president's permission, to assemble all the territorial delegates and visitors at the White House at the time of the signature and present a grand historical tableau for the edification of contemporaries and the admiration of posterity. It will be observed that the territorial people are in a happy frame of mind. I hope none of them will wake with headaches to-morrow. Delegate Toole tonight sent the following dispatch to Chairman Davidson, of the Montana Democratic committee:

"The child is born. Its name is Montana. The interesting event occurred at fifteen minutes after 6 o'clock. Four new stars will greet the rising sun and hold their festival around the American flag. One more shot along the whole line and the victory is ours. [illegible] Shake.

Minnesota Legislature.

Saturday Feb. 16.

SENATE.—A stack of Ramsey county bills came in from the house and were all referred with the exception of the one authorizing the issue of $50,000 bonds for a public library site. This was passed under a suspension of rules.

The governor sent a message to the senate calling attention to a circular that had been received by him in relation to the proposed centennial celebration of Washington's inauguration in New York, April 30, and recommending the appointment of a joint legislative committee to consider in what way the state of Minnesota shall be represented at the centennial.

The bill amending the libel law was passed by a vote of 30 to 9.

Among the bills introduced was one by Mr. Scheffer which is very severe upon drunkards. It provides that persons convicted of the crime of drunkeness shall be punished for the first offense with ten days' imprisonment in jail; for the second offense, thirty days; for the third offense, ninty days' and for the fourth, not less than six months nor more than one year. The fifth grand drunk is a state prison offense, and the term of imprisonment is not less than one year nor more than two years. There is nothing said in the bill about fines. Quite an audible smile passed around the senate when the president announced that the bill would go to the committee on retrenchment and reform. The introducer did not like this disposition of the measure, and had it sent to the committee on the judiciary.

Mr. Lende put in a bill to amend the timber culture law providing that any person who shall plant from one to ten acres of land with trees shall be allowed $2.50 annually for each acre so planted, for a certain term of years. A similar bill introduced a few years ago places the premium at $3. Senator Keller introduced a bill providing that private banking houses shall place the word private on their signs, cards, letter heads, etc.

Gov. Merriam sent to the senate his first veto message. His excellency withholds his signature from the bill to amend the militia law, which declares that in cases of riot and public disorder, when the militia is called out, the commander-in-chief and militia shall be held guiltless and fully justified by law if any person present as a spectator or otherwise is killed or wounded on such an occasion, the persons unlawfully assembled shall be held responsible therefor.

HOUSE.—A unique petition came in from Faribault. It was offered by Mr. Temple, the prohibition member from that section, but it protested against the submission of a prohibitory amendment.

The governor referred the question of Minnesota's part in the proceedings at New York in honor of the centennial of Washington's inauguration to the house, and asked the appointment of a committee to consider the matter.

The Broadway bridge bill was reconsidered and sent back to the Ramsey county delegation for a moment yesterday while it was amended by cutting the amount of bonds authorized from $380,000 to $350,000, after which it was again passed.

Speaker Graves yesterday announced two special committees as follows: To investigate building and loan associations—Fleming, Estes, Williams, Morris and Hanke; to investigate the cost of railroads—Flynn, Quam, Sevatson, Fariey, Phillips, Ives, and E. C. Johnson.

Monday Feb. 18.

SENATE.—Mr. Bowen's bill for an act "regarding arrests and the exercise of police powers," otherwise known as the "anti-Pinkerton" bill, came before the senate yesterday, the question being upon its passage.

When the bill came to a vote it was lost, 16 senators voting in favor of it and 17 against. As there were several who were absent or failed to vote, one of the senators asked to have every member answer to his name, but the president declared that there was no way to compel a senator to vote if he did not want to.

The senate again had before it yesterday some matters pertaining to the judiciary. In the first place there was the bill raising the salaries of the district judges to $4,500. Mr. Crandall moved to amend the bill by reducing the amount therein named to $4,500. Mr. Goodrich thought that 3,500—the present salary—was a fair and just compensation for the judges. He did not know of any district in the state where the best legal talent, qualified for the position, was not willing to accept a judgeship for the salary. The fact that two very eminent lawyers in Ramsey county had accepted judgeships under the present salary rule was an indication that $3,500 was a sufficient compensation. Mr. Durant wanted to make it at least $4,000. After some further talk the bill was referred to Mr. Durant, who originally introduced it.

HOUSE.—A bill has been prepared for presentation to the legislature, providing for the appropriations for the various state correctional and charitable institutions. The total amount required for current expenses for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1890, is $522,000, and a similar amount is asked for the year ending July 31, 1881. Following are the amounts for each institution:

Fergus Falls hospital for insane, $25,000; St. Peter hospital for insane, $140,000; Rochester hospital for insane, $140,000; State soldiers' home, $20,000; school for the deaf, $35,000; school for the blind, $12,000; school for the feeble minded, $45,000; State public school, $15,000; State reform school, $35,000; State prison, $40,000; State reformatory, $15,000. Total $522,000. Additional funds are required for current expense. The total amount of appropriations, is $656,800 for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1890, and $718,800 for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1891, or a grand total for two years of $1,375,600. There is a bill now before the legislature for an appropriation of $22,500 for the state public school at Owatonna, and the ways and means committee decided to report it back to the house with a recommendation that it pass; but the board of corrections and charities is opposed to the measure, believing that the school should not be enlarged to such an extent, but a greater effort made to place the boys with respectable families. It is believed this can be easily done, and the number in the school be kept nearly as low as at present.

The house did less work yesterday than at any other session since its organization. It was in session three hours, during which time nine bills were introduced, two of these were passed, and nine more on general orders were considered. This is the sun and substance of the session, so far as work accomplished is concerned.

Tuesday, Feb. 10.

SENATE.—There is a growing doubt among several members of the legislature as to whether there be any reapportionment this session or not. There is, of course, the probability of a long and hard fight over the report of the committee, whatever it may be, and there is the positive hard fight in the committee before an apportionment report can be prepared. All this will take time and the days of the session are fleeting. Those who are satisfied with the present arrangements will no doubt prefer to filibuster rather than give up too much to other sections of the state. The apportionment committee has prepared a table and map and the inequalities of the present apportionment are made apparent.

Mr Swenson's bill to prohibit the sale of cigarettes or tobacco in any form to children under sixteen years of age received another airing in the senate yesterday.

Mr Whiteman introduced a bill whose object is to make a state institution of technology at Duluth, recently incorporated. And appropriates for it $100,000.

HOUSE.—The first temperance fight came off in the house when the the Kreis bill came up for final passage. The bill had been recommended the day before, but was not yet out of danger. The fight made on it [illegible]

Wednesday, Feb. 20.

SENATE.—The bill prohibiting pool selling is strongly opposed by gentlemen of St. Paul and Minneapolis owning fast horses, [illegible]

The anti-Pinkerton bill again came before the senate on motion to reconsider the vote whereby the senate refused to pass it a few days ago. After the reconsideration it was referred to the judiciary committee. The idea seems to be to get the senators all on record with reference to this measure when they have a chance to vote on it next time.

A joint resolution was introduced by Mr. Daniels, memoralizing the congressional delegation from this state to use their voice and influence to secure the enactment of such legislation as will authorize the president of the United States to settle differences between this country through the methods of a board of arbitration. It was referred to the judiciary committee.

Opposition was developed in the senate to the joint resolution which has passed the house to memoralize congress relative to the opening of the Sioux reservation in Dakota, and it was defeated by a tie vote.

HOUSE.—The governor referred to the house a communication from Gov. Humphrey of Kansas containing a joint resolution of the Kansas legislature on the beef and pork combine, to which was attributed the present low price of live stock products.

There were four bills on the calendar, but only two of them pulled through. The first one considered was Mr. Underwood's bill to allow soldiers and sailors to peddle goods. This bill had had quite a stormy time before it reached the point of final passage. Mr. Dunn who had opposed it from the start, opened on it again. He reiterated his belief that it was nothing but buncombe, and furthermore it was putting an insult upon the old soldiers. None of them have asked for it, and it should not be passed. Several others supported this view, and the bill failed by a vote of 24 to 43.

The committee on public accounts and expenditures, in their report, said that some of the state institutions were not managed as economically as they might be, and yesterday a resolution calling on them to name the institutions where such a state of affairs existed came in, signed by Mr. Stebbins, chairman of the committee on insane; Mr. Hoppin, of state's prison; Mr. Perrin, of normal schools, and Mr. H. Wilson, of school for defectives.

Thursday Feb. 21.

SENATE.—The railroad and warehouse commission received something of a raking-over while Mr. Day's bill, to make the office of commissioners elective and limiting the term of service to two years, was under debate in the senate. Mr. Pope opposed the bill because there was no provision in it for representation on the commission of the minority political party, and because under it the offices of all the commissioners would expire at the same time, and the entire railroad and warehouse business would be revolutionized every two years. Mr. Hixon said the farmers wanted a chance to get some men on the commission which they would be able to do it they were allowed to vote for commissioners.

Mr. Pope introduced a bill which has for its object the abolition of the deadly car stove. It provides that railroad cars shall be heated by steam, and that if a furnace or other heated is employed the railroad company must have for it the written approval of the railroad commissioners.

A couple of bills were introduced in the senate by Mr. Edwards relating to the management of the penal institutions of the state. One provides for the calling of a joint meeting of the boards of managers of the Stillwater penitentiary and the St. Cloud reformatory to prescribe rules for the transfer of certain classes of prisoners from one institution to the other and for the pardon of prisoners, excepting life prisoners who have served for twenty-one years. It also provides for the appointment of a state agent to exercise supervision over discharged prisoners, to secure work for them, etc. The other provides for pay for the overwork of the inmates of the St. Cloud institution, and authorizes the managers to make such arrangements as may seem to them desirable, through a prisoners' aid society or otherwise, for the supervision of discharged convicts.

HOUSE.—The committee on legislative expenses made its report. Much eloquence was let loose, and much hard feeling was evidently excited. It took up two hours and more of the time of the house, and nothing at all was accomplished in the way of settling the question. It would be hard to get at the exact temper of the house from the votes that were taken. When the ayes and noes were called there seemed to be an overwhelming majority in favor of the report, but when the vote was taken in any other way the house was almost exactly divided. The report of the committee was as follows:

The committee on legislative expenses in accordance with the resolution passed by the house Feb. 22 1889 beg leave to submit the following report: Having investigated the number of clerks and other employes now on the pay roll of the house, and the necessity for the same, we are of the opinion that the clerks of all committees, excepting those of the judiciary, enrollment and engrossment, are unnecessary; also the comparing clerk of the enrolling clerk, doorkeepers of the post-office, gallery, and one doorkeeper of the door at the main entrance of the house, speaker's clerk and two pages, and we recommend that the same be discharged. We also recommend that the assistant sergeant-at-arms act as one of the doorkeepers when not employed in the other duties of his office.

Just before adjournment, Mr. C. R. Davis introduced by unanimous consent the only bill of the day. He stated that he introduced it by request. It is for a law establishing a civil service commission for the state and the cities. The act is practically that of the State of Massachusetts, adopted in 1887.

The Hearts of Men and Women.

Some interesting statistics about the human heart are published by a journal which combines science and sentiment beyond most of our contemporaries. We refer to The American Queen, and the topic on which it dilates is the human heart. The surprising fact in its report is that the heart of a man is larger than that of women and weighs more, especially as life advances. The heart of a girl and the heart of a boy are of about the same size, but the manly heart gains, so that when it reaches perfection, say at the age of fifty, the area of its surface is fully as much as two square inches more than the area of woman's heart. We confess that we are surprised and rather shocked at this information; and if it proceeded from any other source we should certainly doubt its accuracy. Yet, after all, it is not size but quality that ought to be regarded in hearts. So it is also with brains. A small brain, like that of Abraham Lincoln, for instance, may be far more efficacious, provided it be of the requisite fineness and compactness, than a big brain, like that of Yankee Sullivan. The heart of a woman is undoubtedly nobler than that of a man in quality. Its pulsations may not be so noisy, but they are more intense and subtle; and thus it is that woman not only surpasses man in her power of loving, but in the elevation, the ideality and the integrity of moral nature. In short, women are better than men, and the statement of The American Queen cannot be admitted as proving anything to the contrary.—New York Sun.

Periodically New York is puzzled by the sudden and absolute disappearance of some figure well-known in its life. In this category is the case of John J. King and his wife, [illegible] Mr. King was at one time publisher and proprietor of the "Key-note," a musical journal that had a brief existence, and in which a good deal of money was sunk. Mrs. King was formerly Mlle. Isadore Martinez, a well known concert and opera singer. Mr. King went to South America as an agent for piano fortes and Mrs. King accompanied him for the purpose of giving concerts in that paradise of vocalists. A report came back more than a year ago that the couple had been drowned when crossing a river. The report, however, was never verified, and their intimate friends have never ceased to feel the gravest anxiety for their fate. Within a few days letters have been received from both Mr. and Mrs. King announcing their safe arrival in London from Buenos Ayres.

The veteran newspaper man, H. P. Hall, has taken charge of the St. Paul Daily News and we notice a great improvement in that paper. If anybody kin make anything of the News, Hall kin.

Washington's Birthday will have a double significance to the territory of Washington hereafter, as on that day the president signed the bill admitting her to the Union. What's the matter with its being her birthday as well as that of the great Father of His Country!

Congressman Comstock has gone to Washington to attend the inauguration ceremonies and get the hang of the congressional business. The Fifth District builded wiser than it knew when Comstock was chosen as our representative in congress.

Senator Day has introduced a bill that provides for the election of the Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners by the people. We consider this a move in the right direction and hope it will pass. Its friends claim a majority for it in the Senate. We are of the opinion that the measure will prevail in the House.

Of all the subjects broached for the benefit of the farmers of this country, the one for the extention of the time for paying taxes until December 1st, is among the most important. This should have gone hand-in-hand with the seed-wheat bill, but it did not, and lately we see no mention made of it at all. This is a matter that could well be done and would be of great help to such of our farmers especially as have lost their crops and will be unable to pay their taxes when due. These should not be punished further by being obliged to pay the delinquent penalties. We would suggest to our friends the advisability of writing our representatives to see what has been done, or is to be done, in the matter.

The prospects for farmers for the coming season are very bright, and hence for every kind of business. If we have an ordinarily successful year for crops, farmers will make big money, for the prices will be better than before in many years, and the many railroads running in almost every direction in our county, places all within easy reach of a good market. The inquiries for cows, horses and beef cattle are brisk, indicating returning confidence and more extended plans for the future. Said one of our most prominent French farmers to the writer last week: "I think we ought to diversify in order to reach the fullest measure of success which this country is capable of. Not that I do not think there will be money in wheat this year, for I do, and I think this year will be just the time for our farmers to change their methods. They will make some money in their wheat, and if they are wise they will use that money to get into stock of various kinds. I believe we can raise beef and pork for the St. Paul market at a profit, one year with another, and make more money than we do now from our wheat. The way we are now doing, how long will it take to ruin our land? The very best soil in the universe, and our soil is all of that, cannot support a constant drain forever, and what would be done then? I think we ought by all means to get into a different style of farming just as soon as we can do it, and we cannot begin too soon." We perfectly agree with that farmer, who, by the way, is one of the men who is practicing what he preaches, and right here comes in one of the many ways in which a farmers' club in every town would be beneficial. Such subjects as that, thoroughly discussed among farmers from every standpoint would be exceedingly beneficial to a community, and those who never attended such meetings can have little idea how much good they accomplish. The reasons are so obvious that it is a matter of wonder to us that farmers appear to take so little interest in the subject.

THE TWINE TRUST.

Not long ago we published an article from the Western Rural in relation to the prospective twine trust. The Rural urged farmers to resist it by refusing to use twine this year, the plan being for farmers to agree to cut their grain and thresh it from the gavel or stack it loose, providing the twine could not be bought for 10 or 12 cents per pound. The subject has been brought before the Granges and Alliances in the United States and a majority of them have consented to try the plan. In places where there is no organization, farmers who would consent to the plan were requested to send their names to the Rural for publication. This was in order to warn the trust against the attempt to put twine up to an unjust figure. Many names have been sent in and have been published, but among them we have not seen the name of a man in this Fifth Congressional District. What is the matter? Are we not interested in this important question? Already we see evidences too plain to be misunderstood of a great rise in the price of twine and, unless the trust can be induced to change its tactics, we expect to see twine very much higher than ever before. THE JOURNAL has often urged the formation of societies among farmers by which they could often consult upon topics of interest to themselves, and had this been done, Polk County farmers could have had a powerful voice in this matter. If the whole Red River Valley should unite upon the question, it would make the twine combine feel terribly sick, and added to the action already taken by earnest, wide-awake farmers, would no doubt cause the trust to back down from its position and furnish twine at reasonable rates, and we should not have to try the experiment of handling loose grain. Farmers can never successfully compete with sharpers until they organize in their own interests.

Motley Register: The report of the sub-committee on reapportionment brings out prominently the gross injustice of the present system of representation in the state legislature. The most noticeable illustration of this inequality is found in the 46th district, which includes the neighboring county of Cass, and is represented (ably, to be sure) by Speaker Graves in the House. At the last election the 46th cast 11,724 votes. The 45th district cast 10,171 votes and but one representative. It comprises the northwestern counties of the state. As a comparison take some of the districts in the southern part of the State. The 2d has five representatives and cast but 5,536 votes; the 10th has four representatives and cast 6,471; the 15th has five representatives and cast 7,056; the 20th has four representatives and cast 5,002; the two districts in Ramsey County have seven representatives and cast 26,189; the three districts comprised in Hennepin, Anoka and Isanti counties have fourteen representatives and cast 41,727 votes. Many districts with two and three representatives cast less than 4,000 votes. This district (the 39th) cast 8,865 votes for its three representatives, while Stearns cast but 7,115 votes for its four representatives. There is great need for a reapportionment of the state, and we hope to see it accomplished at this session. There is no necessity of increasing the number of members in the legislature. The 46th is large enough for two districts with two representatives each. Here in the 39th we have less cause for complaint, yet our representation in the legislature is not so great as it should be. But what this district lacks in numbers is more than compensated for by the influence and ability of its members.

Frosted Wheat

Its Germinating Powers Tested—Experts say That Farmers can Safely Sow It.

St. Paul Dispatch: The report of the agricultural experiment station on the results of experiments to ascertain the value of frosted grain for seed has been published. It shows that frosted grain will sprout and grow at the rate of from 40 to 90 per cent of the total amount planted.

Prof. Green, who made the experiments, D. M. Wellman and Oliver Dalrymple, well known as extensive wheat growers, and others, were at the chamber of commerce this morning, where Prof. Green had brought the samples of wheat with which experiments had been made; he had also brought the wheat stock. Speaking of the experiments, Mr. Wellman said:

I am assuming a great responsibility when I say to the farmers of Minnesota that they may safely sow the wheat they have, even though it may have been frosted. But I believe these experiments may be relied upon. I don't think it is necessary for farmers to borrow money of the state with which to buy seed grain. They have enough among them so that by purchasing of each other at from 40 to 50 cents a bushel they may supply themselves and not run in debt. I believe that it is better to sow what they have than run in debt for other seed.

Mr. Dalrymple was asked his opinion. He was inclined to believe that the experiments could be safely relied upon, but before he expressed a definite opinion he would investigate further, as he is as yet almost entirely uninformed.

Brainerd Dispatch: Hon. W. A. Fleming: Yes, I have heard and read much about the Duluth & Winnipeg land grant. The proposed legislation to forfeit this grant is in the interest of Jim Hill, to enable him to cripple the Duluth & Winnipeg, which he looks upon as a competing line. Of course it will revert back to the state. The B. & N. W. will not be benefitted at all, unless it be indirectly. If Hill can prevent the D. & W. building its road, he might possibly hasten the B. & N. W. on through this city. But the B. & N. W. will not get one acre of the land.

Railroad Audacity.

The Western Rural.

Complaints come to us from our readers in Illinois that the railroads are raising rates very nearly to the point of shutting out producers from the market. One of our subscribers living out of Chicago a hundred and fifty miles, came in last week to consult us with reference to relief from the shameless greed of this monopoly. His alliance was about to take hold of the subject, and make complaint to the railroad and warehouse commission. It is not at all improbable, however, that the roads are not exceeding the schedule rates, though any farmer or alliance can make sure of that by sending to the commission at Springfield and asking for a schedule. The roads have been growing more impudent for some months. They are chafing under the Inter-State Commerce law. They cannot bear to think of being compelled to give up their system of conscienceless robbery, and the presidents of the road have been having their heads together in Chicago the last week hatching a scheme by which the law can be violated and yet save the criminals from just punishment. The scheme is for the presidents to enter into a tacit agreement to plunder the public and to abide by the agreement like "gentlemen." A greater misuse of the word "gentlemen" was never made. A league of robbers and law breakers was never yet composed of gentlemen.

But this maneuvering on the part of the presidents shows how restless the roads are under restraint, and how willing they are to satisfy their greed by any means that will not bring retribution upon the plotters. Though the farmer is having a hard time of it, his condition never appeals to these fellows for sympathy or even justice. They plot for his life's blood and for the bread that belongs to his children. The movement started in the alliance referred to, is a good one, for it is a means of agitation, and that is what we want. We need to arouse a public sentiment that will drive the legislature to compel the railroad and warehouse commission to do its duty, and if the present schedule permits the down right robbery of the producer, let us compel the making of a new one. The Rural would like to hear from every section where railroad rates have been raised, with the statement of when they were raised and how much. Let us make the battle hot against this outrage. The railroads of Illinois have made more money the last year than they made the previous year. The farmers have made less and are worth less. Now let us charge the great wrong with a united front and even desperate courage, until the loudest noise that can be heard in the state house at Springfield shall be the united voice of Illinois farmers.

VALUE—25 CENTS, CASH.

Our Book Coupon.

Any subscriber to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, who has paid therefor in advance to the end of 1889, who will present this Coupon personally, or by mail, at the store of John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York, or or 218 Clark St., Chicago, will be credited with the sum of 25 Cents toward the regular price of Robert Elsmere, 12mo, cloth, 657 pp., Price 50 Cents; postage 12 cents, the remainder of the price of the book to be paid in cash, the order to be received on or before March 16th, 1889. JOHN B. ALDEN.

I, a subscriber to THE JOURNAL, as above specified, claim the above offer, and enclose the money required.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The above innocent-looking little coupon means a good deal.

Most of our readers, probably, are familiar with the name of John B. Alden, Publisher, New York, who has done so much in popularizing and cheapening high-class literature. His edition of above described, one of the most famous books of the century, is a remarkable specimen of his enterprise. A copy of the book, to be seen at this office, printed in large type, on good paper, well and nicely bound in cloth, shows it to be fairly equal to books our readers in years past have been accustomed to pay $1.00, $1.50, or even $2.00 for, his regular price being 50 cents.

In consideration of our placing Mr. Alden's enterprise thus prominently before our readers, and commending it, as we can do most heartily, he has consented to allow us to make the above very remarkable coupon offer to our subscribers. Please notice carefully the simple and reasonable conditions:

1st. Paid in advance subscribers to THE JOURNAL.
2d. To be presented within a specified date.
3d. 25 cents cash with the coupon, and 12 cents postage, if by mail.

The first condition is OUR requirement. If you have paid us—thank you; it is a pleasure to acknowledge it with the above privilege. If you have not yet paid, the above is an inducement for you to do so at once. If you have a neighbor who "borrows" your paper, or who is not a subscriber, will you kindly tempt him, for us, to subscribe by showing him this notice.

To favor our subscribers as much as practicable we have arranged with Mr. Alden (and this is where the importance of the date comes in) that if subscribers so request all books shall be shipped together in our care, and we will deliver them at our office; the cost of freight will not be over 3 cents a copy, instead of 12 cents postage, by mail.

If this very remarkable opportunity is welcomed by our readers as heartily as we anticipate, we hope to be able to arrange with Mr. Alden to present them other similar opportunities during the year.

Dockage and Dirt.

The Topics Which vex the Warehouse Commissioners—Changes Proposed.

Minneapolis Journal.

According to the report of the railroad and warehouse commissioners the receipts of grain at Minneapolis for the year ending June 30, 1888, were 76,612 cars, against 71,082 cars in 1887; St. Paul received 7,891 cars in 1888 and 7,818 in 1887. The total receipts in the twin cities for 1888 were 115,215 cars, an increase of 1,292 cars over 1887. At Duluth the receipts were 30,712 cars against 35,023 for 1887. Chief Inspector James accounts for the falling off in receipts at Duluth and the grain in Minneapolis to the demand for wheat for home consumption as the increase in the price of flour was an inducement to make the output as large as possible. Among the important topics touched upon in the question of "dockage" which is the most difficult one the inspectors have had to deal with. According to the report there is no other market where wheat is given its proper grade, if clean, when in dirt. It is graded without reference to grade if properly cleaned. It would be a much easier task for the inspector should the grading be done this way, or if the wheat was properly cleaned before being sent to market. This plan would be a serious one for the farmer as it would cost him considerably more to clean in the elevator. The receipts of the department for the year were $30,731.96 and the expenses $9,236 less. State Weighmaster Marchant recommends the weighing department be changed so that the chief state weighmaster shall be in charge of the entire system with the same authority as now given the chief inspector.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION

Of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company.

We, the undersigned, do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of incorporation under title one (1), of chapter thirty-four (34), of the general laws of the State of Minnesota, and the several acts of the legislature of said State, amendatory thereto, and for that purpose have adopted and signed the following articles of incorporation.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this corporation shall be

"The Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company."

The general nature of its business shall be to construct, maintain and operate for the transportation of persons and property for hire, a main line of railroad with one or more side-tracks, or lines of rails, and branch lines. The main line to commence at some point on Lake Superior at or near the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, extending thence in a westerly and northwesterly direction through the city of Crookston, to the international boundary line, at some point on the northern boundary line of Kittson County, in the State of Minnesota, with a branch line extending from said main line, at the city of Crookston, in a westerly direction through Polk County to the Red River. And also a branch line extending from the city of Crookston, in a southeasterly direction to the city of Brainerd, in Crow Wing County, Minnesota.

ART. 2. The principal place of business of said Railroad Company, shall be at Crookston, Minnesota.

ART. 3. The time of commencement of the said corporation shall be on the first day of March, 1889, and the same shall continue for a period of fifty years.

ART. 4. The amount of the capital stock of the said corporation shall be five millions of dollars, ($5,000,000), and the same shall be divided into fifty thousand (50,000) shares of one hundred dollars ($100) each, and all capital stock subscribed for shall be paid in at the times and in the amounts required by resolution of the Board of Directors.

ART. 5. The highest amount of indebtedness or liability to which said corporation shall at any time be subject shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000).

ART. 6. The names and places of residence of the persons forming this association for incorporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague,	Edmund M. Walsh,
Nathan P. Stone,	William Anglim,
John R. McKinnon,	John McLean,
John Locken.

all of whom reside at the City of Crookston, in Polk County, Minnesota.

ART. 7. The names of the first Board of Directors of said corporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague,	Edmund M. Walsh,
Nathan P. Stone,	William Anglim,
John R. McKinnon,	John McLean,
John Locken.

The government of said corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of seven (7) directors, to be elected by and from the stockholders annually, as hereafter provided. The annual meeting for such election shall be held at the office of the company at the City of Crookston, on the first Monday of February of each year, and until their successors are elected and qualified the said directors above named shall respectively continue to be such directors. The directors shall at their annual meeting to be held immediately after the annual meeting of the stockholders, elect a President, a Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Until the annual meeting as aforesaid:

Robert J. Montague shall be President.
John McLean, Vice-President.
Edmund M. Walsh, Secretary.
William Anglim, Treasurer.

In case of the resignation of any of said officers or directors, or their inability or refusal to act, their places shall be filled by the remainder of said Board of Directors, at any meeting called and held for that purpose. If for any cause the annual meeting for the election of the officers and directors shall not be held at the time above specified, it may be held at any other time that the directors may appoint for that purpose.

In witness whereof, the said incorporators have hereunto set their hands and seals this 16th day of February, A. D. 1889.

Circular Letter.

To Dairymen, Creamerymen and Dealers in Butter and Cheese.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
DAIRY DEPARTMENT,
ST. PAUL, Feb. 8, 1889.

OIL IN BUTTER COLOR.

The recent ruling of the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue relative to butter color elicited no small amount of attention. Dairymen and those interested in the manufacture of butter have become deeply concerned in the matter. In reality it has reached that point where it behooves all butter and cheese makers and dealers in butter and cheese to enlighten themselves on the subject. With an intense desire to see our dairy interest kept on the high plan already attained I have taken special interest in behalf of this most important industry.

Numerous inquiries have been published in the press with a variety of opinions attached. That all doubt may be dispelled and for the guidance and safety of the butter and cheese makers of our state, I herewith give some interesting correspondence between the Commissioner of Agriculture, Hon. Norman J. Colman and the Hon. Joseph J. Miller, Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. Miller's decision settles beyond dispute the question that butter and cheese and classed as adulterated dairy products in case they contain color mixed with vegetable or animal oils.

The Commissioner of Agriculture brought the matter of butter color to a focus by the following communication to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the same being published in the Internal Revenue Record and Custom Journal. A copy of this official journal I now have in my possession. The letter from Commissioner Coleman: "Will you kindly inform me whether under the Federal Oleomargarine tax law, so-called, it is allowable for a producer of or dealer in butter to mix with his butter intended for sale any portion whatever of cotton seed or other vegetable oil? Will the addition of a portion not exceeding one per centum of lard oil or cotton seed oil, to butter intended for sale, render the manufacturer or dealer in such goods liable to the provisions of the oleomargarine tax law?" The reply by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

"In reply to your letter of the 25th inst., you are informed that the act of August 3d, 1886, which imposes a tax upon oleomargarine makes no distinction in favor of mixtures containing but a small percentage of fats other than that of butter fat, and that a mixture of one per cent. of lard oil or cotton seed oil with butter is as liable to tax as a mixture containing a greater percentage of lard oil or cotton seed oil."

In the above correspondence it will be noticed that no reference is made to coloring matter. Articles have been published of late, without date, to the effect that the official ruling prohibits the addition of coloring matter to butter. The ostensible object of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is to prevent the addition of lard oil or cotton seed oil to annatto, which constitutes the basis for butter color. An alkali solution in butter color is allowed. Here I desire to note the views of Dr. Bennett F. Davenport, one of the most eminent chemists of the Massachusetts State Board of Health. In the 19th annual report of the board, Dr. Davenport says: "The very general use of annatto, or other coloring matter in butter or cheese, is to be condemned as having but one fraudulent purpose, that of making them to appear to be of a better or finer quality than they really are."

"In the case of butter it is to make inferior winter dry-fed butter to appear to be June or grass fed butter. In the case of cheese, it is to make skim or poor milk quality cheese to appear to be a whole or rich milk cheese. When the farmers and dairymen no longer use coloring to falsify the appearance of their own product, they can more becomingly demand that the oleomargarine manufacturer be no longer allowed to use it in his product. In the cause of simple justice neither of them should be allowed to use it at all."

State Dairy Commissioner.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., FEBRUARY 28, 1889.

Holstein-Friesian Cattle and Their Merits.

C. F. Hunt, Denver, Colorado, in Western Resources.

By request I take great pleasure in introducing a few merits possessed by this great breed of cattle, which may be of interest to some if not all the dairymen of the western country.

That they have merits second to none on which they now stand as a dairy cow has already been proven by actual tests, for milk, butter and cheese, and if you please we might say they are not so far behind in the production of beef.

History shows that Holland, the home of this great breed, receives more value for its dairy products than any other country in the world, and that the dairy interests are very large, of great value to the country and have become so only by the excellence of their products, which are derived from and founded on the excellence and uniformity of their cattle, having been bred and improved by careful selection for that purpose for more than two thousand years.

A new beginner generally looks to men of experience, men who have been successful in business of a like character to that in which they are about to engage; then why should not beginners in the dairy business in a new country pay some attention to facts and figures presented by successful men that have so long been engaged in the same line of business.

To get a little nearer to the true merits of this breed I will refer you to a few records made by some of the individual animals.

First on the list we have Pierterje 2d, which gave over 30,000 lbs. of milk in 365 days. Next

Clothilde, 26,021 lbs. in 365 days.
Echo, 23,775½ " "
Aaggie 2d 20,763 lbs. 8 ozs. in 365 days.
Princess of Wayne, 20,469 lbs. 9 ozs. in 365 days.

And scores of others with records ranging from 10,000 lbs. to the above figures given.

Now take some for a shorter time:

Nierop, 116 lbs. in 1 day; 3,129 in 30 days.
Jamaica, 112 lbs. 2 ozs. in 1 day.
Ethelka, 101 lbs. in 1 day.
Hamming, 99 lbs. in 1 day.
Rhoda, 96¾ lbs. in 1 day.
Mink, 96 lbs. in 1 day.
Tritomia, at 2 years, 74½ lbs in 1 day.
" " 4 " 82 lbs. 10 ozs. in 1 day.

And hundreds of others ranging from 35 to 40 as two-year-olds to the above records as mature cows. That they stand at the head as the largest milk producers in the world is without a doubt. As to the quality, it will best be seen where they have come in competition with other dairy breeds for butter, also records made by some of the individual animals. The first step taken in competition with other dairy breeds was the winning of the Breeders' Gazette challenge cup for the largest thirty day butter record. This test was open to the world and to all breeds until July 1, 1883. It was won by Mercedes, a cow of this breed and owned by Thos. B. Wales of Iowa City, Ia., her record being 3 lbs. 10 ozs. in one day; 24 lbs. 6 ozs. in seven days; 99 lbs. 6¼ ozs. in thirty days, of well worked, unsalted better, which at that time was the largest of any breed in the world.

This seemed to awaken an interest in the minds of the breeders and other like tests were soon in progress.

During the fair at Minnesota held in '86 there were three premiums offered for the cow of any breed making the the most butter in twenty-four hours. In this test there were nine entries of Jerseys and seven of Holstein-Friesians, which latter great breed carried away the three prizes, the first going to Tritomia, owned by Mr. Wales, which afterwards made 25 lbs. 8 4-5 ozs. of butter in seven days, and 36 lbs. in ten days as a four-year-old, this record being made by myself. The same year at Des Moines, Iowa State fair the same prizes was won by a Holstein-Friesian.

At the New York dairy show, held in New York city in 1887, the first and second prizes were also awarded to cows of this breed over all other breeds, Clothilde taking first, Clothilde 3d, a three-year-old, taking second and first prizes wherever tested with other dairy breeds. Now let us look at some of the individual records made by cows of this breed at their respective homes:

De Vries, 120 lbs. in 30 days.
Aaggie 2d, 107 lbs. in 30 days, and over 300 lbs. in 90 days.
Clothilde, 28 lbs. in 7 days.
Florence Herbert, 27 lbs. 13½ ozs. in 7 days.
Tritomia, 25 lbs. 8 4-5 ozs. in 7 days.
Tourmaline, 24 lbs. 13½ ozs. in 7 days.
Imkje's Mercedes, at two years old, 21 lbs. 8 ozs. in 7 days.

And many others ranging from 12 lbs. as two-year-olds, to have records as mature cows.

The first volume of the Advanced Registry of this breed was published in '87. It contains over 700 records. The actual average of these records for full aged cows is 18,437 13-16 lbs. of milk in ten months, or 18 lbs. 13.6 ozs. of butter in seven days.

For four-year-old heifers, 12,901 5-16 lbs. of milk in ten months, 17 lbs. 3 ozs. of butter in seven days.

For three-year-old heifers, 10,889 7-8 lbs. of milk in ten months, 15 lbs. 0.88 ozs. of butter in seven days.

For two-year-old heifers, 9,485 lbs. milk in ten months, 11 lbs. 8 ozs. butter in seven days, which is far ahead of that of any other breed.

The herd of Messrs. T. G. Yeomans & Son, Walworth, N. Y., has established for itself a reputation as having the largest butter records of any herd or breed in the world. Now when you come to take into consideration the large amount of milk and the large quantity of butter it will make, you have left a large amount of skim milk, which if made into cheese will produce a finer quality and larger amount than from any other breed; or if fed to calves or pigs will be found another important item over that of any other breed.

One more point is their qualifications as beef producers. On this point I do not claim as on milk and butter and cheese that they stand ahead of any other breeds, but they do hold a place away up as beef producers, and for early maturity they will stand with any.

First, look at their calves, large, square, often weighing 100 lbs. and over, making the finest quality of veal. As a matter of record, take for instance the bull Jaap 4th, that weighed at eleven months 1,200 lbs., making a gain of 3 5-9 lbs. per day, and for thirty consecutive days an average of 5½ lbs. per day, which is admitted to be the largest gain in weight ever made by any animal of any breed.

In the dressed carcass class for yearlings at the Chicago fat stock show in November, '86, the Holstein steer, Brookband Lad, owned by Mr. Wales and fed by myself, in competition with all beef breeds, came within one of gaining the first prize. There were twelve entries, which shows that this steer stood eleven out of the twelve.

Without attempting to prove that they stand equal to all others as beef producers, I do say on account of their large size and the way they take on fat when dry, the cows, if injured in any way as milkers or breeders, are of greater value to the butcher than any other breed of dairy cattle; they being the largest milk, butter and cheese producers, also their record as a greater growth, being hardy and of a kind disposition, and in every way fit to fill the place they are meant for, surpassed by no other breed in general points of usefulness, compels me to believe and say they are the most profitable breed in the world.

The Millers.

Western Rural: The millers of the country have been having their heads together at Indianapolis and doing some audacious things, of course, for such people are nothing if not audacious. They modestly propose to reduce the output of flour and "will try to reduce the price of wheat." That programme should be immensely satisfactory to the crowd, for it boosts up profits at one end by raising prices and boosts them up at the other by reducing prices. The gentlemen claim that it will not affect the wheat grower at all but only the speculator. That is a fine story to tell to the marines. The millers are not bursting with love for the farmer. They are on the point of bursting with greed, and in order to satisfy their appetite for gain, they are quite willing to impoverish everybody who gets in their way. What shall we do? There is nothing that can be done but to keep arousing the growing and vigorous public sentiment against all such combination. As producers we ought to have the co-operation of consumers in a fight like this, and will have if we will lead. Let the word go out that while we would not crush all such combinations in order that we may get more for our wheat, we would also benefit the consumer by making the price of flour cheaper. These two things are entirely compatible. If commerce were regulated as it should be the producer would receive more for his products, and yet, as a rule, the consumer would get them for less than he now does. Under present conditions these middlemen are like a two-edged sword, they cut both ways.

The Price for Senatorial Honors.

The Western Rural.

The several legislatures have been engaged in electing United States Senators and the usual financial scandal has been attached to some of the elections. We have not seen any senatorial quotations so far, and do not know what the senatorial office is selling for this season. In fact we do not know that the office is selling at all. We observe, however, that whenever there is a fierce contest, the fellow with the longest purse gets there with remarkable regularity. It would be libelous for us to say, without evidence of the truth of the statement, that there is bribery, and as we are not anxious to rush heedlessly into libel suits, we are not making the allegation. But if we were a betting man, we would wager our money on the biggest pocket book in a senatorial contest every time. Passing the matter of how the pocket book manages to get there, however, it is a discouraging fact that when it does get there it never does the people any good. It cannot be expected that it will, for it has gorged itself upon the people, as a leech gorges itself with blood, and the only love it has for its victims is what it gets out of them. It is, therefore, idle to expect much from the money bags in congress; and the sooner we hump ourselves and compel legislatures to elect men and not dollars to the senate, the better we shall be off, and although in saying it we repeat what we have said a hundred times, and yet is the most needed and most practical advice we can give, the only way to make legislatures to suit us, is to organize and work and vote in concert either through the parties to which we belong or through new ones. The important thing is to organize, and the rest of the business will take care of itself.

Winter Feeding of Cows.

American Agriculturist.

The only profitable animal on a farm or in a dairy is one that is kept either growing or producing all the time. It is too commonly supposed that cows are necessarily idle in winter; that the rigorous season precludes the making of butter. This idea is wholly wrong and doubly unprofitable. It forces the largest product of the year to be made in the summer months when the hot weather is unfavorable to the quality and keeping of the butter, which is thus sold at an inferior price; and it causes the large waste of food above referred to. Cows should be kept busy all the year. A good cow—and none other should be kept—should be making butter nine months in the year, and almost any cow will do this with the right feeding. No doubt there is much in the breed of a cow, but breed is nothing without feed, and feeding has had very much to do with excellence of breed. My experience has beed that there are very few cows indeed that will not respond profitably to high feeding. In my dairy, just now, is a six-year-old common cow, that never tasted grain food until I bought her three years ago for nineteen dollars. She then, with a calf two months old, gave six quarts of milk a day and three pounds of butter weekly. Now with a calf eight months old she is giving nine quarts daily and a little more than seven pounds of butter weekly. She will continue profitable as she has done before until March, when she will be dried off previous to having her next calf, late in April next. I have had many instances like this in my dairy experience. I advocate high feeding, especially in the winter. Fifteen pounds of the best hay and ten or twelve pounds of mixed corn meal and bran can be given profitably to any cow, unless she is a most extraordinary one. If milk is not given in return for this feed the cow will get fat and should be turned into beef, and in this way the cost of feed will be returned' and a poor cow for the dairy will be put out of the way.

It is a question often discussed how many times a day a cow should be fed. In regard to this the judgment of the cow is worth more than of the owner. Two good meals, one early in the morning and one late in the evening, with an interval of fourteen hours between, in the middle of which a light meal is given, are certainly most satisfactory to a cow. Let a person judge for himself. Usually he feeds them before breakfast and after supper. But he himself gets a good dinner between these times, or he feels a disagreeable sensation of hollowness and weakness in the stomach. A cow will unquestionable feel the same, and she shows it by calling for food in her very eloquent way. To insure her best product a cow must be kept satisfied, contented and happy; and like many of her owners she is happiest on a well filled stomach. Hence I approve of, and practice, feeding a light meal of hay, or some other good fodder at noon; and at least five pounds of good hay, with five or six pounds of grain food of some kind in the morning and the same in the evening.

DONNELLY'S DEFENSE.

He Resents Certain Imputations Cast Upon His Record by Mr. Benson, and Gives His Reasons Therefor.

Pioneer Press.

St. Paul, Feb. 24.—To the Editor: While absent from home on a lecturing tour, my attention was called to the following extract from the report of the proceedings of the house of representatives, published in your issue of Friday last:

"Mr. Benson then took occasion to roast Mr. Donnelly pretty severely. 'You all remember,' he said, 'the senatorial fight we have recently had. I wish to say right here that that fight was shamefully mixed up in the organization of this house. One of the candidates for senator, who received, by the way, the fewest votes, was strong enough to elect the speaker of this house. He had the cheek to demand the control of the organization of the house, and he inflicted on us a burden greater than that borne by old Sinbad. That man costs this state $100 a day every day of this session. He had a lot of friends who had nothing to do this winter, and he put a good many of them in here to keep them from starving to death.'"

And in the Minneapolis Tribune of the same date I find the following report of the same speech:

"There was a certain candidate for the United States Senate who controlled votes enough to decide the speakership contest, and he had cheek enough to demand to control every appointive office from the doorkeeper up. He laid it down on the speaker and made his life a burden in order to secure jobs for his friends, and ever since the session began that man has been costing the state over $100 per day. It has gone far enough, and the house must put a stop to it and relieve the speaker of any obligation in the matter."

I am astounded at this charge. I cannot understand why Mr. Benson, with whom I have always been on friendly terms, should make such an attack upon me. There is not one word of truth in his statement. Instead of my being the cause of an outlay to the state of $100 per day, which would be equivalent to twenty clerks at $5 per day each, I have not been the recipient of a single appointment of any kind at the hands of the speaker. He promised me a single clerkship, for a friend, but the pressure upon him was so great, from the members of the house, that he was forced to write me that he could not appoint the party I asked for. Neither did I make his life a burden to him with applications for others. I remember but one instance of the kind. I joined with Mr. Quam and some other members in saying a good word for my friend Mr. Feig, of Kandiyohi County, who was made clerk of the railroad committee; but I was not vain enough to suppose that my recommendation secured his appointment; for the speaker was under personal obligations to Mr. Feig and to Mr. Quam, and other members, friends of Feig, for support in his contest, and the appointment was made, undoubtedly, for that reason. There is not a single clerk, doorkeeper, page or any other officer of the house who was appointed by Speaker Graves at my request, or on my recommendation, or as a favor to me. I do not even know who the gentlemen are who fill these places. I recommended none of them; they are not, so far as I am aware, friends of mine; nor do they reside in my county. They were every one of them appointed, as I suppose, at the solicitation of the members of the house. I have not crossed the threshold of the house or the senate since the day Mr. Washburn was elected United States senator, and I am surprised that no member of the house had the manliness to rise and defend me from such an unfounded and unjustifiable attack. They knew just how those appointments had been made and they knew I had nothing to do with them.

If it be true that I had been the means of electing Col. Graves speaker I might justly have demanded, according to the rules which govern politics, some share of the patronage for my "starving friends," as Mr. Benson calls them. I asked for but one place and did not get it. I do not charge Col. Graves with bad faith; I believe he did the best he could; but it is a little hard, when I was denied the only position I applied for, to be charged by this venerable blatherskite with having controlled every appointment from doorkeeper up.

Mr. Benson did not at one time think it so grave a crime for me to possess some influence in determining the election of the speaker. He came to me himself on his arrival in St. Paul and offered, if I would make him speaker, to throw Washburn overboard, and vote for me or Sabin or the devil. I regret that the latter gentleman was not put in nomination; I believe he would have taken the prize beyond any question. His business capacity could not be doubted; his wealth is great, for he owns "the kingdoms of the earth;" and no man would charge him with watering his stock or depriving his settlers of cheap fuel. Benson at the same time gave me a copy of the Farm, Stock and Home newspaper, of Minneapolis, which denounced Mr. Washburn roundly, and he desired me to have the article copied; and he himself declaimed against Washburn in the fiercest terms, and expressed his belief that he (Washburn) should be prosecuted for violating the laws of the state and sent to prison; and then—he voted for him.

But why, Mr. Editor, have I been subjected to this scandalous attack? What was my offense? I was living quietly at home, an amused spectator, with the rest of my fellow citizens, of the entertaining antics and tantrums of this apostle of economy, who seems to possess all the disabilities of old age without the reverence and respect which usually accompany it. But even the quiet of my own fireside afforded me no protection. Without a word of warning or provocation he suddenly discharged himself upon me, hoofs, ears, tail and all, and covered me with an avalanche of tumultuous asininity, vocal with sonorious brayings.

Did he attack me because he thought it would be grateful to the railroad presidents, who are the supreme arbiters of political destiny in this unfortunate commonwealth? He has a son, I understand, who is a railroad engineer. Does he propose to base his offspring's promotion upon his superserviceable zeal in kicking me? Abraham was ready to sacrifice his son to save his people. It may be that Jared is ready to sacrifice his people to save his son. He has perhaps read that

> "God had sent the tangled ram
> To save the child of Abraham," and he mistook me for another "tangled ram" that could be sacrificed, with a few faggots, on the altar of corporations. Was it for this he declared the other day, that those corporations were the geese that had laid the golden eggs which the people of Minnesota had been sucking for lo, these many years? The producers, on the other hand, have an idea that they have been the silly geese who have laid the golden eggs of wealth, and that the corporations represented those cunning little perfumed and variegated animals, who have, in the last ten years, sucked $100,000,000 out of them to pay interest on watered bonds and stock, and left the farmers blistered with mortgages and lousy with debts. And now this economist praises the gigantic robbers of a million people, and attacks a lot of poor devils who are holding petty places to keep body and soul together. This is "saving at the spigot and wasting at the bung;" this is to

> "Compound for sins you are inclined to,
> By damning those you have no mind to."

It is dangerous, Mr. Editor, to open graves and dig up the dead. I read once a weird German story of a scientist who found in a stone quarry a gigantic fossil egg of the Silurian era. The egg was intact; the ancient mud had quietly enfolded it. The thought occurred to the philosopher that the germ of life might still exist within it, and that he would hatch out the inhabitant of the antediluvian world and see what he looked like. He did so; and when the shell at length broke there came forth a huge nondescript, a beast of entire and extravagant proportions, an unspeakable monster, who ravaged the whole country side. Mr. Editor, the town of Anoka made a warm nest last fall in the damp sawdust of Washburn's saw mill; they revived the past, they rehabilitated antiquity, and the gyosticutis is now rampaging through the halls of legislation, tearing up the earth with his horns and filling the air with his heels, making age contemptible and gray hairs an everlasting mockery.

In the name of humanity I protest. This thing must stop. And if it does not stop, at least I, as an unoffending private citizen, must be left alone Or, if these extravagant lies are to be swished over me from the bushy tails of members, I shall ask, as a matter of fair dealing, that a day be set apart for the purpose, and that I be given a hearing even when the attack is made, and at the very moment of its utterance.

Ignatius Donnelly.

The necessity of experimenting with soils to ascertain what elements they require is well shown by tests at the Kentucky experiment station. An illustrated report of these forms a feature of the American Agriculturist for March. The pictures show the entire crop of corn stalks and grain grown on one-tenth acre plats manured with nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash alone, and in the various combinations. The striking result is that on potash alone, the yield was at the rate of eighty bushels of ears per acre and nearly three tons of fodder, whereas on a complete fertilizer furnishing all three elements, the yield of grain and fodder was much less, and it was still less where the other elements were applied, showing conclusively that the great want of this particular soil was potash. Similar experiments at the Massachusetts experiment station which have been continued for several years show the same result, and are also finely illustrated.

RED RIVER VALLEY.

Importance of the Bill for Drainage of Some Portions of That Rich Wheat Region.

A Comparatively Small Appropriation Asked From the State When the Benefits are Considered.

Pioneer Press.

The principal features of the bill relating to the drainage of the Red River Valley are both interesting and important to the public at the present time. The subject is one of rare scientific interest, requiring for its right treatment the best skill of topographical and hydraulic engineers. Its grave, practical import is such that the continuation of the present disastrous state of affairs or the proper and economical cure of it will affect deeply and vitally for bad or good the very foundations of the prosperity of a great and naturally rich section, and indirectly will affect the entire State of Minnesota.

The bill is now in course of preparation by the Red River Valley delegation, and will be presented to the legislature on Tuesday or Wednesday. The expenditure suggested is surprisingly small, considering the relief to be obtained and the profitable results which will speedily follow. It is estimated that from $100,000 to $150,000, carefully expended upon dredging and other work, will remove from the entire eastern slopes of the valley the cloud which now hovers over it, thwarting its growth and curtailing its wheat products.

Although the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad company owns but about one-eighth of the land at present injuriously affected by floods, owing to a lack of drainage, that corporation has offered to contribute $25,000 if the state will appropriate $100,000 for the benefit of the settlers in the suffering districts, thus making a good round working sum of $125,000, which will probably prove ample for the purpose.

The exact cause of the disastrous overflows at certain seasons in that portion of the eastern half of the valley between Moorhead and St. Vincent, and a large portion between the line of the Manitoba Railroad and the Red River of the North, is not fully known. The Mississippi River has an average fall from its source to its mouth of not more than six inches to the mile. The fall in the Red River and in all that eastern half of the valley fed by streams which are tributary to it is more than double as much, or more than a foot to the mile. But instead of emptying into the river through proper and restricted channels, after the manner of well-behaved creeks, many of these streams have been dammed up, either by the work of beavers or some curious operation of natural forces; so that during the melting of the snows and at other flood times their waters overflow the surrounding country and prove ruinous to the crops of the farmers. It is estimated that in this way at least one-third of this great, rich valley has been rendered either unsusceptible to cultivation or that it is rendered very slow and backward, producing a wheat which "looks like chicken feed."

It is for the purpose of restoring these streams to their natural channels that it is suggested the state make a sufficient appropriation; and to thus reclaim one of the most valuable tracts of land in Minnesota. Surely it would seem that the sum mentioned could not be diverted to any broader purpose of usefulness.

The Red River Valley now produces one-half of all the wheat grown in the state. By the suggested method of opening up the small streams upon the eastern slopes the present output of the cereal could quickly be augmented fully 50 per cent.

The streams on the west side of the valley have never had their channels blocked to a great enough extent to ruin the crops except in one instance near Fargo, some years ago. The people there built a ditch, which successfully drained a large area of country and removed the difficulty.

Dirty Dick of Dublin.

The Irish World.

Richard Pigott, the latest witness proproduced by the London Times and the Tory Government against Parnell, is the son of John Pigott, who for years was book-keeper of the Dublin Nation, with Charles Gavan Duffy and Thomas Davis. Richard, like his father, became a book-keeper and held that position on the Dublin Irishman, which paper he purchased in 1865 from P. J. Smyth. That was a year of troubles in Ireland, and upon the seizure of the Irish People, the Irishman, which was allowed to run on by the government, became a very paying property, and Pigott at once entered upon a career of extravagance and dissipation which soon steeped him in debt.

Then the unscrupulous character of his nature developed itself. He resorted to every species of blackmailing and borrowing. Every politician had to put up or be unscrupulously blackguarded, and every Irish nationalist who was thought to have had any money to spare was levied upon for loans. Isaac Butt, Joseph Biggar, Mitchell Henry, Patrick Egan were all marked for contributions to keep the paper alive, and all advanced loans from time to time—not one of which was ever returned. Not only that, but nearly all money that went into his hand appeared to drop out of sight as if it had instantly melted.

From 1870 to 1871 he carried on this system till amongst a large circle of the nationalists he was never spoken of but as "Dirty Dick." All this time he ran two red hot revolutionary papers, the Irishman and Flag of Ireland, and succeed in deluding a large number of Irishmen who had not the opportunity of knowing his character. He was a deadly enemy of the modern agitators, as he called them, and made unscrupulous war upon the late A. M. Sullivan and others, whom he denounced as poltroons and traitors. Mr. A. M. Sullivan, one of the purest men Ireland has ever produced, this same Pigott libeled as an informer!

Pigott's boldest attempt at blackmailing was when he wrote to Patrick Egan, then treasurer of the land league in Paris, stating that he had been offered by two agents of Dublin castle a sum of five hundred pounds to publish a set of fictitious land league accounts showing that the league funds been misappropriated. He said in this letter he believed that the statement was an outrageous libel from beginning to end. But unless Egan would pay him three hundred pounds before the following Monday he would close with the castle people and publish the accounts. We publish in full the manly reply of Patrick Egan:

Paris, 11th March, 1881.

Sir:—As I understand your letter, which reached me to-day, it is a threat that unless I forward you money by Monday next you will close with the government and in consideration of a sum of five hundred pounds publish for them certain documents which you believe to be false against the land league. Under any circumstances I have no power to so apply any of the funds of the league, but even if I had the power I would not under such circumstances act upon it. Whenever any such accusations are made we will know how to defend ourselves. Yours truly,

Signed Patrick Egan.

Richard Pigott.

A short time after this Mr. Egan, with the consent of Mr. Parnell, purchased the papers from Pigott, started from same office, merging the two papers in one, which was christened United Ireland, and induced William O'Brien to take the charge of it. Pigott whined and craved to be taken on the staff of the new paper, but both Parnell and Egan knew his character too well. When his attempts in that direction failed he commenced a series of attacks both against Parnell and Egan, especially the latter, culminating in the London Times articles, "Parnellism and Crime," and in the now famous forged letters.

At the very time he was attempting to blackmail Egan in Paris he was carrying on a correspondence with "Buckshott" Forster, the Coercion Chief secretary of Ireland, and it will probably develope in the course of the trial that he has been on the secret service pay-roll of Dublin castle for years, as an evidence of the kind of the witnesses upon whom the Times depends to smirch the good name of the Irish leaders.

It has been charged—and the accusation fits with "Dirty Dick's" infamous character—that this man has been carrying on a trade in indecent photographs and resorting to other practices of the vilest description. All for money! For money he has gone to Dublin Castle and there sold whatever he knew he could invent against Irish patriots. For money he has resorted to forgeries which figure in the Parnell Commission; and for money he will resort to perjuries to sustain those forgeries and aid the avowed enemies of his race to destroy Parnell and, if possible, blast the last hope of Ireland's brave but unfortunate sons!

Stirring Them Up.

The Western Rural.

The little article that we recently published advocating legislation to compel insurance companies to pay the face value of their policies has stirred up the insurance brigade in great shape. Our article was reproduced in several papers, and has therefore received considerable circulation in insurance circles, with the result of bringing down upon our head the wrath of the gentlemen who promise one thing for a valuable consideration and then give something else, as pleases them, when the time comes for them honestly to redeem their promise. One insurance agent said to us: "The law you propose would bankrupt every insurance company in Chicago." We know it; but that is not our fault nor the fault of justice. The companies have received pap for insuring property to the value of millions of dollars, and if they were compelled to fulfil their contracts and pay the enormous insurance they have placed upon property, because, under the present system, the insurer can get about all the promises of insurance he chooses to pay for, it would drive them to the wall. The Rural desires to see these people compelled to pay what they agree to pay, and what they induce the insurer to pay for, whenever a total loss occurs. The result of such a system would be that a building would be insured for only what it was worth, at a reasonable rate.

Taking the constituency of this journal, the farmers, and they have paid millions of dollars into the coffers of the insurance trust, for which they have never received a cent; and they who have met with losses have found that they paid for one thing and got something else. The fact that insurance rates are extortionate, and the entire insurance system is unjust, was the cause of bringing into existence the farmers' insurance companies; and the reports from those companies that come to our notice, only show the more plainly the character of the robbery that is practiced by the old line insurance companies. The public demands protection from the greed of insurance men, and no legislature now sitting should adjourn without giving the protection called for.

The Law About Hiring Help.

American Agriculturist.

A verbal agreement between the employer and employe is, however, in most cases just as good in law as a written one, providing it can be proved. The principal exception is in the case of a contract which is not to be performed within a year from the time it is made. The laws of most states say that a contract which is not to be performed within a year cannot be enforced unless the contract, or a memorandum of it, is in writing signed by the party to be charged. If a farmer hires a man to work for him for one year, the time to commence the day the contract is made, or possibly the next day, the agreement need not necessarily be in writing. But if the time is to commence say a week or a month hence, it is not binding on either party if it is only a verbal bargain. If such a contract is verbal only, the farmer can discharge his help at any time, and the help can quit at any time without being liable for damages, and generally without loss of pay up to the time of leaving. It should be remembered that a minor is not bound by any contract of this nature, whether verbal or in writing; and while the employer, if of age, will be obliged to carry out the provisions of his agreement, the employe, if a minor, may break it at any time, leave his master's employment, and collect what he can prove his services were worth up to the time of leaving. This is so although he looked as if he were of age, or even if he falsely represented himself to be such.

There are certain things that will justify a farmer in discharging his help, and certain things which will justify a man in leaving the service of his employer before the time is out and without liability for damages. The man may be discharged if he disobeys the lawful and proper orders of his employer, if his conduct is immoral, if he uses insulting language to his employer or his family, if he is frequently drunk, if he habitually neglects his work, if he is insubordinate or defrauds his employer; also for committing wanton injury to his employer's property, or for incompetence by reason of physical or mental defects not discernible when he was hired. It has been held that if the man is intoxicated when he comes to commence his work, the farmer need not take him. In case the man is discharged for cause, he is entitled to what his services were worth up to the time of his discharge.

Of course, if the conduct of the farmer is such that the man is justified in leaving, he can recover his wages for the time he has actually worked. Among the causes which will justify the man in leaving are any improper conduct on the part of his employer, such as an assault on him, insufficient food or lodging, compelling him to do unlawful work, such as unnecessary work on Sunday (necessary farm work, such as taking care of live stock, is not unlawful), the prevalence of an epidemic which renders it dangerous to remain, and any acts of the farmer prejudicial to the morals of the workman or to his safety, health or reasonable comfort. Habitual blasphemy on the part of either has been held a good reason for the other dissolving the relations existing between them, unless both are addicted to the same bad habit. Sickness of the man for a lengthened period—in one case two weeks—releases both parties from the contract. The employer is not bound to wait unreasonably for the restoration of the employe's health, and the necessities of the employer are regarded as a measure of what is reasonable. Slight grounds for discharge or for leaving are not regarded as sufficient, and the burden of proof is on him who sets up the grounds to show that they are valid and sufficient. When a laborer has once quit his employer's service, the employer is not obliged to take him back again, although the man changes his mind and wants to go to work again. It has been held that when a man has good cause for leaving and throwing up his contract, and does not do so at the time, he waives and condones the cause and cannot afterward rely on it as a good cause for quitting his place.

A Forger's Confession.

Irish World.

One of the main objects of the London Times in printing the now famous forgery, purporting to be a genuine letter of Mr. Parnell, has been revealed by Macdonald, the Times manager, in his evidence a few days ago before the Commission. The forgery first appeared in the Times on the day of the second reading in the House of Commons of the present Coercion Act. Macdonald tells why that date was fixed on for publication. He thought that "before the second reading of the Crimes bill would be a fitting time to show to the country the character of the men making themselves prominent in Irish affairs." In other words the Times printed its forgeries on that day in order to influence votes in the House in favor of coercion. There were at that particular juncture in British politics not a few Liberals undecided as to which course to adopt—whether they should cast their lot with Gladstone and Home Rule or take the side of Toryism with Chamberlain and Hartington. The publication at such a moment in the leading journal of England of a letter, the authenticity of which was vouched for by that journal, appearing to show the Irish leader in the character of an approver of and inciter to assassination, was, it needs hardly to be said, very likely to induce waverers to decide at once for coercion, which no doubt many of them did.

Thus the forgers accomplished their first purpose. It can scarcely be doubted that they knew the letter to be a forgery. Macdonald says in his evidence that he "never asked how the letter was got." He never took the trouble to ascertain whether it was a villainous fabrication or not. It was enough for him and his employers that it augured a chance of striking a blow at the Irish cause. To lie about that cause and its leaders is no new policy for the Times. For a century past every Irish National movement and every Irish leader have been foully and falsely assailed in the columns of that paper. It slandered and vilified O'Connell and denounced the Irish bishops and priests of his day as "surpliced ruffians." Its hate of Ireland and her people is as deadly and bitter now as fifty years ago, when it gloated over what it boasted of as the result of British rule—that the Irish were "gone with a vengeance."

There is, however, good reason for believing that the power of the Times to injure Ireland has nearly passed away. It has been found out. The eyes of the English people are being opened to its real character and objects. Before the tribunal selected by itself and its friends, the Government, its infamies are being laid bare to the world. What the world's verdict will be is not difficult to predict.

Judge R. J. Montague took his departure for the saintly city last night, upon legal business. He intends to take in a little legislature on the side.

I. K. Messelt is down from Winger this week and dropped in to encourage us with a bit of the needful. I. K. is one of the solid business men of the east side.

Mrs. Carter, mother of Jack Carter, died last Friday night of paralysis at the age of 70 years. For a number of years she has been a resident of this city and leaves many warm friends.

Coroner Shepard went to East Grand Forks on Thursday last to hold an inquest on the body of Mary Oleson, the girl who took laudanum with suicidal intent. The verdict leaves the impression that she was successful. The remains were interred in Grand Forks by her former companions in sin.

On Monday morning John McLean received a letter from Senator Sampson to the effect that he would not introduce the bonding bill. Mr. Sampson's letter is a complete surprise to his friends, after he had given his word to introduce the bill within ten or twelve days. Personally, Mr. Sampson is not and has not been in favor of bonding the city, and he has said so frankly. When the subject of bonding first came up, Mr. Sampson expressed himself as emphatically opposed to it, but said that unless the majority of the tax payers of the city favored it, he should oppose it. After public meetings had been held and the subject discussed from every standpoint until thoroughly understood, our citizens decided to offer bonds to induce some railroad to build to the city. The bill was drawn up and sent to Mr. Sampson with a petition signed by a large majority of the tax payers, which showed conclusively the wish of the people in the matter. Not fully satisfied with this, Mr. Sampson came up and held a public meeting to discuss the question. At this meeting Mr. Sampson was fully convinced that the majority did desire the passage of the bonding bill. Mr. Sampson urged that the bill, if introduced at once, would interfere with the passage of the drainage bill, as "if Crookston attempted to pass a bonding bill the Manitoba Company would get mad and defeat the drainage bill." He said if we would give him ten or twelve days to take care of the drainage bill he would then introduce and pass the bonding bill. This point was considered and his promise to the city was as solemn and binding as though given under bonds for its performance, and no honorable man could go back on it. In his letter to M. G. Peterson, published in our last issue, Mr. Sampson says: "I consider myself a servant of the people whom I represent," which is another implied promise to do as the people request. The question is one that affects only the city of Crookston, and by a large majority they request of their servant the passage of this bill, and on his own understanding and acknowledgement of his relation to that people, as well as his promise to them to do so, it is clearly his duty to pass that bill, and not to set up his individual opinion and act upon that, to the utter disregard of the wishes of the majority. There is no disposition on the part of the people to get into an unpleasant controversy with Mr. Sampson. They simply wish him to discharge his duty toward them, as he himself has defined it, and it is clearly the part of wisdom for him to do it. Mr. Sampson is very careful and conservative as it is right he should do, but it is presumption on his part to set up his individual opinion against the majority, and to say what they need they shall not have. It is well for him to look after their interests zealously, as he has done, to prevent "woodchucks," but he should learn to distinguish the difference between a bill with no petition to back it, and one with a petition representing over three-fourths of the taxable property of the city. Mr. Sampson is in honor bound to support this bill, and cannot honorably go back on it even if he wants to.

Uncle John Ross, who has been confined to his bed for the past few weeks with a severe attack of pleurisy, arose from his bed last week—and straightway there was a calm. The severe cold weather let up, the snow rapidly melted away, and when Uncle John appeared on the streets on Monday, all nature smiled a bright welcome and the air was as mild and balmy as June. He says, however, we are liable to have a spell 'o weather "when the moon gets full." If fair Luna could only be persuaded not to "get full" this month, perhaps we could avoid the storm. Some have the idea that by getting full also, thus being in direct sympathy with the moon, the effect would be neutralized.

A summing up of the amounts asked for various appropriations shows a total of over $2,000,000, much of which is for additions to the various state institutions. In the present condition of the state treasury it behooves our legislators to use a great deal of care in the matter of appropriations, and the state had far better go without these additional buildings for two years than to plunge herself deeper in debt for things that we can manage to live without. There are certain objects that if supplied will create a revenue sufficient, and more than sufficient to pay for themselves, among which is the appropriation for drainage purposes. This is a small amount and should be allowed in place of an addition to some public building from which the state will derive no returns.

See our premium coupon elsewhere in this issue whereby all JOURAAL readers who have paid in advance may receive $1.50 for 25 cents. The regular price for the book, "Robert Elsmere," has been $1.50 until John B. Alden secured the right to publish it, when he at once put the price down to 50 cents, and now offers the book to JOURNAL readers at 25 cents. All who avil themselves of this offer should notify THE JOURNAL office so that proper credit may be given, as the coupon is good for nothing unless its terms are fully complied with. So many have availed themselves of this offer that we are encouraged to try another book on the same terms, which offer will be made next week. If our efforts in this line are appreciated we shall from time to time offer choice books on the same terms. Remember, our paid up subscribers are not limited to one book, but may secure every copy, thus obtaining in a very short time a choice library at a very small cost. Remember that all you have to do is to COMPLY STRICTLY with the terms.

Did you attend school Monday night? If not, you missed seeing a lot of pretty school lassies and roguish lads acting for all the world like they used to did in ye olden time, for, be it known, it was only a "play school" and the actors sober and sedate matrons and men. And the teacher? Well, if he was not a daisy on wheels, even if ye cruel committee man did cut him off in his youth, while yet in the full tide of his usefulness. And the pathetic address that he gave to his beloved pupils! T'was enough to draw tears from the eyes of the most stoic Indian who ever smiled. This was rather an impromptu school—gotten up on the spur of the moment or else the big boys would have driven the lawn mower over those brush patches on their classical countenances. Which was the prettiest girl? Oh, no you don't catch us there. We don't care to cultivate a skating rink on our cranium just yet, but we will risk the observation that none were more prettier nor more graceful than "the twins," none more snivelling than "the sniveller," none smarter than "the smart one," none more dense than the "ignorant one," none more frugal than the one who lugged her dinner basket about wherever she went that none could jayhawk her noontide meal. The songs of Miss Minnie Ayers elicited deserved encomiums, the only fault being found with their brevity. The Geography class showed great progress. In response to the question: "What is known of the region of country west of the Mississippi!" one bright Miss replied: "Very little. But Dick, Hussy says years ago P. J. LaChapelle explored that vast domain and found bears, wolves and elk in abundance and Judge Spendley fighting mosquitoes and blessing his life. A few years later John McLean and D. Jacobus appeared and began to issue bonds. The inhabitants subsisted on catfish and faith—mostly catfish." We would like to have had Robert Stanton's photo as he told about the boy who stood on the burning deck. His attitude and motions were very striking, eliciting hearty applause, and what Johnnie Hart don't know about cows would not interest the average mind. Johnnie spoiled a good actor when he went into the mercantile business. We find it utterly impossible to give a good description of that school, and we shall not try, for at only 25 cents a ticket everybody should have seen it.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—President Harrison to-day sent to the senate his official cabinet. It contains all the names that were generally agreed upon yesterday as the men who would fill the positions. The list is as follows and is generally regarded as a strong one:

Secretary of State—James G. Blaine, of Maine.

Secretary of the Treasury—William Windom, of Minnesota.

Secretary of War—Redfield Proctor, of Vermont.

Secretary of the Navy—Benjamin F. Tracy, of New York.

Secretary of the Interior.—John W. Noble, of Missouri.

Kristofer Janson, the celebrated Norwegian poet and speaker, will deliver a speech at Ericsson's Hall, next Sunday at 3 o'clock p. m. At first it was his intention to speak here Saturday evening, March 9th., but the adverse running of trains render it impossble for him to reach here in time. It is to be hoped that all Scandinavians will avail themselves of this opportunity to listen to one of the greatest among their countrymen on this side of the Atlantic. The subject he will treat upon is: "Skal vi tro lavere om Gud end vi staar selv?"——Shall we think of our God as beneath ourselves?—Price of admission, 50 cent.

We have only one note and mortgage we make a loan the day applied for, charge no bonus, and make interest payable at our office in Crookston.

STEENERSON & McMANUS.

The Sevatson interest bill passed the House on Saturday, by a vote of 55 to 35, our representative, Mr. Roberts, voting in the negative with his usual good judgment. The bill provides for the reduction of the legal rate of interest from 10 per cent. to 8 with severe penalties. The effect of this bill in this country would be to exclude capital—drive it to Dakota—and foreclose hundreds of mortgages, past due and coming due in the fall. We believe in getting as low a rate of interest as possible but this bill is faulty in that it does not oblige capitalists to loan their money. If they would amend so as to oblige capitalists to loan their money at 8 per cent., making the penalty capital punishment then we might regard the bill with favor.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.

STEENERSON & McMANUS.

The discussion upon the usury bill brings out clearly one point which operates against the interests of this new country, i. e. that some things that fit older settled portions of the state are not adapted to the needs of a new and growing community. In older communities money can be had at 8 per cent., plenty of it, and it makes no difference to them what the legal rate is, but up here the case is different and the bill, if passed, would have a tendency to drive out capital necessary to build up the country. The same principle is true in relation to the Duluth & Winnipeg road. The progress of the Northwest depends upon that road, while the balance of the state is not so vitally interested, and yet, on the principle that whatever helps any portion of the state is a benefit to the state as a whole, every representative ought to feel a personal interest, whether his own particular locality is as vitally benefitted or not. He should be broad enough to represent the whole state and public spirited enough to care for all interests, from the least to the greatest.

Seed Wheat.

The undersigned has a quantity of wheat but slightly affected by the blight or frost or whatever it was which he considers good for seed if any of it is. Work to Be Resumed at Once—Forty Miles to the Mississippi.

Duluth Weekly News.

H. P. Haskell, secretary of the Duluth & Winnipeg, was interviewed last Tuesday night at Hotel St. Louis. He said that the present mild weather would allow Foley Bros to resume work on the remaining forty miles to be traversed before the Mississippi is reached. This, he thinks can be done by the middle of summer. The company is very anxious to build this forty miles, as a big lumber business will be ready for the road at once.

Mr. Haskell was asked if there was any truth to the rumor current yesterday to the effect that the Winnipeg road had bought the Duluth Short line between here and Thomson. He answered negatively, and added that the same rumor when circulated last fall grew out of a very trivial remark of one of the Winnipeggers concerning the decreasing business of the Duluth road and the possible chance that the latter would want to sell its short line.

It was Mr. Haskell's opinion that the grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg would not be forfeited, as anyone who thought the matter over for five minutes could come to no other conclusion than one savoring the extension of the grant. The Duluth & Winnipeg had received only one extension of its grant, while every other railroad in the state had received from three to fifteen extensions. The road could not be built without the grant, for the grant was the only thing which would float the bonds.

Norman County Herald: The people of Red Lake Falls want Polk County divided in such a way that their town will be the County seat of a new county. Fisher people are in full sympathy with those of Red Lake Falls in wishing a division and a new County seat but want it at Fisher. When Fosston, Fertile, McIntosh and several other localities are heard from and their wishes in the matter, our sister county will be badly cut up. In the meantime the people of Crookston are losing no sleep over the matter.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
Adjutant General's Office.
St. Paul, Feb. 20, 1889.

Believing that it is not generally understood throughout the state that by Section 7, Chapter 12, General Statutes of 1878, it is made the duty of the Adjutant General to prosecute all pension claims against the government without cost to the claimant, the undersigned desires to make it clear to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, their widows and orphans and dependent parents, now resident of this state, that every honest and meritorious claim against the United States government for pension, bounty or back pay, arising out of the war for the Union, will be cheerfully received and promptly and vigorously prosecuted without money and without price.

The necessary blanks will be sent upon application to any part of the state. Letters will be promptly answered and all information cheerfully given.

COLD WATER A CURE.

A Learned Physician Promulgates a New and Surprising Fever Cure.

Only Seven Per Cent. Deaths Where the Cold Bath is Used in Typhoid

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—Not since Pasteur startled the medical world with his theories regarding the cure of hydrophobia has any event created so much discussion among the medical fraternity of this city as the article just published by Dr. Simon Barnett, the attending physician of the Manhattan General Hospital, in which he demonstrates, apparently with conclusiveness, that cold baths may be regarded as almost a sure cure for typhoid fever. The idea is not a new one abroad, having been quietly practiced for some time in the German military hospitals, but the array of facts and figures which Dr. Barnett brings to the support of his position is calculated to arouse general interest among physicians throughout this country and Canada. The startling, and it might be said appalling, mortality that attends the disease, the average ranging from fifty to sixty per cent., is generally recognized, but in elarborate statistical tables, which have been secured by the author, is is shown that in a total of nineteen thousand cases the mortality under the cold water system of treatment was reduced to seven per cent. There was a conference of prominent physicians in this city last night to discuss the article, and it was agreed that the remarkable results which had been attained demanded the most earnest consideration and attention of the profession.

The Binding Twin Trust to be Tabooed by Farmers.

Pioneer Press: Mason City Iowa, March 1.—The farmers of this and adjoining states are quietly organizing to resist the demand of the binding twine trust. The price of twine has increased within four years from 12 to 18 cents per pound. Agents have been notified by the manufactures that the price for the coming season will be 20 cents. To obviate paying this price leading farmers are soliciting signatures to a pledge that none of them will use twine if the high price is maintained, but will stack their grain without binding.

THE MAY BUG.

A burst of shrill laughter rang through the courtyard. A girl's face looked from the barred window of a cell.

It was a beautiful face, the parted lips were like the petals of a young rose! But the laughter was the wild, terrible laughter of the mad.

"I have it!" she screamed, exultantly.

"What?" asked the keeper.

The keeper was made of gross material. He had a loose skin, full of large, dirty pores like an old sponge—a thick brutal nose, pierced by narrow nostrils and a wide mouth—red-lipped and cruel. His eyes were small, hard, brilliant and singularly opaque. They looked like little bits of blue china. The girl's eyes were blue also, but with the tender blue of turquoise, yet full of clear, liquid, changing lights like the sapphire. She was pale, delicate, exquisite! A beautiful casket bereft of its precious treasure—the mind.

"What?" asked the keeper.

"The May Bug!"

The keeper grinned and winked his blue china eyes. He had heard before of this May Bug—a chimerical insect which troubled him little. He was not a bad man—taking him altogether—a trifle over-fond of turning the cold shower on the poor wretches intrusted to his tender care—not averse to using a certain stout leather strap in the interest and welfare of the more refractory—and he often exercised a little judicious economy at their expense in setting before his family the bread intended for the patients. Not a nerve lodged amidst the bone and brawn of this gigantic body. The most frantic struggles of the maniacs filled him with amusement. The most furious ravings brought a smile to his great lips. Oh, he was very good natured!

He approached the window. "where is it?" he asked, curiously and idly.

"It is here! here!" cried the girl, full of excitement. And she pointed to a hole in the wall of her cell.

A hole in the wall!

The excellent keeper was annoyed. He frowned blackly. He entered the cell and struck the woman on the face.

"See that thou makest no more holes in the wall!" he said roughly.

She trembled violently. Her eyes darted strange lights, but she said nothing. She did not even cry out, although the blow was a cruel one. She only watched, with jealous, angry eyes, as the keeper thrust three fingers into the hole. There was no insect there. He stood ruminating a moment, after the manner of beasts. Presently he began slowly to scratch his head. The woman made a sudden movement toward him.

"Give it to me!" she cried imperatively. "It is mine! I will have it! You shall not put it in your head! Give it to me! give it to me! !"

"Hush, fool!" he said, and he raised his hand threateningly. She cowered away from him and, crouching in the corner of the cell, began to cry bitterly, wiping her eyes now and then on a strand of the long yellow, hair that lay on her shoulders. As the keeper opened the door to go out a ray of sunlight fell on his rough hair which curled thickly over his temples. The girl bounded suddenly after him like a tiger.

"It is there!" she shrieked, shrilly. "Ah! the pretty thing! Do not crush it!" for the man raised his hand involuntarily to the spot she indicated with her outstretched fingers, then, recollecting himself, he turned on her fiercely, and advancing deliberately, as she retreated from him, until he had driven her again to her corner, he stood a moment quelling her with the colk power of his eyes. It was an instant's silent struggle! The force of reason prevailed. She sank shuddering—conquered—in the angle of the smooth stone wall.

"Good!" he said gruffly. "And no more of holes in the wall. Dost thou hear? I shall look to-morrow and see if the hole grows larger in the night. To-morrow—aye! and again the next day and the next!" He thust his ugly face down to hers. She shivered and shrank nearer the wall. "Good" he said again. His tone was fatherly. It was pleasant to him to see his power. Ah! they feared him—these poor, helpless, hopeless, miserable creatures.

He left the cell, turning his face toward her as he closed the door. A last, trembling ray from the setting sun died on the matted hair above his left temple. A tremor shook the delicate body huddled in the corner, More than two hours passed, and still the girl crouched there. Her little white fingers worked nervously. Her eyes were never still. Her brow was drawn in deep, painful lines, as though the poor disordered brain beneath made some great physical effort to form thought. And so the darkness fell.

With morning came the keeper.

"Is there a hole in the wall?" He laughed maliciously. "Then we can have no bread to-day," and the excellent man passed on well satisfied. Had he not inflicted punishment when punishment was due? And, moreover, his family lived on the bread which cost him nothing.

June passed and July—long Summer days when the sun lay in the courtyard and there was always a warm corner in cell No. 30, where the beautiful insane girl was kept. The keeper liked to go there and lounge in the afternoons. She was afraid of him, and he found her terror diverting. It pleased him to see her standing with downcast eyes sending out those strange gleams from under the deep-fringed lids—with heaving breast from which the breath labored heavily—with trembling fingers locked so tightly together that the little nails grew white with the cruel pressure. It was a tribute to his power. A more observant person might have seen something to suspect—might have analyzed this fear and find in it a trace of danger—might have declared this attitude to be that of a person detected—or in fear of detection—in wrong-doing. But the keeper, good man, was not one to analyze. He examined all the cells daily. It may be that his examination was sometimes clumsy. But why should he suspect this child? Or, suspecting, why should he fear her? A slender, white-faced, cowering thing who could only pick a hole in the wall to hunt for an imaginary May Bug! A poor, weak imbecile creature who shook at the sound of his voice!

There were times when the girl did not shrink from him, but, instead, greeted him with her charming, childish smile. Then, were he in a good humor, he would talk with her. Truly a strange duet, this, between the man without intellect and the woman without reason. An interesting study of chiaro-oscuro, where the ideal subtlety of the maniac stood out intensely against the brutish, unimaginative stolidity of the keeper. Often his rough voice, like the bellowing of a bull, frightened her, but she listened to him with her adorable smile, and only when he turned his eyes away did that strange expression leap into her face, that greedy, jealous light burn in the eyes which, stealthily, she raised to the ragged clumps of hair which lay upon his temples. Once he surprised the glance. He laughed loudly, derisively. He had not altogether forgotten the May Bug.

"Aha!" he laughed, "dost seek thy treasure! Oh! oh! the fool! the idiot! the lunatic! Oh! I have it! Here!" tapping his forehead suggestively, and blinking his blue china eyes, "here! I keep it safely!"

The girl made a sudden uncontrollable movement as if she would spring upon him, and the strange look deepened in her eyes—the look of passionate desire now mingled with rage and hatred of the man who kept from her what she coveted. The keeper was enchanted at the success of his pleasantry. Still laughing, he rose, stretched his legs comfortably, and lounged over to the window. Outside the court lay flooded in the sunlight, a gray fowl minced across the flagging, pecking at the tufts of grass which forced themselves between the stones of the walk. The flowers in the square garden plot in the centre of the court gave up their sweetness languidly to the caresses of the warm air. The keeper gazed stolidly through the grating. His hard little eyes rested unblinkingly on a great metal ball on which the dazzing sunlight sported bravely.

Softly she came—softly, lightly! With cheeks aflame with the strength of her desire! With gleaming sapphire eyes! With quivering nostrils and parted lips through which the breath fluttered tremulously! Softly she came, with her lithe young body swaying, and her little, trembling hands before her! In an instant her dainty fingers had twisted herself in the man's rough hair, jerked the greated head backward, and began a furious scratching in the grizzled mop over the temple. The keeper flung himself around with an imprecation and sent the woman spinning against the wall.

"Insolence!" he roared, rushing upon her. "Dost thou dare, indeed? In the name of reason—of which thou knowest naught—take this—and this!"

He struck her a crushing blow with his clinched fist. She smothered a cry and crouched, still with that dangerous look in her eyes—crouched as if to spring at his great brutal throat.

"Have a care!" he muttered, threateningly rushing upon her again. Slowly her expression changed. The corners of her pretty mouth trembled. She put out one delicate hand with a depre[c]ating gesture. She smiled—at first faintly. Then, with more assurance, and moving gently forward, she looked up, shyly, into his scowling face as one who would implore forgiveness. It was the cunning of the maniac, but it touched the vanity of the keeper. How ready she was to confess his power! How eager to sue his pardon! He was mollified.

"There!" said he, "no more of thy stupid tricks, fool!" And he went away.

The summer waned. No. 30 seemed dull and sombre. She slept little, grew weak and thin, and, from out the pallor of her face, her great blue eyes shone unnaturally. She was silent for long hours at a time. She no longer talked of the lost May Bug. She looked like a student who seeks to solve great problems, and who loses his health and strength in long vigils. She left her bed at night and strange sounds were heard in her cell.

"She sleeps too warm, perhaps," said the keeper; "give her a cooling shower!"

And this merry fellow bade them hold her under the icy douche until she fell chilled and exhausted to the ground. This occurred twice. After that there were no more nocturnal disturbances. The keeper chuckled. "I know their tricks," said he.

The girl became very quiet and circumspect. She began to manifest interest in objects about her. She was strangely observant and occupied herself for hours in examining the scanty appointments of her cell. Once the keeper fancied he saw her fumbling with the bars of her grated window. He went in and examined the place. He found nothing wrong. She watched him with stealthy eyes. When he turned she spoke to him pleasantly. She was always gay with now. The brave man never detected a false note in the clear, crystal tones of her laughter—his ear, like his eye, made no fine distinctions. After this episode, however, she was more prudent and gave no cause for suspicion. She was thoughtful—oh! very thoughtful at times—preoccupied but patient, good-tempered and obedient. Soon she began to talk rationally, and answered all questions with sense and judgment. One day, in the late Fall, the keeper summoned the doctor.

"If Monsieur the Doctor would call and see No. 30, who seems quite recovered?"

Monsieur the Doctor called. But Monsieur the doctor, was, as it happened, an old and skillful practitioner, who for many years had studied every form of insanity under the light of his own interests. Monsieur the Doctor had no intention of speedily ridding the asylum of any patient who materially increased his income.

"H'm!" said the doctor, "wait a while longer! It is best to be prudent!"

"The girl is harmless?"

"Perfectly so!"

"She can be given a little liberty?"

"Assuredly, yes! She is quite harmless!" and the worthy physician smiled and rubbed his hands softly together, and thinking of the clear, quiet eyes which met his own so steadily, the cool hand which rested obediently in his, the girl's normal, composed manner, repeated to himself. "Oh, certainly! Quite harmless!"

It was after this that the keeper made himself easy. The examination of cell No. 30 was no longer considered necessary. No. 30 herself grew paler and ate but little. This could scarcely be said to distress the keeper, whose family profited thereby. Winter came, and from her grated window the poor young creature watched the year grow gray. A few withered leaves fluttered in through the casement and she treasured them—poor dead things! They were redolent of the free life beyond cruel bars.

The swallows in the courtyard complained shrilly of hunger, and beneath the eaves they huddled, pluming themselves and giving piteous little cries. She would liked to have fed them, but the family of the keeper could use even the crumbs, and, harshly, he forbade her to waste good bread. She was now very thin and her eyes were brilliant with fever—that consuming mental fever which burns in the eyes of all great toilers who fancy they see near them the desired end for which they have striven long and patiently.

At last, on a cold, black night, a light figure crept between the loosened bars of a cell window and dropped noiselessly to the ground. Swift and straight it took its way across the court, never swerving, never hesitating in spite of the impenetrable darkness; for in the slow elaboration of this mighty idea, all had been calculated—recalculated—with the triple patience which comes of madness, of solitude and of imprisonment. Veiled in the darkness, No. 30 took her silent way past the square garden-plot. She moved with the noiselessness and certainty of a cat. She never stopped, but as she moved rapidly she lifted her face to the free night air as if she loved it and had longed for it. Her face was like a moonbeam against the shadows of the night. Its peculiar pallor seemed to radiate a faint, unearthly light. Almost as if she were conscious of this, she bent her head and quickly covered her face with her long white hair. She passed on in the shadow of the asylum walls and paused before his keeper's quarters. Here there was a small door. Well she knew it! Long and paitently had she waited to hear from some one through which door she must pass to accomplish her grand purpose. She stood here listening for an instant, then thrust into the keyhole something she held tightly in her hand. There was a faint clicking sound; then a sharp sqeak, which might have been made by a mouse, and a little rectangle of darkness opened before her.

Silence!

The clouds gathered thickly over the mournful walls of the asylum. A wild night wind sobbed in the gaunt arms of the leafless trees in the courtyard. A single star trembled for an instant in the black mass of moving clouds and was gone.

Suddenly a woman's sharp cry smote the night air. It seemed to come from the keeper's quarters, but one could scarcely tell whence it began, for it was instantly caught up by the startled creatures in the asylum and passed on from one to another with varying and terrible modulations of fear, of anger, of insensate joy! The night was soon hideous with their cries! The panic spread! From every cell came curses, shrieks, groans, wailings and sobbings; the sickening sound of human bodies beating against the invincible bars which held them captive; despairing cries mingled with snatches of obscene song. The sonourous voice of some frenzied orator delivering his theories; the heartbreaking prayers of maniacs begging to be delivered from imaginary tortures, all the horrors of the bestial scene, indescribable as it is awful, enacted in these living hells where men and women live the lives of caged brutes, forsaken by reason, and almost semingly, by God.

The doors opened, and the director of the asylum made his apperance among the keepers. His face was pale. This was unusually bad, he thought, even for the violent wards. Awakened from a deep sleep by the horrible uproar, he had feared a general riot among the patients. Suddenly a woman appeared at the end of the passage. She was in her night robe. She held a candle in her hand, and two children clung to her skirts.

"Here, sir! Here! And Oh! come quickly!"

The doctor moved toward her. He recognized the wife of the keeper, Desambre.

"Well?" he questioned, briefly.

The woman began a mournful litany, broken by fitful sobbing. Alas! She could hardly tell! She had been sleeping! There had been something—she knew not what! Her husband had bounded up in the bed, had given a heavy groan, had fallen back on his pillow! Then a dark thing had sprung from the bed by her side, glided across the room down the stairs, perhaps—who knows. She had been unable to rouse her good man! Would not the director come to him? Alas! Alas! And again, alas!

The director followed the woman to a room in the keeper's quarters.

On the bed lay the body of the man Desambre. The mouth was open. The teeth had closed upon the tongue.

"Alas! alas!" wailed the woman.

The director examined the body. A small brad had been driven through the left temple, obliquely into the skull. There was no blood. The clumps of grizzled hair nearly concealed the wound. The nail was a slender thing without a head, but it had been driven home with deadly force. A fine scratch extended to the eyebrow. It looked as if something had been picked from the wound and drawn sharply across the knotty forehead.

"The man is dead—quite dead," said the director, gravely.

He left the woman howling over the corpse, and notified the keepers.

"We will make the rounds immediately."

The procession of lights moving up and down the corridors was a grand festival for the maniacs. They had grown quieter under the forcible measures employed by the keepers, and now they gave fierce cries of pleasure. Only a few were enraged, and a few were sullen.

Number 30 was asleep.

The director bent over her bed with the lamp in his hand.

The light awakened her. She rubbed her eyes with one little hand. Then she smiled her adorable smile. The beautiful eyes were clear and serene—her face was joyous. She pushed back her glorious hair and raised herself a little from the pillow. Then she held out the other hand. It was tightly closed, as if over something of great value. Slowly she extended the fingers that the director might see what she held. The little pink palm was empty. But she saw something there She was quite satisfied.

"I have it," she whispered triumphantly.

The director patted her hand kindly.

"You are dreaming!"

He gave a cursory glance at the grating as she passed. He touched the bars at the window.

"Nothing wrong here!" said this wise and experienced man. "The girl has slept well!"—From the French of J. H. Rosny.

Current Pleasantries.

A man convinced (by his wife) against his will is of the same opinion still—mighty still.

Prepare for Spring

Now is the time to attend to your personal condition in preparation for the change to spring season. If you have not "wintered well," if you are tired out from overwork, if your blood has become impure from close confinement in badly ventilated offices or shops, you should take Hood's Sarsaparilla at once. It will purify and vitalize your blood, create a good appetite, and give your whole system tone and strength.

"For a first-class spring medicine my wife and I think very highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla. We both took it last spring. It did us a great deal of good and we felt better through the hot weather than ever before. It cured my wife of sick headache, from which she has suffered a great deal, and relieved me of a dizzy, tired feeling. I think every one ought to take something to purify the blood before the hot weather comes on, and we shall certainly take Hood's Sarsaparilla this spring." J. H. PEARCE, Supt. Granite Railway Co., Concord, N. H.

A Tale of a Telegram.

"Minnie!" The voice was very stern, and quickly a head covered with masses of sort brown hair was raised from a volume of music.

"What is it? Are you sick, Richie?" Minnie asked, anxiously, noticing the clouded brow.

"Yes; sick enough—at heart," he mentally added. "Come into the conservatory a few moments. It is terribly warm and close in here."

Minnie closed the book with a half-regretful expression, and said: "I have promised Charlie to sing this with him. But he can wait."

Taking Richie's arm she passed through the parlors, where were gathered a set of music-loving people, into the conservatory.

After seating his companion, Richard Grafton, with his eyes dark and flashing, said: Minnie, I am heartily sick of this flirtation between you and Lamar. He has been hanging over you the whole evening. This is more than human nature can stand."

"Man's nature yours in particular I think, if you will say it, will more clearly express the truth," Minnie replied, with provoking coolness.

"Well, my nature, if you please. I can not and will not, permit this to continue." Richard said, begining to pace up and down before her.

"Indeed! How will my would-be master prevent it?"

"How? Easily, by finding that fellow's brains, if he has any, and give them a little leaden pill."

Quickly the flushed face paled. Richard saw this, and asked, very significantly: "Minnie, how would you like to have a man's life in your hands? Indeed, two. I shall kill him, I fear; then losing you, life will be a burden, and I shall end my own misery speedily."

After delivering this all-conquering speech, as he intended it to be, Richard looked as it the deed was already commenced.

"For mercy's sake, hush! How can you talk thus? You ought to be ashamed to try and terrify me so, Richie! You will be tomorrow, when you are cooler, and possessed of your true senses."

"Well, Minnie you ought not to do it. It is positively cruel of you! Really, upon my word, it is! Torturing me by inches, keeping me on the rack crushing out my heart, indeed, my very life out! And you know, Minnie how wholly and entirely I love you! I would die to save you pain or sorrow, my darling; I would, indeed!"

Minnie was calm, quiet and decided now, and she answered, "Richie, your words are not very consistent; but no matter about that now. I want you to listen to me, and believe what I say. First of all, that unless you conquer this fearful jealousy you will make yourself and every one connected with you miserable. Unless you have perfect confidence in me you can never call me yours. Again, the only thing that draws Charley and me together is music. We are both devoted to it. His voice and mine are admirably adapted, and we love to sing together."

"I wish to heaven I could sing!" interrupted Richard. "I'd give you enough. You should have it for a breakfast, and dinner, and supper. Yes, and I would sandwich it in between times whenever I'd find a chance. Besides, I'd put you to sleep to waken you with it. I will start now and try to find somebody, and I'll give half my worldly goods to them to cultivate my voice. Some wonderful profess-sir, or, better still, profess-her; and may be she will, if not succeeding in the cultivation of my voice, find my heart worth it, and end in comforting me for your treatment. Now, Minnie, now will you like this? Now I think of it, I know just the dearest, sweetest, prettiest and altogether loveliest little music teacher in the world. I really do."

Minnie's grave face had to relax into merry dimples at Richie's pun and implied threat. After a moment she replied. "Never mind about your voice, Richie; and as to your heart's culture, I prefer attending to that myself. But listen; I have not finished. I am a little mortified that you have not a higher estimation of my character. Think you that I would flirt with, or try to win a man from the side of the girl to whom he is engaged? You know well enough, Charley won May Revere's love, and her promise to be his, six months ago.

"Now if we, Charley and I had any affection for each other, why did we not find it out before I knew you, or he May? No, Richie, I would not give your heart, when it is all right, for a dozen Charlies, or for any other I know. You may be sure of this; and be sure too, of another thing—you must end these continued doubts. This scene must never again be repeated. Now come; let us go back. It is not polite to absent ourselves so long."

"Bless your dear pure heart, love! Forgive me. Yes, I will try and drive forth this demon that gets hold of me. Now we are all right again!"

And smiling happily now he passed, with his love, back through the room, and placed her where he had taken her.

With wonderful control of feeling he listened to the song that followed—notwithstanding Charley Lamar's whole soul was in his voice, and beamed in his handsome eyes, as he watched Minnie; indeed, another heart grew anxious. May Revere began to wish she could sing, too.

Little May pouted considerably on their way home that night, Charley, however, soon brought her round all right, by whispering lots of loving words, and vowing his own dear sweetheart was the loveliest of all women in the world to him. And so the affair ended for the time.

The next few weeks both young men were busily engaged in their respective occupations. Early in the spring Richard Grafton was sent by the firm by which he was employed on an extensive business tour through the country. Ere leaving, he had won from Minnie the promise of becoming his soon after his return. So he bade good-by to his love, feeling very hopeful and happy. Regularly came to him letters which cheered and comforted the lonely hours of absence.

Of course other letters besides Minnie's were received, and with occasionally such remarks as this:

"You had better hasten home, my dear fellow, or a certain musical chap will comfort your girl so thoroughly for your absence that she may grow careless of your coming at all!"

If Richie felt a pang of uneasiness, it was soon dispelled by the next letter from Minnie.

"I will not doubt her. She is true."

Glad tidings came to Richie—a letter bidding his immediate return. Quickly to Minnie was sent this, as he thought, joyful news, in two days after the receipt of which he promised to be with her. On his arrival at B——, he found it necessary to delay over night.

Thinking Minnie would be eagerly watching his coming, he stepped into the telegraph office. The operator was an old friend. After a warm greeting, Richard took up a pencil, and, writing the following handed it to him:

MISS MINNIE IRVING, No. — Felston Street, W——. Delayed over night. Shall come by the morning train.

His friend read this, and then instead of sending it, turned, and, with a puzzled look, said: "Richard, I thought all was over between you and that young lady?"

"Heaven forbid!" Richard answered. "But what on earth made you think so?"

"I have good cause for thinking so. Richard, she is not worthy your love; and I have good reason for thinking that young lady may even now be in this city, and possibly, is already the wife of another I am going against the rules of the office when I show you this, received last night."

Taking from a hook a slip of paper, he pointed to this dispatch:

TO MR. CHARLES LAMAR, —— House. I'll follow thee. (Signed) MINNIE.

Richard read and sank into a chair. The perspiration gathered in great cold drops on his forehead.

"Bear up, Dick! After awhile you will thank heaven that she belongs to another man, no dout."

"Don't—don't talk so, Phil! Oh, how I loved that girl, and had such perfect faith in her. What shall I do? Go mad, I fear!"

With a deep groan Richard's head sank on the table beside him.

Phil passed his arm round him a moment, hardly knowing what to say; then he asked. "Is it possible for any mistake?"

"No, no!" groaned Richard. "And to think of their coming here to the same house they know I always come! Oh, she never got my last letter! Confound these mails. No dependence can be placed in them nowdays!"

"Females, I should think you had better say," Phil muttered with a rueful shake of his head. "Now, Dick, be a man. Go home; find some other girl—truer, if not prettier; win her heart and marry her as soon as possible."

"Poor little May! she is suffering too! She was perfectly devoted to that rascal! I've a mind—yes, by Jove, I will—yes, if I repent it all my life—go right off and marry her!"

"That's right, old fellow! You will not repent. They are all about alike; only some, of course, much better than others. For instance, this little May, I've no doubt is a jewel!"

The next train carried Richard, with a copy of the dispatch, to W——, and right to May's side. She and Charley had had a severe scene three days before—Minnie, of course, the cause. She, too, had heard of Charley's trip to B——, and knew that Minnie and Charley's sister had gone that morning.

Richard found her in tears, and when he produced the dreadful dispatch all seemed perfectly plain.

They had undoubtedly eloped.

Richard tried his best to comfort the poor little thing. Not being very successful at this he tried to arouse her pride. At this he succeeded better.

"May, don't let them say we are breaking our hearts; let us try and comfort each other. I do believe we will grow to love each other in time. What say you?"

Well, Richard won May's promise to go with him to the minister and be quietly married.

Poor child! she spent the night in tears, and he was calling down maledictions on the false Minnie's head.

Soon after Richard Grafton and May Revere presented themselves before the reverend man, who thought they were just the sorriest-looking couple he had ever seen. However, he proceeded with his business.

May's friend, who stood by her side, passed her arm around the trembling girl, as the minister said: "If any one here knows any good cause why these two should not be joined——"

He had not finished the question, when the door was hastily thrown open, and Charley Lamar rushed in, exclaiming: "Certainly, sir, I do. This is my promised wife!"

In an instant May dropped into his arms, sobbing hysterically.

Turning, Charley said to the astonished clergyman. "This will only be a postponement of short duration. I trust, sir, this young lady will come to you again, but in my charge next time."

When outside of the house he said to Richard: "Your confounded jealousy has nearly ruined the life of four people. Minnie and myself were to sing at a concert in B—— last night; so we all went, hoping to give you a happy surprise, to the hotel where Minnie said you always stopped. I thought we four—you and Minne, sister and I—would have a merry time, and this foolish child was to be of our party; but she was in the dumps and would not see me."

"But that telegram from Minnie, saying she would follow you?" interrupted Richard.

"No such telegram was sent. It was the name of the song she was to sing. 'I'll Follow Thee,' and if you had not been so blinded you would have remembered it as her best song. Often she has sung it to you."

All was plain enough then; and bitterly Richard repented his folly. It was all right between Charley and May; but with poor Richard it was not so easy to win back Minnie. She would not see him. In reply to his repeated notes, suing forgiveness, only came the words, "Forgiven, but no longer trusted."

"Not at home to his frequent calls. And so the affair remained until Richard Grafton got pretty well smashed up by a railroad collision. When the report came to Minnie that her lover was dying, she flew to his side, and dropping down beside his couch, cried, "Richie, dear, speak to me! Don't die, Richie! Live for my sake! Indeed, I shall die, too, if you do!"

Suffering as he was, Richie put forth his hand and smiled. Of course he lived. Who would not under such circumstances?

And now I've only to tell that a double wedding is announced for an early date, and the young people of my story take the leading parts. I mean the girls, of course, and the young men follow them.

No Corsets for Girls

I can point out many ladies of my acquaintance who have never worn corsets, and who neither look limp nor stoop; in fact, I have been particularly struck with the erectness of their carriage. My mother, why is near sixty years of age, is much straighter in the back and shoulders than the most of the young ladies whom I know. She never leans back in a chair, and does not appear to need any artificial support whatever. She has never worn corsets for an hour. My opinion is that when a person commences to wear corsets she is far more inclined to stoop than before, and as to the figure, the one without corsets is far more graceful and pleasing to the eye than the hard, bony-looking structure we so often meet. I am very glad the outcry against this article of dress is becoming so decided, and I hope much good will be the result. To put children and growing girls into corsets is simply outrageous. All the young muscles, so delicate and beautiful, should have full play to develop healthily as Nature intends them, and not be crushed and confined as they must be even by the most innocent description of corsets. The more room these growing muscles have, the less deformity there will be, for nature in her healthy development never deforms. Let us allow natural growth, and we shall have healthy and vigorous bodies. English Correspondent.

A Tale of a Rat.

"I was much interested in a sight that I saw down in the cellar last night," said a patient in one of the hospitals of this city a day or two ago to a fellow patient who was confined to his bed "and I'll tell you what it was:

"As I went into the old unoccupied room I heard something squealing. Being in my stocking feet, I walked in without making any noise, and by the light that was burning dimly I saw a rat standing against a water-pail with something that looked like a pretty thick black cord in its mouth. To my utter surprise I soon discovered that what appeared to be a cord in the rats mouth was really the tail of another rat. After much tugging and amid much squealing (a great deal of which came from the inside of the pail) the outside rat dragged another over the edge of the vessel. It had rescued one of its fellows from a watery grave. At this moment some one noisily entered the room and the rats scampered away. I looked in the pail, which was about two-thirds filled with water, and discovered that the rat whose life was saved had been tempted over the edge by a large crust of bread which had been thrown there."—New York Sun.

A Cold Weather-Pit.

A very interesting freak of the weather was exhibited recently in northern New England. The line of 10 degrees below zero formed nearly a circle about one hundred miles in diameter, inclosing the central parts of Vermont and New Hampshire. Surrounding this was a rapid upward slope of the temperatures while, within a distance of about fifteen miles on all sides of the circle except the north, rose 10 degrees higher. The form of the isotherm of zero thus appeared as a loop extending down out of Canada. Fifteen or twenty miles farther away from the cold center there was another isothermal loop which showed that the temperature within that distance had risen 10 degrees more. After that the temperature slope was quite gradual, the line of 20 degrees lying some distance south of New York. It is not a pleasant experience to get into one of these atmospheric ice pits, but the Vermonters are used to that sort of thing.—New York Sun.

Handsome Indains.

The Dakotas are said to furnish fine specimens of Indian manhood. The older ones of both sexes are of a dark copper color; the younger ones are much lighter, and the young women are quiet comely of clear complexion and good color, but often much overlaid with red and yellow ocher. The young buck's dress consists of beaded mocassins and breeches fringed with buckskin, a government shirt, coat and hat, though many go bareheaded. The hair is coarse and black, and is generally worn by both sexes in two long braids down the back, each braid usually decorated with beads and wampum.

THE FARM.

Observe the Condition of Calves.

Feed the calves carefully, says Orange Judd Farmer. With cheap corn the young things stand a good chance to be "crowded" this winter. "Black leg" is claiming victims already, to our knowledge, right in mid-winter, strange as it may seem. It is always safe to give the calves access to sulphur and saltpetre at all seasons of the year, if they are fed well, and no other plan pays. Better lose a light percentage of good ones by disease than to lose heavily on all by neglect in their growth. The farmer who studies the details of his business, however, will have very slight losses from the disease suggested, if he makes use of the knowledge accessible to him.

Feeding Horses.

We have always been taught on the farm never to feed a horse when too warm or immediately after a hard day's work, says a writer in the Nebraska Farmer, but it occurs to me that there is much more to be said in horse feeding than this. Physiology tells us a man needs rest for a time after eating that the gastric juice may have time to flow. If we eat a hearty meal and at once go to work or exercise violently, the gastric juice does not flow properly and the food is not rightly digested. The same is true of the horse. Instead of being so extremely careful in feeding a horse at the end of a journey or at the close of his day's work when he has time, take more care and do not feed with grain just previous to a sharp drive or other violent exercise. There is a great danger to horses from over feeding in this way, which is not fully appreciated. It is not so great with farmers' horses whose work is more gradual and gives more time for digestion.

About Pigs.

Our improved modern pigs are the result of the infusion of Chinese and Siamese blood with the pigs of England and Ireland of 100 years ago. The Chester Whites and Poland Chinas of this country are not thoroughbred in the strict sense of the term, that is they do not always reproduce their ancestors. The Poland China breed is the best one for the practical farmer. In my experience in breeding swine I find it best to select good, clean-cut sows, with plenty of bone and constitution, better a little coarse in bone than too fine bred, and breed them to finely bred Berkshire, Essex or Yorkshire boars. The pigs will combine the fineness of the boar with the constitution of the sows. The farmer cannot afford to breed thoroughbreds for pork. The pigs bring most net profit when sold at eight or ten months old.

It is a great mistake to assume that pigs do not require good treatment. They as well repay warm and clean quarters, with pure water to drink, as any other animal. I teach my pigs to drink when two or three weeks old. It is very important to warm the milk up to the temperature of 95° to 100°, and to feed at least three times a day. If the feed is given but once a day the pigs are so hungry that they drink too fast, and indigestion results. It is best to feed four or five times a day.

I have largely substituted crushed oats and oilcake for bran. I commence to feed clover as soon as the pigs are weaned. It is important not to confine young pigs too closely but let them run sufficient for exercise. Many of the diseases of swine result from too close confinement, too much filth and improper food. I can tell by the looks of the meat when the hog has been properly fed. Quality depends largely upon feed. Our finest bred hogs, with improper food, would soon degenerate to the condition of scrubs.—Edward Burnett, before New York Institute.

Agricultural Notes.

Culbroot in cabbages is prevented by making the seed bed on new ground or ground not used for cabbage for several years.

All breeding and young growing stock should be fed very sparingly on corn; a mixed variety of feed for them is much the best.

Cows at pasture after the first severe frost want something more than damaged grass. Grain will come in play as well as in Midwinter.

The sheep shed should be open upon the south side to admit the sunlight and to allow of the escape of the effuvia from the manure under them, but it should be protected by a board fence high enough to shelter them from the wind when lying down.

Many breeders are engaged on the problem of creating a new sheep, says a writer in the New York Tribune, and it will be satisfactorily elucidated in due time. Breeding for wool and mutton can be combined as well as breeding fowls for weight and quality of carcass and quantity of eggs, which have been so much improved in the last few years.

The old-fashioned practice of wintering calves at the straw stack, with only an occasional feed of cornstalks or hay, is wasteful. Young stock, well fed, will show more gain for their feed than when older. We do not believe in feeding straw mainly for any stock. If it must be fed, however, let something that has its full growth be put on such fare as subjects its owner to least loss.

Horse manure heats rapidly, and even in the very coldest weather the heap outside the stable door will be found warm enough to melt the snow that falls on it. It is rich in ammonia, especially if the horse has been fed grain. If the manure is left in the stable, and the latter is unventilated, there is not only waste of ammonia but the horse's health is injured. Many horses are made blind from wastage of ammonia in their stables.

Heavier carcasses and these forced into prime condition at the earliest possible age, and covered with more pounds of wool, will prove a surer road out of present depressions than will be found in convention resolutions, be they ever so pertinent, or defences against foreign competition, even though placed at figures dictated by the most sanguine advocates of high tariff.

Calves are good milkers for themsevles, but they do not milk for the good of the cow. A skilful milker after the calf has done its best get a little. This is the "stripping," and the richest milk the cow secretes. Leave this in the bag, and the cow begins to dry off. The first milk of a new milch cow is good for nothing except to feed the calf. Yet few calves need what a good, well-fed cow will secrete. Yet all this should be milked out clean.

Mr. Douglas, inventor of the Douglas mixture, gives in Poultry Yard the following formula, which he considers an improvement upon the famous mixture: Two ounces sulphate of iron, half ounce diluted sulphuric acid, put in a jug, stirred with a piece of wood, after which hot water is added to dissolve, the whole being stirred until dissolved; when cold put into a quart bottle or jug and fill up with water. Dose, a teaspoonful to a quart of water.

There is more or less dust in all hay, and this if taken into the lungs is very injurious to horses fed on it. Clover hay and that of timothy cut in the bloom are especially liable to be dusty, and often give horses the heaves when fed on either of these. Slightly wetting the hay will prevent this injury. The better way is to cut the hay, slightly moisten it, and throw on it a little corn and oats ground together, taking care not to give more than will be eaten clean at each feed. Between meals the rack may be filled with fresh straw, which the horse will pick over, and which may then be used for bedding.

There can be no sort of question that much of the attainable profits from sheep husbandry in the United States have been relegated through neglect of the mutton possibilities within reach of a majority of flock-owners. Remoteness from markets, with few exceptions, can no longer be urged for exclusive attention to wool.

A Photographer's Experience.

We were in one of the wildest spots on the mountains, a seemingly endless field of ledge and bowlder all around, snow mountains and rocky peaks only in the panorama, all signs of valley or glen, tree or river far below. I had a moment to reflect on what I was beholding, and carefully adjusting the glass again on those rare creatures, closely watched them. Our leader crawled up to my side, and as the quarry showed signs of alarm I attempted to take a picture, but I was now so excited that I took a slide out of one plate-holder before putting the cap on, and that ruined piece of glass now lies among the rocks to amuse the conies and ptarmigan, while the slide which I had placed on the camera was whirled far away by the strong wind. Even so experienced a hunter as my companion lost his head as the big-horn were trotting away, and exclaimed: "Take them quick!" Then, as they stopped once more and looked at us, he called himself bad names, saying: "I might have known they would stop again, and that there was no need of haste." But lo! what did those sheep do but turn around and walk deliberately toward us, until they were within about one hundred feet. We were fairly trembling with excitement, and I first took off the cap without pulling the slide. When I made this blunder they were all facing us, standing on granite pedestals a little elevated above the general level, and in line with the broad snow-field on the cliffs back of them, which showed them in relief with startling clearness. The next moment I succeeded in capturing the picture, and then the animals decided to trot off, and we saw them no more. Hunters talk of the excitement which a novice experiences when he shoots at his first buck, but I could have shot those three big-horn without being one-half as nervous as when trying to photograph them.—Scribner's Magazine.

And He Still Has Hope

"I have been shipwrecked, been baked in a railroad accident and fired out of a foundry window by a boiler explosion. I was shot in the neck at Gettysburg, suffered starvation in Libby prison, fell overboard from a transport off Charleston, and left four of my fingers in the mouth of a shark. I had my right arm broken in two places in a New York riot, and stood on a barrel with a halter around my neck in a Southern town at the outbreak of the great rebellion from sunrise to sunset. I was buried under the ruins of a building in San Francisco during an earthquake and dug out after fifty hours imprisonment. I have been shot st three times, twice by lunatics and once by a highwayman. I was buried two days by a gas explosion in a mine, narrowly escaped lynching last year in Arizona, through mistaken identity. And though I am over fifty, and have nearly lost the use of my right leg, have just had, as I understand, all my property, on which there was no insurance, destroyed by fire in a Western town; and the doctor in New York to whom I went last week for an examination assures me that I will soon be ridden from rheumatism; nevertheless," he added cheerfully, "while I undoubtedly have met some obstacles in the past, I still refuse to believe that luck is against me."—Daylighty Land.

A Peculiar People

Scottish American.

Among the many scattered remnants of nations in India there are few more interesting than the Beni-Israel of the Bombay tide. The Beni-Israel do not belong to the lost tribes, nor have they any mysterious connection with the Great Pyramid. Their own legends aver that centuries ago their forefathers, flying by sea from a country in the north, were shipwrecked near Kenery Island, and the survivors, seven families took refuge at Navgoan, homeless, penniless, among strangers, and without the books of their law. The date of this hegira is estimated from 1,600 to 2,000 years ago.

Since that date the little colony of fourteen souls has grown into a dispersed community of 10,000, not unlike the ordinary Konkan peasantry, but religiously observing the Jewish Sabbath and whatever they can remember of the Mosaical law. They have been hewers of wood and drawers of water to whatever king chanced to reign; but they are as much Hebrews to-day as they were two centuries before Christ.

Quite Like a Blizzard.

From the Washington Critic.

A member of Congress is just like a common, ordinary citizen in that one respect of going upon an occasional lark. A few days ago a distinguished member from beyond the Mississippi, having been absent from his boarding-house for several days and being in the act of recuperation from the absinthe, happened accidently to come in front of his wife as he was crossing the rotunda at the capitol. He stopped and with a rather sickly effort at humor looked in her face and said:

"It strikes me that I have seen you before."

"I beg your, pardon sir," said the madame, bowing and moving on; "you have the advantage. I do not know you."

"Well," remarked the astonished member, "this sets up for a mild winter, but if that wasn't a blizzard I'll be blowed."

Hans P. Berg, a jeweler residing at Kenyon, Minn., committed suicide by hanging himself in his room with a piece of twine. Despondency over the loss of his wife and child, who died recently, is said to have been the cause. He was about forty-five years of age, and in moderate circumstances.

A serious stabbing affair occurred at East Grand Forks, Minn. Henry Kesser, a brewery employe there, stabbed Chrappill Gravell, a farmer, in the region of the clavicle, the knife penetrating through a coon coat, inside coat, vest and three shirts, and scraping the bone. Gravell was also wounded in the hand. The quarrel ensued from a disputed right of way on the common thoroughfare. Kesser, after committing the deed, skipped across to his side of the Ruby and is still at large. The wounded man is in a dangerous condition.

CONGRESSIONAL.

MONDAY FEB. 25.

SENATE.—The friends of the Oklahoma bill are much discouraged at the situation. The action of the senate caucus this morning was not very encouraging. The indications are that Senator Butler intends to talk against time to prevent the passage of the bill if possible. Some of the supporters of the Southern election resolution are of the opinion that this is of paramount importance. It seems pretty certain that the Democrats intend to talk against time to defeat that measure also. Altogether, the prospect for any legislation is not very favorable.

The Sioux bill passed the senate to-day exactly as reported from the commissioner on Indian affairs. The bill, as stated at the time of the report, has been somewhat changed by the senate committee, the tribal patents being excluded from the terms of the bill. This exclusion seems likely to cause some trouble in the house, although conferrees, all of whom are opposed to tribal patents, may agree to it. The friends of the Indian Defense association in the house are bound to have things their way or let no bill pass, and tribal patents is one of their hobbies.

HOUSE.—The president to-day vetoed five private pension bills. The bills granting pensions to Squire Walter, Henry V. Bass, William Barnes and John J. Lockey were disapproved upon the ground that the death or disability of the soldier on account of which pension is sought was not due to his military service.

The extra session problem seems to be well settled. Few Republicans now believe that an extra session will be called before next September or October, though the weight of opinion is that one will be advisable in the fall. Two Republicans are now ill whose presence is necessary if the house is to be organized by the Republicans at once after the inauguration. They are Nutting, of New York and Laird of Nebraska. It was hinted that word had been sent by Gen. Harrison that under existing circumstances he felt an extrasession would be found unnecessary immediately after March 4 if the Republicans would assist in expediting imperative legislation. The gentlemen on the Republican side who would most likely know if any such message had been forwarded, remarked they had not been advised of any such communication from the president-elect.

TUESDAY FEB. 26.

SENATE.—In the senate the bill for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain of California (formerly register and receiver of the land office of California) for money paid by them for clerk hire, which was vetoed by the president, was reported back and passed over the veto by a vote of yeas 35, nays 8.

Senator Sabin's resolution relative to the discontinuance of certain land offices was passed to-day.

Senator Davis offered an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill increasing the amount appropriated for the support of the Medowakanton Sioux from $10,000 $32,000.

Senator Spooner introduced a bill to punish offenses committed at elections of representatives and delegates in congress. It provides a penalty of imprisonment for not less than one or more than fifteen years for any person who falsely registers or votes, obstructs any other person by threats, force or bribery from registering and voting, or bribes inspectors or other election officers to violate the state law. The bill contains other severe prohibitions against any practice calculated to improperly affect the right of a voter to register and cast his vote, including penalties for any mutilation or secretion of ballots, or other improper practice by the election of officers and the bringing of spirits into places of registration or voting.

The conferees have agreed on the general land bill. They agree to the repeal of the timber culture, desert land and pre-emption land laws and the substitution for all of these of the homestead land laws.

HOUSE.—Representative Glass, from the committee on agriculture, reported adversely the bills to punish dealing in futures in agricultural products and gambling transactions on articles of American farm industry. The committee is of opinion that the states have jurisdiction over such matters and not congress

The house non-concurred in the senate amendments to the Sioux bill and a committee of conference, composed of Messrs. Peel, Allen of Mississippi and Nelson, was appointed.

While the house was considering the deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. Sayers read a letter which Mr. Scott had received from Col. Lamont, stating that when he accepted the position of private secretary to the president he had a full knowledge of the pay attaching to it. He preferred not to be the beneficiary of retroactive legislation; and he therefore asked that the committee recede from its amendment appropriating $6,000 for his benefit. Mr. Sayers asked leave to strike out the amendment; but Mr. Hayes of Iowa objected. Afterward the bill was passed—the amendment being eliminated.

Representative Springer has introduced a bill providing for the admission of the territories of Idaho, Wyoming and Arizona as states.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 27.

SENATE.—The committee on privileges and elections has reported to the senate favorably the proposition of Mr. Hoar to offer a reward of $25,000 for the arrest of the person or persons who stole the poll books and ballot boxes at Plummerville, Ark., at the recent election.

The senate committee ordered that the Teller bill, to provide for the formation and admission into the union of Idaho and Wyoming, be favorably reported. Substitutes for them will be presented by the minority but the differences are immaterial.

HOUSE.—Representative Oates reported back the naturalization bill with a new section. This section creates in the state department at Washington a registration division for the registration of all the persons hereafter naturalized, and makes such registration essential to the validity of such naturalization.

The house committee on labor authorized a favorable report on a bill providing for the enforcement of the eight-hour law on government premises. The bill provides that all parties contracting for the performance of work on government premises shall agree that eight hours shall constitute a day's work.

The special house committee appointed to ascertain whether any unofficial matter had been introduced into the records of the War of the Rebellion submitted their report to the house. The unofficial matter alleged to have been introduced is a list of the staff officers known as Anderson's cavalry. In the opinion of the committee, this matter was not official and its insertion into the records was not improper, and it seems to have no other foundation than its appearance in the newspapers.

Mr. Oates' bill to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing in all cases wherever the state law allows or requires instructions to be given by the state judges has passed both houses, and Col. Oates says he has assurance that the president will sign it. It makes the written instructions a part of the record.

The house special committee to investigate the troubles incident to the Reading railroad strike in Pennsylvania in 1887, submitted a report. Mr. Anderson addressed himself to the preparation of the report proper, and Mr. Tillman to the remedies suggested to him in the course of the investigation. The two reports are very elaborate, covering over 100 closely printed pages. Mr. Tillman divides the remedies into state and national. The state exercising the taxing power and the political power, the report holds, can do much to prevent labor troubles. The national remedies are put under the following heads:

First—Prohibit interstate carriers engaging in mining or manufacturing.

Second—Prohibit strikes and lockouts on railroads.

Third—Prohibit the consolidation of parallel or competing lines.

Fourth—Abolish or temporarily suspend the duty on bituminous coal.

THURSDAY, FEB. 28.

SENATE.—The Senate Bill No. 2511, as amended by the house, seems likely to become the law in reference to public land entries. The conferrees of the senate reached an agreement to-day, and the conference report will be presented to the respective houses, tomorrow. Several of the minor house amendments were stricken out. The house amendment allowing persons who had made but not completed a previous homestead entry to make another was agreed to, and a homesteader, who by reason of sickness or a failure of crops, had been obliged to leave his land is allowed leave of absence without forfeiting any of his rights. The section fixing the price of lands lying within the limits of forfeited land grants at $1.25 per acre was agreed to. This reduces the price of double minimum lands. Other house amendments allowing a homestead settler who had not entered the maximum quantity of lands to fill out his entry of 160 acres was also agreed to. The conference committee on the land grant forfeiture bills came to a practical agreement. It was arranged to-day that the conference should report a disagreement to the two houses and ask instructions.

The senate committee on public buildings and grounds will certify to the district attorney of the District of Columbia Chie Clerk Thomas D. Fister, of the supervising architect's office, for prosecution for contempt of the senate. Fister refused to answer certain questions touching an alleged collection of funds for campaign purposes, made in violation of law. This will save the time of the senate when more important matters demand attention.

HOUSE.—In the house Mr. Anderson of Iowa submitted a conference report on the bill authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri river at Sioux City, Iowa. Agreed to.

The speaker having laid before the house the senate bill for the protection of salmon fisheries Alaska, Mr. Dunn offered an amendment directing the president to cause one or more United vessels to cruise in Behrings sea and other Alaskan waters, and seize all vessels found to be unlawfully engaged in seal hunting. Mr. Dunn explained that the sole object of the amendment was to enforce existing law. No less than 150 vessels were being fitted up to go to Behrings sea, and would cover the waters with unlawful seal hunters. The amendment was adopted and the bill passed.

The Indian appropriation bill as passed by the house makes no more extensive appropriations than are absolutely necessary to carry on the Indian service. No extraordinary sums are appropriated, except in the case of the Medawakanton Sioux in Minnesota. Twelve thousand dollars is appropriated for this band of Indians to be expended as the bill puts it as "$10,000 in the purchase in his judgment he may think best of such lands, agricultural implements, seeds, cattle, horses, food or clothing as may be deemed best in the case of each of these Indians or family thereof; $1,000 or so much thereof may be necessary to defray the expenses of expending the money in this paragraph appropriated; and $1,000 for the completion and furnishing of the schoolhouse for said Indians authorized by the act of June 20, 1888." The portion of the bill referring to the Sioux commision was stricken out, as it was thought best to let that tub stand on its own bottom. If the Sioux bill passes it will be provided for, and if not, no useless commission will be created.

FRIDAY, MARCH 1.

SENATE.—Senator Plump, presented a report from the conference committee on the forfeiture bill. In presenting it Mr. Plump said that the bill was in almost the precise shape in which it passed the senate with this qualification, that the conference bill contains a provision for the entry of lands under the homestead law only in favor of persons now settled on the lands to be forfeited. For the purpose of arrangement, the order of the sections had been changed, and there was a provision inserted requiring the attorney general to bring a suit to determine the question as to certain lands which had been first held by the land office to be the property of the Northern Pacific road, and had been afterward to be public land, and which had been sold by the Northern Pacific road. With these exceptions the bill was in the precise shape, for all essential purposes, as when it passed the senate. Senator Edmunds insisted that the report should be printed before consideration should be given, and it was informally laid aside.

HOUSE.—The house to-day passed with an amendment the bill raising the limit of cost on the Winona public building from $70,000 to $150,000. It took three days to get this done, and Mr. Wilson had finally to leave the matter in the hands of Allen of Michigan to secure its passage. The senate afterward concurred in the house amendment.

Mr. Hofman presented to the house conference report on the bill for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead law. The Statement accompanying the report explains that the bill will only prevent the further sale of any publil lands of the United States adapted to agriculture and provides that these shall be disposed of only under the homestead law. The bill further provides that pre-emption settlers whose claims have been heretofore initiated and are still subsisting may change their filing and entry to a homestead to be considered under that law. The right of location of soldiers' certificates is left as under existing law. The report was agreed to—yeas 143, nays 7.

On motion of Mr. Anderson of Iowa the house passed the joint resolution to promote commercial union with Canada. This resolution was introduced by Mr. Hitt and was reported unanimously from the committee on foreign affairs. It provides that whenever it shall be duly certified to the president that the government of Canada has declared a desire to establish commercial union with the United States, having a uniform revenue system, like internal taxes to be collected and like import duties to be imposed on articles brought into either country from other nations, with no duties upon trade between the United States and Canada, he shall appoint a committee to meet those who may be likewise designated to represent the government of Canada, to prepare a plan for the assimilation of the import duties and the internal revenue taxes of the two countries, and an equitable division of receipts, in a commercial union; and said commissioners shall report to the president, who shall lay the report before congress.

The vetoed Des Moines river lands bill was again brought up in the house. A motion to pass it over the veto failed of the necessary two thirds the vote standing yeas 147, nays 103.

Belated Americans.

Few people among the many millions scattered throughout the length and breadth of the Union would believe that there is a section of the United States, where the result of the Presidential election will not be known until July, 1889, eight months after the official returns are published to the world! Such is the fact, however. The settlers of St. Michaels, the Sea Islands, and those domiciled along the banks of the Lower Yukon will remain in uncertainty as to the outcome of the contest until after the midnight sun has come and gone during the midsummer of next year. Even the denizens of Kodiak and Ounalaska will have to wait patiently for the news until the end of March, there being no communication whatever between San Francisco and those settlements during the winter months. Verily, to bury one's self in these outlying portions of the national domain is exceedingly like living entirely out of the world.

An Honest Witness

Somerville Journal.

Charles Theodore Russell was examining a witness in a Cambridge court one day this week. The question was about the size of a certain hoof-print left by a horse in sandy soil.

"How large were the prints?" asked the learned counsel. "Were they as large as my hand?" holding up his hand for the witness to see.

"Oh, no," said the witness, honestly. "It was just an ordinary hoof."

Then Mr Russell had to suspend the examination while every body laughed.

An elder sister, who was talking to a small brother the other day about the evils of using slang, happened shortly afterward to use the word "dictator." "You shouldn't say Dick Tater," said the little purist, "you should say Richard Potato."

TABERNACLE PULPIT.

An Eloquent Sermon by Dr. Talmage on Things That are Mysteries.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb. 24.—The audience that crowded the immense auditorium of the Brooklyn Tabernacle and the adjoining lecture-room and parlors to-day, united in singing:

"Sun of my soul, thou Savior dear,
It is not night if thou be near."

Dr. Talmage preached on the subject, "Dark Sayings on a Harp." Text: xlix. Psalm of David, verse 4, "I will open my dark sayings on a harp."

The world is full of the inexplicable, the impassable, the unfathomable, the insurmountable. We can not go three steps in any direction without coming up against a hard wall of mystery, riddles, paradoxes, profundities, labyrinths, problems that we cannot solve, hieroglyphics that we cannot decipher, anagrams we can not spell out, sphinxes that will not speak. For that reason David in my text proposed to take up some of these somber and dark things and try to set them to music: "I will open my dark sayings on a harp."

So I look upon society and find people in unhappy conjunction of circumstances and they do not know what it means and they have a right to ask, Why is this? and Why is that? and I think I will be doing a good work by trying to explain some of these strange things and make you more content with your lot, and I shall only be answering questions that have often been asked me or that we have all asked ourselves, while I try to set these mysteries to music and open my dark sayings on a harp.

Interrogation the first. Why does God take out of this world those who are useful and whom we can not spare and leave alive and in good health so many who are only a nuisance or a positive injury to the world? I thought I would begin with the very toughest of all the seeming inscrutables. Many of the most useful men and women die at 30 or 40 years of age, while you often find useless people alive at 60 and 70 and 80. John Careless wrote to Bradford who was soon to be put to death, saying: "Why does God suffer me and such other caterpillars to live that can do nothing but consume the alms of the church and take away so many worthy workmen in the Lord's vineyard?" Similar questions are often asked. Here are two men. The one is a noble character and a Christian man; he chooses for lifetime companion one who has been tenderly reared and she is worthy of him and he is worthy of her; as merchant, or farmer, or professional man, or mechanic, or artist he toils to educate and rear his children: he is succeeding, but he has not yet established for his family a full competency; he seems absolutely indispensible to that household, but one day before he has paid off the mortgage on his house he is coming home through a strong northeast wind and a chill strikes through him and four days of pneumonia end his earthly career, and the wife and children go into a struggle for shelter and food. His next door-neighbor is a man who though strong and well, lets his wife support him; he is round at the grocery store or some general loafing place in the evenings while his wife sews; his boys are imitating his example and lounge and swagger and swear; all the use that man is in that house is to rave because the coffee is cold when he comes to a late breakfast, or to say cutting things about his wife's looks when he furnishes nothing for her wardrobe. The best thing that could happen to that family would be that man's funeral; but he declines to die; he lives on and on. So we have noticed that many of the useful are early cut off while the parasites of society have great vital tenacity.

I take up this dark saying on my harp and give three or four thrums on the string in the way of surmising and hopeful guess. Perhaps the useful man was taken out of the world, because he and his family were so constructed that they could not have endured some great prosperity that night have been just ahead and they altogether might have gone down in the vortex of worldliness which every year swallows up ten thousand households. And so he went while he was humble and consecrated, and they were by the severities of life kept close to Christ and fitted for usefulness here and high seats in heaven, and when they meet at last before the throne they will acknowledge that though the furnace was hot it purified them and prepared them for an eternal career of glory and reward for which no other kind of life could have fitted them. On the other hand, the useless man lived on to 50, or 60, or 70 years, because all the ease he ever can have he must have in this world, and you ought not, therefore, begrudge him his earthly longevity. In all the ages there has not a single loafer ever entered heaven. There is no place for him to hang around. Not in the temples, for they are full of the most vigorous, alert, and rapturous worship. Not on the river bank, for that is the place where the conquerors recline. Not in the gates, because there are multitudes entering, and we are told that at each of the twelve gates there is an angel, and that celestial guard would not allow the place to be blocked up with idlers. If the good and useful go early, rejoice for them that they have so soon got through with human life, which at best is a struggle. And if the useless and the bad stay, rejoice that they may be out in the world's fresh air a good many years before their final incarceration.

Interrogation the second: Why do so many good people have so much trouble, sickness, bankruptcy, persecution, the three black vultures sometimes putting their fierce beaks into one set of jangled nerves? I think now of a good friend I once had. He was a concentrated Christian man, an elder in the church, and as polished a Christian gentleman as ever walked Broadway. First his general health gave out and he hobbled around on a cane, an old man at 40. After a while, paralysis struck him. Having by poor health been compelled suddenly to quit business, he lost what property he had. Then his beautiful daughter died. Then a son became hopelessly demented. Another son, splendid of mind and commanding of presence, resolved that he would take care of his father's household, but under the swoop of yellow fever at Fernandina, Fla., he suddenly expired. So you know good men and women who have had enough troubles you think, to crush fifty people. No worldly philosopher could take such a trouble and set it to music, or play it on violin or flute or dulcimer or sackbut, but I dare to open that dark saying on a gospel harp.

You wonder that very consecrated people have trouble? Did you ever know any very consecrated man or woman who had not had great trouble? Never. It was through their troubles sanctified that they were made very good. If you find anywhere in this city a man who has now and always has had perfect health, and never lost a child, and has always been popular and never had business struggle or misfortune, who is distinguished for goodness, pull your wire for a telegraph messenger-boy and send me word and I will drop everything and go right away to look at him. There never has been a man like that and never will be. Who are those arrogant, self-conceited creature who move about with sympathy for others, and who think more of a St. Bernard dog, or an Alderney cow, or a Southdown sheep, or a Berkshire pig than of a man? They never had any trouble, or the trouble was never sanctified. Who are those men who listen with moist eye as you tell them of suffering, and who have a pathos in their voice and a kindness in their manner and an excuse or an alleviation for those gone astray? They are the men who have graduated at the Royal academy of trouble and they have the diploma written in wrinkles on their own countenances. My! my! What heartaches they had! What tears they have wept! What injustice they have suffered! The mightiest influence for purification and salvation is trouble. No diamond fit for a crown until it is cut. No wheat fit for bread till it is ground. There are only three things that can break off a chain—a hammer, a file, or a fire; and trouble is all three of them. The greatest writers orators, and reformers get much of their force from trouble. What gave Washington Irving that exquisite tenderness and pathos which will make his books favorites while the English language continues to be written and spoken? An early heartbreak that he never once mentioned; and when thirty years after the death of Matilda Hoffman, who was to have been his bride, her father picked up a piece of embroidery and said: "That is a piece of poor Matilda's workmanship," Washington Irving sank from hilarity into silence and walked away. Out of that lifetime grief the great author dipped his pen's mightiest reinforcement. "Calvin's Institutes of Religion," than which a more wonderful book was never written by human hand, was begun by the author at 25 years of age, because of the prosecution of Francis, king of France. Faraday toiled for all time on a salary of £80 a year and candles. As every brick of the wall of Babylon was stamped with the letter N, standing for Nebuchadnezzar, so every part of the temple of Christian achievement is stamped with the letter T, standing for trouble.

When in olden times a man was to be honored with knighthood he was struck with the fact of the sword. But those who have come to the honor of knighthood in the kingdom of God were first struck not with the flat of the sword but with the keen edge of the cimeter. To build his magnificence of character Paul could not have spared one lash, one prison, one stoning, one anathema, one poisonous viper from the hand, one shipwreck. What is true of individuals is true of nations. The horrors of the American revolution gave this country this side of the Mississippi river to independence, and the conflict between England and France gave the most of this country west of the Mississippi to the United States. France owned it, but Napoleon, learning that England would take it practically made a present to the United States—for he received only $15,000,000—of Louisiana, Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and Indian territory. Out of the fire of American revolution came this country east of the Mississippi, out of the European war came that west of the Mississippi river. The British empire rose to its present overtowering grandeur through gunpowder plot, and Guy Fawkes's conspiracy, and Northampton insurrection, and Walter Raleigh's beheading, and Bacon's bribery, and Cromwell's dissolution of parliament, and the battles of Edge Hill, and Grantham, and Newberry, and Marston Moore, and Naseby, and Dunbar, and Sedgemoor, and execution of Charles the First, and London plague, and London fire, and London insurrection, and Ryehouse plot, and the vicissitudes of centuries. So the earth itself, before it could become appropriate and beautiful residence for the human family had, according to geology, to be washed by universal deluge, and scorched and made incandescent by universal fires, and pounded by sledgehammer of icebergs, and wrenched by earthquakes that split continents, and shaken by volcanoes that tossed mountains, and passed through the catastrophes of thousands of years before Paradise came possible and the groves could shake out their green banner and the first garden pour its carnage of color between the Gihon and the Hiddekel. Trouble is a good thing for the rocks, a good thing for nations, as well as a good thing for individuals.

Interrogation third: Why did a good God let sin and trouble come into the world when he might have kept them out? My reply is, he had reasons that he has never given us. He had reasons which he could no more make us understand in our finite state than the father starting out on some great and elaborate enterprise could make the 2-year-old child in its armed chair comprehend it. One was to demonstrate what grandeur of character may be achieved on earth by conquering evil. Had there been no evil to conquer and no trouble to console, then this universe would never have known an Abraham or a Moses or a Joshua or an Ezekiel or a John Milton or a John Howard, and a million victories which have been gained by the consecrated spirits of all ages would never have been gained. Had there been no battle there would have been no victory. I will not say that I am glad that sin and sorrow did enter, but I do say that after God has given all his reasons to an assembled universe he will be more honored than if sin and sorrow had never entered and that the unfallen celestial will be outdone and will put down their trumpets to listen, and it will be in heaven when those who have conquered sin and sorrow shall enter as it would be in a small singing-school on earth if Thalberg and Gottschalk and Wagner and Beethoven and Schumann should all at once enter

But before leaving this interrogatory, Why God let sin come into the world? let me say that great battles seem to be nothing but suffering and outrage at the time of their occurrence, yet after they have been a long while past we can see that it was better for them to have been fought, namely, Salamis, Inkerman, Toulouse, Arbella, Agincourt, Trafalgar, Blenheim, Lexington, Sedan. So now that the great battle against sin and suffering are going on we can see mostly that which is deplorable. But 20,000 years from now, standing in glory, we shall appreciate that heaven is better off than if the battle of this world's sin and suffering had never been projected.

Interrogation the fourth: Why do I have it so hard, while others have it so easy? Why do I have so much difficulty in gaining livelihood, while others go around with a full portemonnaie? Why must I wear these plain clothes, while others have to push hard to get their wardrobes closed, so crowded are they with brilliant attire? Why should I have to work so hard while others have 365 holidays every year? They are all practically one question. I answer them by saying it is because the Lord has his favorites and he puts extra discipline upon you and extra trials because he has for you extra glory, extra enthronement, and extra felicities. That is no guess of mine, but a divine say-so. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." "Well," says some one, "I would rather have a little less in heaven and a little more here. Discount my heavenly robe 10 per cent and and let me now put it on, a fur-lined overcoat; put me in a less gorgeous room of the house of many mansions and let me have a house here in a better neighborhood." No, no; God is not going to rob heaven, which is to be your residence for 900,000,000,000,000,000 of years, to fix up your earthly abode, where you may perhaps stay only ten years longer, or perhaps only a month more. Now you had better cheerfully let God have his way, for, you see, he has been taking care of folks for near 7,000 years, and knows how to do it, and can see what is best for you better than you can yourself. And God will make it all right with you, and there is one song that you will sing every hour of your first ten years in heaven, and the refrain of that song will be, "I am so glad God did not let me have it my own way." Your case will be all fixed up in heaven and there will be such a reversal of conditions that we can hardly find each other for some time. Some of us who have lived in first-rate houses here and in first rate neighborhoods will be found, because of our lukewarmness of earthly service, living on one of the back streets of the celestial city, and clear down at the end of it at 808 or 909 or 1505, while some who had unattractive earthly abodes, and cramped ones at that, will in the heavenly city, be in a house fronting the royal piaza, right by the imperial fountain, or on the heights overlooking the river of life, the chariots of salvation halting at the door while those visit you are more than conquerors, and those who are kings and queens unto God forever. You, my brother, and you my sister, who have it so hard here will have it so fine and grand there that you will hardly know yourself and will feel disposed to dispute your own identity, and the first time I see you there I will cry out. "Didn't I tell you so when you sat down there in the Brooklyn tabernacle and looked incredulous because you thought it too good to be true?" And you will answer: "You are right, the half was not told me!"

Amid the tussle and romp of reunion I tell you whose hand of welcome you had better first clasp and whose cheek is entitled to the first kiss. It is the hand and the cheek of him without whom you would never have got there at all, the Lord Jesus, the darling of the skies, as he cries out, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, and the fires could not burn it and the floods could not drown it."

But here I must slow up lest in trying to solve mysteries I add to the mysteries that we have already wondered at namely, why preachers should keep on after all the hearers are tired? So I gather up into one great armful all the whys and wherefores of your life and mine, which we have not had time or ability to answer, and write on them the words "adjourned to eternity." I rejoice that we do not understand all things now; for if we did what would we learn in heaven? If we could put down one leg of the compass and with the other sweep a circle around all the inscrutables, if we could lift our little steelyards and weigh the throne of the omnipotent, if we could with our seven-day clock measure eternity, what would be left for heavenly revelation? So I move that we cheerfully adjourn what is now beyond our comprehension, and as according to Rollin, the historian, Alexander the Great, having obtained the gold casket in which Darius had kept his rare perfume, used that aromatic casket thereafter to keep his favorite copy, of Homer in and called the book, therefore, the "edition of the casket," and at night he put the casket and his sword under his pillow, so I put this day into the perfumed casket of your richest affections and hopes this promise, worth more than anything Homer ever wrote or sword ever conquered: "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter," and that I call the "edition celestial."

Five men were killed at Red Lodge, Montana coal mines by a premature blast exploding. No telegram communication existing nothing definite can be learned at present.

HOUSEHOLD.

Wash for the Face.

Ladies mostly use soap and water, but others have adopted more expensive methods. Helen of Troy is said to have bathed in wine and milk, and Catherine of Russia in strawberry juice. Simplicity is now the order of the day, and a raw potato is recommended as an excellent application. The method of application is to wash the face first, and then rub the face and neck with the raw potato. Cut a paring off the potato before using it again, so as always to have a fresh surface at each time of washing.—Chicago Ledger.

Earache.

Earache in any form is said to be quickly relieved by filling the ear with chloroform vapor from an uncorked bottle, vapor only, not the liquid.

One who has suffered offers the following cure for earache: Wet a good-sized piece of cotton wadding with very strong essence of peppermint and press it lightly into the ear, leaving plenty of cotton outside for a purchase in removing the cotton in about twenty-four hours after, when it will have become stiff and thick with the wax that caused the pain. Tie up the ear lightly when the cotton is put in and again after it is removed. That ear may never ache again. If the earache proceed from abscess of any kind the peppermint may afford relief and hasten a discharge.

Why Women Get Short of Breath.

In order to ascertain the influence of tight clothing upon the action of the heart during exercise, a dozen young women consented this summer to run 540 yards in their loose gymnasium garments, and then to run the same distance with corsets on. The running time was two minutes and thirty seconds for each person, at each trial, and in order that there should be no cardiac excitement or depression following the first test, the second trial was made the following day. Before beginning the running the average heart impulse was eighty-four beats to the minute after running the above named distance, the heart impulse was 152 beats to the minute, the average natural waist girth being twenty-five inches. The next day corsets were worn during the exercise, and the average girth of waist was reduced to twenty-four inches. The same distance was run in the same time by all, and immediately afterward the average heart impulse was found to be 162 beats per minute. When I state that I should feel myself justified in advising a athlete not to enter a running or rowing race whose heart impulse was 160 beats per minute after a little exercise, even though there were not the slightest evidence of disease, one can form some idea of the wear and tear on this important organ, and the physiological loss entailed upon the system in women who force it to labor for over half their lives under such a disadvantage as the tight corset imposses.—Dr. D. A. Sargent, in Scribner's.

Poultices For The Complexion.

What won't girls try in the attempt to achieve beauty? A young woman of Pittsburg, who has enough good looks, if she only knew it, to make her way in the world, has been trying all sorts of queer and quack recipes for beauty, according to the Dispatch of that city. In particular she has set her heart and mind and her hands upon making her flesh soft and velvety, a quality which can no more be acquired by nostrums than by act of Congress. But with preserverance worthy of a better cause, this damsel has been toiling off and on to give her cheeks and neck and hands the velvety softnees of the peach.

Generally, I have been able to detect the course of some rediculous treatment by the greator or less resemblance her skin bore to that of the leopard, who, sensible beast that he is, rejoices in his spots. The last experiment, I only know by hearsay, has frightened Mademoiselle so badly that I guess she'll hereafter leave her complexion and her epidermis alone.

In the strickest confidence I may tell you that the last experiment was a beautifully simple thing. Before retiring for the night Mademoiselle applied to her face, neck and hands, poultices of bread and milk. She slept all night through—how she did it I don't know—with the sloppy embracements upon her.

In the morning she arose and ran to the glass the first thing to see the wonders worked by the poultices. There were wonders, indeed! But not what she expected. Her skin had shrivelled up; it looked liked a piece of corrugated canvas, or zinc roofing painted white. In fact she reminded herself of She after the final passage through the fountain of fire.

But, unlike She, she recovered her pristine looks. And she has foresworn poultices forever. Beware thou also in time.

Hints for the House.

The yolk of an egg is good to keep flatirons smooth and clean.

An excellent furniture polish is of equal parts of shellac varnish, linseed oil and spirits of wine.

Ceilings that have been smoked with a kerosene lamp should be washed off with flannel cloth tied over a broom or brush. Then cut off a thick piece of stale bread and rub down with this. Begin at the top and go straight down.

To clean the children's teeth when tartar has been allowed to form up on them take finely powdered pumice-stone and a little, clean, soft, pine stick, to rub with. Dip the pine stick into water and then in the powdered pumice, and rub the teeth gently. Afterward wash them with soap and water, using a tooth-brush.

Colored goods, too, should not be put into very hot water, and soda should be dreaded for them. They should neither be starched with hot starch, nor ironed with a hot iron. After, washing, they should be rinsed in cold water, in which a good handful of salt or a little alum has been dissolved. They should not be dried in the sun.

To polish a piano carefully wash the piano with castile soap and lukewarm water, using a soft linen handkerchief, then rub hard with a dry one, then take two thirds sweet oil and one-third turpentine, shaken well together, and rub on with soft linen. Afterwards rub twice over with a dry one.

Borax water will instantly remove all soils and stains from the hand, and heal all scratches and chafes. To make it put crude borax into a large bottle and fill with water. When the borax is dissolved add more to the water until at last the water can absorb no more, and a residuum remains at the bottom of the bottle. To the water in which the hands are to be washed pour from this bottle enough to make it very soft. It is very cleansing and healthy. By its use the hands will be kept in excellent condition.

A Wall of Water.

In March last two German officials landed in the southwest coast of the big island of New Britain to explore the island. They had gone there from Finchhaven, in neighboring New Guinea, with a considerable force of natives. No tidings whatever have been heard of them since, according to the New York Sun. Search parties sent out from Finchhaven have sought them in vain, and there is no longer any doubt that they fell victims to a remarkable phenomenon that occurred two or three days after they reached the Island.

On the morning of March 13 a sound was heard at Finchhaven as of distant thunder. A few minutes a sea receded from the shore in an unheard-of manner, and revealed to view, six feet above its surface, a reef at the harbor entrance that had never been seen above water before. Then the sea came back, enormous waves dashing far up on the land and deluging a part of the little settlement. Awhile after fine ashes began to sift over the coast, and the German colonist knew there had been a volcanic outburst northeast of them.

Two days later the vessel Ottilie, sent from Finchhaven, reached the south coast of New Britain, eighty miles away. The captain could not at first recognize the coast, though he had seen it often. The aspect of Vulcan island off the west end of the big island, had entirely altered. The top of it had disappeared, and it is supposed that a volcanic eruption blew it into the sea, and that this was one of the causes of the mighty wave that spread ruin along the south of New Britain.

This wave, judging from its effects, is believed to have been about forty feet high. All the villages that lined the beach had entirely disappeared. For ten or twelve miles along the coast a belt of timber about three-quarters of a mile wide had been swept away. Where the force of the wave began to abate the bodies of a few natives were found lodged in the branches of trees twenty to thirty feet from the ground. Here and there on the land were heaped great fragments of coral rock and trees, and thousands of dead fish strewed the ground. Many of the natives were killed, and others had their limbs broken by being swept off their feet and dashed against trees.

It is a noteworthy fact that the natives who saw the wave approaching thought it was caused by the evil spirit in the volcano of Akaie, and attracked it with showers of stones and clubs just before it ingulfed them. The German exployers, it is supposed, had not yet started inland, and they were overwhelmed in the common destruction. The great wave which overwhelmed many thousands of people after the eruption at Krakatua is said to have traveled several times around the world. It is probable that this enormous wave at New Britain extended its effects in a slight measure to every ocean.

That Fool Husband of Mine.

As a general rule it will be found that the majority of the officeseekers are men who have been failures in everything else they have undertaken, and therefore take it for granted that the country owes them a living. Probably the most of them absolutely believe that because they have been failures in the ordinary occupations of life they have thereby proved their ability to fill any office which will enable them to handle money from the public treasury. They are ready to take anything. With equal confidence they will accept consulships, Indian agencies, collectorships, postoffices, surveyorships, land offices, receiverships, appraiserships, offices in the treasury or any other department. If they can't have one they express their willingness to take another. The constituent of the Iowa congressman who called upon him the other day in search of "the government job" of minister to Japan, the duties of which he did not know though he was sure "the job" would suit him, does not present an exaggerated case. Unfortunately there is no restraint that can be placed upon them, though now and then a case occurs like that in the experience of Ben Butterworth, who received a letter from an officeseeker's wife in Cincinnati beginning: "Send that fool husband of mine home. We have no coal to burn and nex to nothing to eat."

"There would be fewer vacant pulpits," remarks the Presbyterian Mid-Continent, "if churches were willing to take what they could pay for. It is simply preposterous for a $600 church to expect a $2,000 man; and it is just as preposterous for a $600 man to expect a $2,000 church.

An evangelist connected with the West End mission in London announces, without giving names, of course, that several members of parliament have confessed to him that they have never prayed, not even at their mothers' knees, and have never read a single chapter in the bible.

It is said that Mr. Du Chaillu's book on Norsemen has practically been reset for the sixth time, the author having made discoveries and revisions which involve important changes and additions. The whole work, which has 1,200 beautiful illustrations, will probably appear next month.

At the Church Missionary society's station of Rabai, Africa, a very remarkable sight was witnessed on New Year's day when Mr. Mackenzie before an immense concourse of people presented papers of freedom to many hundreds of runaway slaves for whose unconditional redemption he had amicably arranged with their owners.

Mrs. Harrison receives about twenty-five letters a day from people who want her to use her influence with Mr. Harrison to get them offices.

Two Bagdad Jews have bought, it is said, the entire site of Babylon, with the ruins of Nebuchadnezzar's and other palaces upon it.

Only eight counties in Kansas are now without railroads. Five of them are in the extreme southwestern part of the State.

The city of Leipzig will celebrate in July the 350th anniversary of the beginning of the religious reformation in that city led by Lauterbach, the friend of Luther.

A St. Louis taxidermist, who recently preserved a large bald eagle, says the muscles of the breast were of great size, and formed nearly one fourth the weight of the entire bird.

Creek Indian law says that a man thrice convicted of larceny must be shot. Richard Yohala, a full-blooded Creek, has done the business and was shot for it on the Creek reservation in Indian territory.

A New York drummer in the annex of the Park Central Hotel, at Hartford, when it came tumbling down leaped out of bed, grabbed his gripsack, and fled in his night dress. With his gripsack safe, he gave no thought to his clothes.

Great activity is being shown at the present time by the Argentine Republic to divert the tide of European emigration to its shores. The republic will spend this year $5,000,000 to bring immigrants from the north of Europe alone. Ships from England, Holland and France are taking them over in thousands.

A fourteen year-old girl who lives in Highland, a town near Harrisburg, was converted lately at a religious revival. Soon afterwards she fell into a trance, and much of the time since she has been in that state. The trances last from five minutes to half an hour, and don't leave her in the least exhausted.

The only populous center of the world's population that remains shut up from travel is Lhassa, the capital of Thibet. Only six or seven Europeans ever set foot in the city, and none of them are alive. Prejevalsky, a Russian travler, has made three attempts to enter the city, and is about to make the fourth.

A member of the New York Assembly is related to the Astors by marriage. Visitors to Albany ask to have him pointed out to them, and appear very much surprised to find he is a plainly dressed man, who never makes a speech, always behaves himself, and dosen't seem a bit proud of his relationship to the leading family of the New York 400.

A bill before the Illinois Legislature defines lager beer as a beverage made of pure barley, malt and hops, and provides that any beer artificially colored or containing other ingredients shall be known as "commercial beer," and shall be so designated by means of stamps to be furnished by the State. "Zwei glass commercial."

A woman near Ventura, Cal., recently made $100,000 in land speculation. This fired her with the ambition to get up a special "boom," and make a million if possible. So she chartered a train from San Francisco, 600 miles away, gave a free ride, a free lunch and free music to all who would come, and held a big sale. But though the train was crowded from San Francisco, no one would buy; and instead of making a fortune she lost $20,000.

The mexicans have a queer way of burying the dead. The corpse is tightly wrapped in century plant matting and placed in a coffin, rented for about twenty-five cents. One or two natives, as the case may be, place the coffin on their heads and go in a trot to the grave, where the body is interred, and the coffin is then returned. The wealthy class use the street cars as hearses, and the friends follow beside the car on foot.

"The way to use your cane," said a noted foreigner the other day, "is not to strike with it as if it were a club. That is of so little use that it is doubtful if it would not be wrenched away from you the first blow you strike. You can make a cane the most ugly and vicious of weapons by simply punching with it. You hold the handle in your right hand and use your left hand merely to guide the point. Then jab at your assailant's stomach, neck or face. He cannot get the cane away from you, and cannot get within arm's reach of you."

Doings at Washington.

In the examination of Col. W. W. Dudley, before United States Commissioner Hackett at Washington, but little information was extracted. Col. Dudley refused to answer almost every question put to him. He claimed that his reticence was enforced by the advice of counsel.

The special congressional committee on the Washington aqueduct tunnel has reported that there is not ten continuous feet of solid work in the tunnel; that a number of subinspectors have been illegally paid under fictitious names, and that while Maj. Lydecker and Lieut. Townsend cannot be held guilty of corrupt practices, they have been careless to an extent that cannot be easily condoned. The committee recommends an appropriation of $10,000 for a survey for a new surface conduit.

President-elect Harrison and party arrived in Washington on the 26th, when the train rolled into the depot, President-elect and Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. McKee appeared on the platform of their car, and the ten minutes' wait was consumed in shaking hands with the hundreds of ladies and gentlemen who clambered up the steps and hung on to the railing to get a close view of the presidential party. Their reception was quite enthusiastic. Mr. Harrison looks as if he had a tedious journey, and was evidently tired. With as little delay as might be, Gen. Harrison and others were seated, and then driven rapidly to the Arlington hotel, where they at once sought the privacy of their apartments. Others on the train were sent to their several destinations in the city after good-byes had been said, and the trip of President-elect Harrison to the capitol was at an end. It had been accomplished in twenty-three hours and eighteen minutes without a single mishap and with great comfort.

Minor Casualties.

At Keewatin, Canada, recently an Indian boy fifteen years of age was fed with whisky until he refused to drink any more, when he was placed on his back on the floor and the liquor poured into him. He was found dead on the following morning, evidently choked to death. Blood was running out of his ears and mouth.

A slight shock of earthquake occurred in Indiana. There was a low, muffled roar, attended by the rattling of windows and doors and trembling of the earth, lasting three or four seconds. The disturbance was at first attributed to a natural gas well or an explosion, but telegrams were received from a hundred miles distant announcing similar phenomena.

Presence of mind and prompt action saved a farmer's life in Iowa. He was crossing the track of the Kansas City railroad near Farley, when his team became stalled, unable to move the load. Just then a freight train hove in sight, whereupon he pulled the pin from the double whiffletrees, started the horses ahead and jumped saving his life. A second later the air was full of tubs of butter crocks of lard and other contents of the wrecked vehicle.

The west-bound Canadian Pacific freight in passing over a treslle thirty-six feet high, near Middleton, went through, six cars in the center of the train going down. The engine and front car passed over safely, and the rear cars and the coboose remained on the tracks. Two of the cars that went down were loaded with settlers' effects, and the other four with sixty horses and some sheep. Sixteen horses and two sheep were killed outright, and others have died since. The damage to rolling stock is heavy. There was no loss of human life.

The main business portion of the village of Blooming Prairie, Minn., was burned. The fire originated soon after midnight in the rooms over the postoffice and general merchandise store owned by M. Guthrie, postmaster. This building and contents were entirely consumed, as were buildings and stock as follows: Union hotel, occupied by George A. Camp for harness shop, loss, $1,500; E. Morton, hardware store and hall, loss $6,000; Jensen & Co., general merchandise, $5,000; T. Feeney, hardware, $5,000. The loss on the postoffice building and contents was $2,500.

The Ways of the Wicked:

Hans P. Berg, a jeweler residing at Kenyon, Minn., committed suicide by hanging himself in his room with a piece of twine. Despondency over the loss of his wife and child, who died recently, is said to have been the cause. He was about forty-five years of age, and in moderate circumstances.

Thomas Ryan, Brooklyn, N. Y., found a man in his rooms with Mrs. Ryan, and in a rage seized the woman and threw her out of the second-story window. She fell on the pavement and her skull was fractured. She will die. Ryan was drunk and had beaten his wife before throwing her out of the window.

Curley Bedford was shot at Tower, Minn., by Billy Wilcott in the stomach. The parties got into a fight and Wilcott pulling a gun, said: "Look out, or I will shoot." Curley ran at him and Wilcott fired, Curley falling at once. Bad blood had existed between the men, and, by all appearance, will result fatally at Bedford.

Edward Colburn, a traveling salesman, twenty-three years of age, shot and killed his wife Lizzie at their home in Roxbury, Mass. He then made an attempt, which will probably prove successful, to take his own life. He shot himself twice in the face, and can live but a few hours at the most. The motive is not known. The couple had been married about a year.

The Times-Bonfield-Shaack criminal libel cases were to be investigated by the grand jury at Chicago, in spite of the protest of Messers. Bonfield and Schaack, who claim they have some enemies on the present grand jury. There are six cases altogether, two against J. J. West, two against J. R. Dunlop, and two against Jens Christensen, editor of the Arbeiter Zeitung. Bailiffs were sent out to compel the attendance of Schaack and Bonfield, but they could not be found.

A serious stabbing affair occurred at East Grand Forks, Minn. Henry Kesser, a brewery employe there, stabbed Chrappill Gravell, a farmer, in the region of the clavicle, the knife penetrating through a coon coat, inside coat, vest and three shirts, and scraping the bone. Gravell was also wounded in the hand. The quarrel ensued from a disputed right of way on the common thoroughfare. Kesser, after committing the deed, skipped across to his side of the Ruby and is still at large. The wounded man is in a dangerous condition.

The house of Herman Umberger, an aged farmer living near Jennerstown, Somerset county, Pa., was entered by two masked men claiming they had a search warrant for jewelry that had been stolen from a peddler in the neighborhood a short time ago. Mr. Umberger innocently accompanied them through the house, and when he was forced to open a trunk, containing $13,000, he placed the money in his pocket. Then they demanded him, at the points of the revolvers to hand it over. This he strenuously objected to, when a regular battle ensued, in which they fired five shots into his body, killing him almost instantly. They took the money and fled. The aged wife witnessed the murder, but was too old and feeble to be of any assistance to her husband. The murderers are supposed to live in the community.

Edward Artise shot Kittie Palmer on the public streets and within a few rods of her home at Aurora, Ill., inflicting a fatal wound. Artise was a rejected lover and had been repeatedly requested to refrain from paying attention to Miss Palmer, but he persisted in his addresses and the matter culminated in the shooting. Artise fled immediately after firing the shot, pursued by officers. after a three mile chase the murderer was sighted, but he continued running and when his pursuers were but ten rods behind him shot himself through the heart, dropping dead in his tracks. Both parties are colored. Miss Palmer is the only colored graduate of the high school and occupies a prominent social position. The murderer was about twenty years of age and had been a restaurant waiter. The mother of the murderer and suicide has become temporarily insane over the affair.

On the 24th two men with two young girls arrived in St. Cloud, Minn., and registered at the St. Charles hotel as J. C. Bell and William Bleiter, Mary Bell and Kate Bleiter of Brainerd. The man Bleiter said the girls were sisters of his and Bell's; that he was a cheese factory agent and had some collections to make here. The party were at the hotel all night but had separate rooms and their conduct was perfectly exemplary. Next day a man named Gray, the step-father of the girl registered as Bell, appeared, and with the assistance of the authorities took possession of the girls and took them back home. The men escaped through a second story rear window of the hotel. Gray is proprietor of the Nicollet hotel, Brainerd, and says the girl is wayward, while she says she is cruelly treated. She is but fourteen years old, but quick and bright, and said she expected to go to relatives in St. Paul, while her companion, who worked in the hotel and was a couple of years older, was going into a variety show.

Great excitement prevails at West Superior, over the attempted murder of Miss Maggie Welter, a highly respected and popular young lady. The particulars are as follows: Miss Welter occupies a room in the Wedough Block as a dressmaking establishment. One evening she left the room with the intentions of going to supper. She had gotten half way down the stairs leading to the street when a masked man approached her from from the street and greeted her with the remark "Now I will have revenge." He then struck at her wth a large dagger. She warded off the blow, but he struck again, this time making a deep gash in her shoulder. The perpetrator fled, and the young lady was picked up soon after in an unconscious condition, and cared for by her parents. The greatest indignation is expressed upon all sides. Rumors of Jack the Ripper are heard on the streets, and if the would-be assassin is taken it is liable to go hard with him. Later suspicion has rested upon a man who formerly boarded with the Welter family and with whom Miss Welter had some disagreement heretofore.

The arraignment of the woman who killed Harry King at the Paxton house in Omaha in November last took place very quietly in Judge Groff's court. While County Attorney Mahoney was reading the information charging her with the murder of King, she kept her eyes on the floor, with her head resting on her hand. When he had finished Judge Groff asked her to stand. Her face grew a trifle paler, and her chin trembled slightly as she arose. She quickly regained self-control however, and looked the Judge straight in the eye while he said; "To this information do you plead guilty or not guilty?" The information had spoken of her as Elizabeth Beecher, and before her attorney could stop her, she said in a firm clear voice, "Not Guilty." "Before that plea is entered," said Gen. Corwin, we "wish to file a plea of a misnomer, stating that the name of the accused is Mrs. Elizabeth King, and not Elizabeth Beecher." After the arraignment the prisoner was taken into Judge Groff's private office, where she held a short counsel. She was then taken back to her cell. The attorneys say they will probably be ready to try the case by April 1.

William Davis, a patient at the insane asylum at Pontiac, Mich., was killed by P. F. Taylor, an attendant. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict that the killing was done in self defense. The circumstances are these: As Taylor passed Davis in the hall with another imbecile, Davis, who was out of humor about something, struck Taylor in the neck. Taylor left the other man, and grabbed Davis about the waist. They struggled for five minutes, first one then the other getting the best. When about three feet from a bench Taylor gave Davis a violent wrench, throwing him across the arm of the bench. His body was twisted over it and held there until assistance arrived. An examination of the body revealed the fact that Davis must have been handled in a terrible manner. The breast bone was broken in two, and every rib on one side was broken except two, and three were broken twice. The ragged edge of the ribs sawed off the veins and artries so that the internal cavities were filled with blood. After the fight the patient was taken out for a walk and dragged around the grounds until he said he could go no further. He was then taken back, put to bed and died in a few minutes.

Miscellaneous News Items.

James B. Weaver, junior member of the law firm of Gatch, Conner & Weaver of Des Moines Iowa, controling the Litchfield river land estate, was in Fort Dodge making arrangements preparatory to the eviction of all settlers on the Litchfield lands. Weaver states that seven hundred judgments of possession of Lands in Webster, Hamilton and Boone counties have been issued against four hundred farmers. In the first week of March every one of them will be served and evictions made. The selection of this early date is to prevent settlers from putting in their crops and thus have a lien on the property. The Litchfield posessions form the greatest portion of the river lands and comprise a thousand acres of the finest farming lands in the counties named, and nearly all well occupied with well cultivated farms. The announcement of the commencement of this wholesale batch of evictions creates greatest excitement among river landholders, who, although expecting evictions, did not anticipate this sweeping serving of writs.

Pigott, the Perjurer.

In the Brittish Parnell commission Sir Charles Russell stated that Richard Pigott went to the residence of Mr. Henry Labouchere, and in the presence of Mr. George Augustus Sala singed a confession stating that the letters upon which the Times based its charges against the Irish members of the house of commons were forgeries. Sir Charles Russell applied for a warrant for the arrest of Pigott. Presiding Justice Hannen said a warrant would be ready in an hour. Attorney General Webster, for the Times, said no other witness was ready, and that he would have to consider what course to pursue. He would also have to decide whether or not he would resume any part of the case. When Pigott was called to take the stand he did not appear. After the court had waited for some time counsel for the Times stated to the judges that Pigott had left the hotel at which he was stopping and that the counsel were ignorant of his whereabouts. This statement caused a sensation in the court room. Pigott in his confession to Mr. Labouchere on Saturday said that he forged all the letters secured by the Times which purported to have been written by Messrs. Egan, Parnell, Davitt and O'Kelly. He also admitted that he had been guilty of perjury in his evidence given before the commission. Mr. Soames, solicitor for the Times, emphatically denies doing anything, directly or indirectly, to assist Pigott to make his escape.

EDINBURGH, Feb. 26.—The case of Mr. Parnell against Mr Walter, of the London Times, for libel which was dismissed by a single judge on the first hearing on the ground that no arrestments against Mr. Walter as an individual would be valid, came up to-day before the judges of the First division on the rehearing demanded by Mr. Parnell's counsel. The court by consent, dismissed the action with costs.

An Ontario Railroad Disaster.

The St. Louis express passing east-bound, went through the bridge just east of St. George, Ontario. A broken tire on the engine caused the rails to spread and the first passenger car, the Pullman car, and dining car went through the middle section of the bridge. The Pullman car, containing the most passengers, was thrown clear off the bridge, turning completely over and lighting right side up. The dining car stands on and against a pier and the passenger car remains on the bridge, having stripped the ties ahead of it over the section that collapsed. The train consisted of five coaches, baggage, passenger, smoking, Pullman and dining cars. The engine, tender and smoking car crossed the bridge in safety, but just as the passenger coach was near the center of the bridge the terrible affair occurred. The fireman, Harry Angle, noticed that all was not right, jumped and was killed. The passenger car went over the bridge, turning a somersault and landing flatly. The Pullman remained on the bridge. The dining car contained about seven people besides the waiters. Supper had just been announced, and in a few minutes the car would have been filled and all must have perished.

The scene of the wreck is appalling. On one part of the bridge are a numbes of the ties heaped together, some of them splintered to atoms. A partially demolished Pullman car occupies a place on the bridge. The dining car stands almost perpendicularly upon its end. The upper end leans against one of the vast stone piers. The hind wheels of the car became detached from it just before it took its fearful leap and they now nestle in the iron frame work of the bridge. The first-class coach took a complete somersault in its descent and, though it landed right side up, is very nearly demolished. A heap of debris lies at the foot of one of the piers and a strange conglomeration it is of car wheels, stoves and other railway attachments. Engineer Brown remained at his post and passed over in safety. Nine persons were killed and a large number wounded.

BURNED TO A CRISP.

Ten Girls and a Man Perish Miserably in a Pennsylvania Squib Factory.

A terrible disaster ocurred at Plymouth a few miles from Wilkesbarre, Pa., by which the souls of ten girls and one man were hurled into eternity. Back of the Gaylord shaft stood the factory of John Powell, used for the manufacture of squibs used by the miners in loosening coal in the mines. The factory employed eighty-four girls, ranging from twelve to twenty years, and several male workmen. while the majority of the girls were at their homes eating dinner the people were startled by the deafening thunders of a terrific explosion. They rushed terror-stricken to their doors and windows, and in the distance saw clouds of smoke ascending from the squib factory. Soon a large crowd had gathered around it, and women began ringing their hands and men turned away from the sight presented when the charred body of a young girl was seen lying in one of the rooms, and the fact became known that at least twenty persons were in the building at the time of the explosion eating their noonday lunch. The scene was fraught with terror as the girls, some of them bleeding, others gasping for a few breaths of fresh air, rushed to the windows and screamed frantically for help. About this time a dozen miners from the adjoining colliery came upon the scene as soon as they saw the bleeding forms of the girls calling for aid rushed toward the building in a body, but fate prevented their proffered succor. As soon as they stepped near the door another terrific explosion took place and the entire building collapsed, burying in the ruins the forms that a moment before stood crying for assistance. The braver of the men, when the smoke and flying debris had settled, rushed among the ruins and one by one the bodies were found and taken out, charred beyond recognition, bleeding and mangled.

At the main entrance to the factory the remains of five of the girls were found. They must have evidently made an effort to get out after the first explosion, but were caught in the debris before they could reach the door. Not one of the bodies was recognizable. Some had their heads blown off; others their arms, and a majority were minus both legs and arms. The arrival of the relations of the dead added confusion to the scene. Their cries were heartrending and pitiable, and what made it more pathetic was the fact that mothers and sisters were unable to recognize their own dead. After working for hours the rescuers succeeded in getting out all the remains, which consisted of trunks, arms, legs and skulls. Every one in the building at the time of the explosion perished with the exception of Foreman Reese. He was standing at a stove when the first explosion took place. He rushed for the door to notify the girls when the second explosion knocked him down in the basement. He managed to crawl out of this place. The cause of the explosion is a mystery. Powell says the sqibs piled in a box must have exploded from spontaneous combustion. He says he never allowed any large quantity of powder in the building. When powder was wanted it was taken from the magazine 100 yards away. Experts, however, claim that there must have been powder in the building or the force of the explosion would not have been so great. There were three stoves in the building.

The scenes around the undertaker's establishment where the bodies of the victims were taken were heartrending. Eleven bodies lay there headless, armless and legless. From pieces of scorched clothing and from the buttons were the victims identified. The body of a young girl, supposed to be from Scranton and who was seeking work, has not yet been identified.

Up to a week ago eighty girls had been employed, but an accident to a portion of the machinery made it necessary to lay off all but a few of them. A storehouse only [illegible] feet from the ruins contained twenty [illegible] kegs of powder. Hundreds of people stood near it during the fire, not knowing its contents, and strange to say it did not explode as it became as hot as a stove. Eye witnesses, of whom there are but few, say there were five reports, two heavy and three light. The heavy ones were powder kegs and the light ones were boxes of squibs. At midnight Foreman Reese is raving in deliriums.

A California Train Robbery.

On the receipt of the intelligence recently of a train robbery at Pixley, a special car was at once ordered to carry officers to the scene of the robbery, and in a short time about ten officers were on the ground where the tragedy had taken place. A pool of fresh blood was found several yards from the track, where one of the unfortunate passengers had been shot down. There were indications that horses had been hitched to one of the telegraph poles near by. Two tramps were found who told the following story:

We were waiting for the train to ride out to Pixley and noticed two more men who were said to be waiting for the train. We went up and commenced talking to them. They acted in a very peculiar manner. It was so dark that we could not tell exactly how they looked, but think both were good-sized men. Both wore overcoats, and wore white shirts. One had his clothes strongly perfumed; both had shotguns or what appeared to us to be shotguns. They asked us where was a good place to get on the train. We told them, and asked them where they were going. They said to Delano to shoot jack rabbits. We asked them what was the matter with shooting jack rabbits at Pixley? One of them said he had a ranch at Delano. Just then the train came along and the men jumped on the front part of the engine.

Something seemed to warn me that all was not right. As the train passed, a third man jumped from somewhere and boarded one of the passenger cars. I felt uneasy and walked over to the depot and told some one what had happened. I was only laughed at, but it was not long till we heard what happened.

The tramp who was riding on the platform of the baggage car said:

The train commenced to slow up when we got a short distance beyond Pixley. When it had nearly stopped I discovered there was trouble of some kind and jumped off. When they commenced shooting I ran and jumped a wire fence and laid down in the field near by. I heard some one say "My God, I am killed," when the shooting ocurred, and then I heard an explosion of some kind. When the robbers had gone I slipped out and got among the passengers. One of the men shot had his side torn to pieces with buck shot. The train backed up to Pixley, when one of the passengers claimed he saw a man fall at a distance from the track. The train went back and we searched for the man. We soon found him. He had evidently been instantly killed. The shot entered near the temple. He had a ticket in his hat for Poso.

From the people of Pixley and other sources it was learned that when the train was stopped, that as soon as the express messenger found out what was the trouble he barred the doors of the car, but the robbers threw a bomb under it and gave him such a shaking up that he was glad to open the doors. The amount taken is variously estimated, some placing it from $50,000 to $60,000. The men are searching the country, though there is no clew as to the direction taken by the robbers.

Open to the Air.

In earlier days and milder climates houses were open to the air, and ventilation was not felt. The most fatal diseases at that time were of the lower viscera, the infection being introduced through the stomach when not directly into the blood, and mostly from contaminated water. There arose then a general conviction that water was an unwholesome drink until purified by heat or ferment as in making broth beer, cider or wine. And in the case of wells in walled cities closely crowded for safety against human enemies, this conclusion was no doubt correct. Now, even in the open country, with our air-tight stoves and air-tight walls, doors and windows, we are endangered more through the lungs. A late writer says that out-door atmosphere, even in the smokiest, grimiest quarters of a city, is a hundredfold freer from disease germs than the average indoor air of a crowded lodging-house; and that a neglected bedroom on an open mountainside may be far more unwholesome than a well-aired basement in the slums of New York.—N. Y. Tribune.

TUESDAY FEB. 26.

SENATE.—After a spirited debate, the senate reduced the number of parasites that have fastened themselves upon that body. The useless employes who are thrown out of their positions by this action of the senate are Gilbert Martinson and Charles McCann, assistant doorkeepers; Rev. William Gray, keeper of the gallery, and O. S. Blake, postmaster. The ten committee clerks whose heads went into the basket are: C. L. Hilton, banks and banking; O. C. Belyea, grain and warehouse; O. G. Farsdale, seed grain; George W. Tuosier, institute for the deaf, dumb and blind; Alton Crosby, public lands; H. E. Ives, towns and counties; G. W. Taylor, state public school; J. K. Mertz, corporations; T. J. Merrill, booms, logs and lumber; E. M. Woodward, claims.

HOUSE.—The interest bill was discussed, and that was all.

Mr. Hompe offered a resolution: That the time of final adjournment of the Twenty-sixth legislature be fixed for April 1 at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. Searle offered a substitute resolution making the final day Friday, April 5, and that no bills be introduced after March 13. Mr. Hompe accepted this substitute. Mr. Stevens again asked that it be made a special order for Tuesday, but the time having arrived for the consideration of the Sevatson interest bill, the consideration of the resolution was necessarily put off.

The agricultural committee devoted their time to the discussion of Mr. Estes' farmer's institute bill. There are fifteen members of the committee, and but ten of them were present. They were divided over the bill, the opposition to it arising from the fact that it places the governing of the institutes in the hands of the university regents, and because it is designed to make the institutes permanent, some waiting a further trial of two years or more. It was finally decided by a vote of 6 to 4 to report it favorably, Messrs McNelly, Crain, Jones and Evenson voting against it. These gentlemen will present a minority report.

WEDNESDAY FEB., 27.

The bill to create a board to examine teachers and furnish them with certificates received an overhauling in the senate committee of the whole yesterday. It was opposed by several senators. Mr. Thacker objected to it on the ground that it would create a class of teachers independent of county superintendents, but Mr. Daniels, who introduced the measure, in replying to this point, claimed that the county superintendents would be deprived of none of their powers, and could keep right along giving out their certificates under the old law.

The early adjournment movement struck the senate in the shape of a joint resolution introduced by Mr. Brown to saw off the session April 5. The resolution was referred to the judiciary committee on motion of Mr. Edwards, although the author of it expressed a preference for having to go to the committee on retrenchment and reform.

Mr. Hayden introduced a bill in the senate in amendment to the game law. It conforms the shooting seasons in this state to the Wisconsin seasons, so that the sportsmen of the neighboring state may not have the advantage by reason of an earlier opening for certain birds. The prairie chicken season is the one principally affected. This is to be opened Sept. 1 instead of Sept. 15.

HOUSE.—Alvah Eastman regards his bill as reducing the time of limitation of suits against land titles to ten years, favorably reported yesterday, as one of the most important measures before the legislature. He thinks the present limitation of twenty years is an actual relic of barbarism, having been enacted in England in 1624. At present England has come down twelve years, and her American colonies are working under a ten-year limitation. He argues that the present law is not a statute of repose, so called, and that his amendment would materially decrease litigation. The title of land for ten years back can be rapidly looked up by the purchaser, even if he be not versed in law, while under the present system, facts are forgotten, parties are dead and the whole thing materially clouded in obscurity.

The state tax levy is to be increased for the next two years to two miles. This step has been rendered necessary by the large demands upon the treasury of the state for extraordinary expenditures. A conference between the governor and the finance committees of both branches of the legislature resulted in an agreement not to report back any appropriation bill singly, but to wait until all were received, when the scalping knife might be used more judiciously. The amount now asked for, not including bridge bills, for extraordinary uses (aside from current expenses) is about $1,500,000. The revenue of the state now amounts to $825,000, but that is not more than sufficient to meet the ordinary running expenses, and out of that sum nothing is available for the erection of buildings or other purposes of an ordinary character. It was found that it will be necessary to increase the state tax levy for the next two years if any extra appropriations are to be granted.

THURSDAY FEB. 28.

SENATE.—Mr. Halvorson in the senate beheld with sadness the practical demolition of his beautiful temple founded upon the corner stone of retrenchment and reform. In other words, the senate receded from it's position in adopting the report of Mr. Halvorson's committee, discharging certain clerks and employes, to the extent of reinstating three of the latter in their old positions and at the old rate of compensation.

The senate confirmed the appointment of John R. Parshall to the soldiers' home board in the place of the Hon. E. M. Pope resigned.

A flood of petitions from all parts of the state asking for the passage of the bill placing railroad tariffs and fares under the control of the railway commissioners, were received by the senate.

A resolution was introduced and adopted, instructing the secretary of the senate to ascertain by what authority the publisher of the legislative manual had named the lake considered to be the true source of the Mississippi river, Lake Glazier.

The senate again spent much time talking over the Canada thistle and wild mustard bill, which has been the subject of some of the most spirited debates of the session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Estes sent up a circular, sent out by the executive committee of the Railroad Employes' association, asking for signatures to petitions to the legislature asking that the Fleming bill, allowing railroads to appeal from the orders of the railroad commissioners be passed. It was stated that owing to the lack of that right, there are 1,287 employes less on the pay roll of one road than at the same time a year ago, and on another road the pay is $80,000 per month less than in 1888. There were twenty-two petitions to the effect suggested.

A very important measure will come before the house judiciary committee. It is the bill to amend the penal code relating to the death penalty, and seeks to abolish that mode of punishment in this state, changing the penalty for murder to imprisonment for life.

The defeat in the senate of the bill providing for a general revision of the statutes occasioned some surprise among the members of the house, and a bitter feeling has developed in some quarters. The revision, it is claimed, is solely needed and cannot be made too soon, and the most earnest supporters of the bill cannot understand on what substantial grounds the senators refused to favorably consider it. There were broad hints dropped that the defeat of the measure was mainly due to the efforts of the West Publishing company, who have a large stock of the old statutes on hand and are anxious to dispose of them before a revision takes place.

FRIDAY, MARCH 1.

SENATE.—The senate session upon the whole was a rather tame affair, and adjournment was finally necessary because there was not a quorum present. Senator Whiteman's bill for floating logs down the St. Louis river was lost because there were not votes to carry it through, although the sergeant at arms, the Duluth senator and several others were actively hustling for senators in every portion of the capitol.

Senators Day and Pope had a little tilt during the session over the former's bill making the office of railroad commissioner elective. The judiciary committe had reported it favorably, but Mr. Pope wanted it to go to the railroad committee, and he carried his point.

Senator Brown introduced a bill which, if passed, will stop the limited ticket business except for excursions. It provides that a ticket sold at any office shall be good when presented by any person, that tickets shall not be sold at a higher price than they were sold on Feb. 1, 1889. Conductors are prohibited from taking up a ticket or mileage because the holder is not the original purchaser.

Mr Nelson introduced a bill which provides for the removal of officers appointed by the governor for cause. Under the present statute if the governor appoints a county officer he cannot remove him.

HOUSE.—A lengthy communication was received yesterday from Dr. J. V. Brower, protesting against the use of the name of Lake Glazier of Elk lake on the manual maps.

Some time ago Judge Fleming introduced a bill which added pool and billiard playing to the list of games prohibited to miners in saloons. At his suggestion it was referred to Mr. Kreis, who had a bill to prevent saloons keeping billiard and pool tables. As Mr. Fleming thought his bill was the better of the two, he called on Mr. Kreis to report the bill back. Mr. Kreis frankly admitted that he had intended to hold the bill till his hand had been acted upon, but if the bill was not called for to defeat his, he would gladly report it. Mr. Fleming assured him that he simply wanted to get it back to go on general orders with the Kreis bill, so that the house could take its choice, and with that understanding Mr. Kreis reported the bill back, recommending its passage.

Representatives Morgan and Hompe, Senator Buckman, Auditor Braden and Secretary Hart met in the governor's office and had another conference with Gov. Merriam with reference to the state finance. The whole ground was gone over, a thorough examination being made of the resources of the state and the probable revenue of the coming year, and an endeavor was made to learn as nearly as possible what the total amount of the desired appropriation this season will be. No decision was reached regarding any of the appropriation bills, the discussion being of a general character.

A Tenderfoot Stands Treat.

Equally universal, although not especially confined to the West to be sure is the drinking habit. Throughout the North and East the man who never takes a drink is not uncommon, but in the cowboy country the man who under any circumstance declines it is a curiosity. At every stage stopping place and at remote points where a pretence for a store could be had, beer at fifty cents per bottle is a staple article of commerce. I was repeatedly invited and urged by everybody, for Western people are generous even when beer is twenty-five cent per glass, but I persistently declined on every occasion, and although I ran the risk of incurring their displeasure at times, I imagined I was growing somewhat in their favor by my steady adherence to principle, as I was beginning to be looked upon as resolute in that particular. On one occasion, however, I resolved to make an exception to my temperance principles, On my arrival at Rawlins after the night in the stage before referred to, I naturally felt somewhat grateful to the driver who had brought me safely through the fearful storm. If there ever was a time when "something to warm a fellow up" seemed fitting and appropriate, the morning after an all night's stage ride with the thermometer near zero seemed the proper occasion, and why should I not show my appreciation to the driver in the generous Western style? In this state of mind when we arrived at the hotel, I expressed to him my gratitude and, leading the way to the bar, asked him "what he would have." To my utter astonishment and everlasting shame he remarked politely, "I am very much obliged to you, but I never drink." What an astonishing surprise, and what a stunning rebuke. A stage driver on the plains of Wyoming who never takes drink.—Forest and Stream.

A Milkmaid's Queer Experience.

A pretty married woman living in an adjoining county owns a cow that she thinks the world of. She milks the cow herself, as she does not want her spoiled by endless attention. Since the crops have been gathered the cow has been running in the fields and the brush of her tail got filled with cockle burrs. One morning the lady went into the pen to milk and while she was performing the duty the cow switched her tail into the neatly done up hair on the lady's head. The burrs caught and the lady dropped her pail of milk and began to untangle her hair. The occupation disturbed the cow and she began to prance. The lady grabbed the tail with both hands and said: "So, wench! so, wench!" but the wench, not liking the grip, started in a trot around the pen The lady startled the household by her shrieks and a negro woman ran to her rescue, but had to return to the house for a pair of scissors. The cow was driven into a stall; her tail trimmed off and left sticking to the lady's head. She went to the house and we are informed that it took her husband, the negro woman, and the balance of the family until 10 o'clock that night to pick the burrs from her head. She vowed that the cow shan't stay on the place a week or she'll have her killed and fed out to the hands.—Americus (Ga.) Republican.

Mr. Cleveland's Wretched Health.

If President Cleveland is in as bad health as he looks he should be glad to get into retirement as soon as possible. It is not the mark of dissipation that is on his features. It is not a congested complexion. It is that yellow pale denoting internal disorders that marks his whole countenance. Everybody is speaking of how badly he looks. I have seen him close by several times recently, and I have been shocked by his appearance. He looks as badly as Manning did the last time I saw him before his death.

Rolls of soft and flabby flesh have gathered about his face and under his chin; his eyes look jaundiced, and his whole body has accumulated an immense amount of shapeless and useless fat. He must have gained fifty pounds in weight and relaxed half the tension of his muscles. A man may look cadaverous and dyspeptic or consumptive, and yet retain a nervous force; but the man who looks haggard and worn out, and at the same time is overburdened with flesh, seems to collapse within himself and to be smothered by his ponderosity. If he feels no better than he looks he must be regarded as a very sick man. It is the old story of no exercise.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

When a man dies a natural death it is well enough to call the corpse the "remains," but if he has been assisted hence by a discharge of nitro-glycerine the word "remnants" seems to fit the case better.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

The G. A. R. post at Litchfield is already preparing for the encampment to be held at that place next June.

The Yankton oil mill will shut down for the season in a short time on account of a lack of flax seed.

The M. E. church society at Leola has received plans and specifications for a new church, and is making arrangements to begin work soon.

Hon. O. W. Shaw, of Austin, has been appointed by Gov. Merriam as one of the board of control of the state school for indigent children at Owatonna.

Mankato business men have recently been victimized by raised bank notes passed upon them by several young men who have since disappeared.

An association of the teachers in vocal and instrumental music at Winona has lately been formed to promote their professional interests, and a concert is projected in about two weeks.

The Rev. P. J. Gallagher, of Winona, has been appointed spiritual director of the Minnesota branches—or St. Paul council—of the Catholic Knights of America by the archbishop.

Mrs. Charles E. Baker, wife of a prominent farmer in Riceland township, Freeborn county, has begun action for a divorce, alleging inhuman treatment.

The Moorhead Driving Park association and the Clay County Agricultural society are considering the advisability of uniting under the name of the Clay County Driving Park association.

The farmers in the town of Underwood, a heavily timbered district in Otter Tail county, have organized an association for the sale of wood. They have sent out a traveling salesman, who is at work in Dakota.

George Connell, Henry Gilson and Charles Leffler, arrested some days ago on the charge of creating a riot in Le Roy, had an examination at Mankato and were held to the grand jury.

A complicated case of excision of cancerous breast was performed at Duluth, upon an aged lady by Drs. Graff and McComb assisted by Drs. Wheaton and Allen, of St. Paul. The operation was entirely successful.

W. A. Potter superintendent of the Red Wing water works, died at his home of inflamation of the bowels. He was taken sick on the train on his way from Minneapolis where he had been as a witness in the Beach trial.

William Landgraff, seventeen years old, was arrested at Mankato, charged with grand larceney in the second degree, in having stolen some money from his father. He was committed to jail to await examination March 2.

A man by the name of W. W. Bradley was killed while chopping at the logging camp of Joshua Tibbetts on Willow river. The deceased is a son of Dr. E. B. Bradley of White House, Ohio. The body was brought to Aitkin, and sent to his father.

Fire destroyed the Royalton Opera House. A strong gale was blowing from the northwest, and the whole business portion of the village would have been buried had it not been for the hard work of the fire department. Loss on the opera house (which is total), $5,000; no insurance.

Sheriff Barlass arrived at Hastings with Mrs. Lizzie Aldrich and Henry Neimeyer, charged with murder. Some weeks ago John Aldrich, husband of the women, died on his farm near Ayer under suspicious circumstances. His stomach was sent to Chicago, and there found to contain strychnine. Neimeyer is eighteen years old, and worked on the farm.

Notices bearing the usual heading and signed by "The White Caps" were posted on several business places at Plain view and in most cases the parties were notified that if they did not show any change in their actions by March 6 they would be harshly dealt with. There is no apprehension arising from the notices, as they are thought to be the work of some idle person.

A team belonging to B. F. De Haven, a wealthy farmer of Preston, took fright while coming down the long hill south of the town and ran away. The nigh horse ran against a post and was completely disemboweled. The animal walked several steps with its intestines dragging on the ground. The boy who was driving was thrown out, but fortunately escaped injury.

The action of President Cleveland in his discontinuation of the land offices at Benson and Fergus Falls is very much disapproved of by the people in the part of the two districts thus blotted out. It has been quite a burden to settlers who are in the remote parts of the old districts named to be compelled to go to Fergus Falls and Benson, but now that they will be obliged to go to Marshall or St. Cloud, the burden will be much greater. President Harrison will be asked to establish a land office at Morris, to embrace the territory of the old Fergus Falls and Benson districts.

Two boys named Herman Dreher and George Content have passed several United States "raised" notes in Mankato. They took the figure five from the stamp on cigar boxes and placed it over the one one on a dollar bill, and in this way victimized several Mankato citizens and the county treasurer. Chief Foenley went to St. Paul after them, but they had left there on the Northern Pacific road. Content has a bad reputation, and it is said that he had served terms in the reform school and Nebraska state prison.

REPORT

Of Experiments with Frosted, Rusted and Stack Burned Wheat.

THE JOURNAL is in receipt of a 28 page pamphlet, the report of Prof. Green, showing results so far attained. We give only a few samples from the Valley:

In the description of these samples I have given all the information concerning them, that was obtained from the parties from whom they came. There is a very general feeling that rust in many sections of this state caused more real damage to the wheat crop the past season than frost, and that its effect cannot readily be distinguished in the grains from the effect of frost. That the difference between rusted and frosted wheat is not clear even to those who are the best judges of wheat, I am confident, from the fact that wheat from sections where rust prevailed, but no frost, the past summer, is very generally pronounced frosted wheat, and also from the fact that last year's wheat has been judged as frosted. The peculiarly blistered appearance of the kernels, which is said to be characteristic of frosted wheat, is found in wheat of the crop of 1887, as well as in that of 1888, and is not reliable as a test for frosted wheat. All the samples of wheat in this test were inspected by state officials from the grain inspection department. The green house in which these tests were made is a house running north and south with an A shaped roof. The wheat was sown in the centre bench, in rows running east and west. This house is light and receives the full effect of the sun. The seed was sown one-half inch deep in good prairie soil, and fifty kernels of a vaiety were sown in each row 30 inches long, thus making a distance of about one-half inch between the kernels. The house was maintained at a temperature varying from forty degrees at night to sixty-five degrees in the day, throughout the experiment. When the plants which are considered in table I were seven inches high, and those considered in table II were six inches high, the leaves of all the plants were burned by tobacco smoke, while fumigating to kill insects on other plants in the same house; about three inches of the leaves were killed and turned white, which retarded them for a few days, but they recovered, and outgrew this damage.

In each case the first leaf appeared above the soil in about three days after planting. As a rule all the plants that appeared above the soil were strong enough to continue growing, but in a few cases they were too weak to grow, and in making up the percentage of growth, these weak plants have been considered as if they had not started into growth.

Sample No. 1.—From R. A. Whitney, Stephen, Minn. More than half the grains fairly well filled out, but blistered; the balance much shrunken. Marked "frosted, Aug. 30th, in dough stage; straw green. Would like to know if it will do for seed."

The growth consists of vigorous and healthy plants of a rich green color, eleven inches high. The plants have stooled finely, most have three and many five strong shoots, and 85 per cent. of the seeds formed good plants.

There were three samples selected from this lot and they have all grown well, but the poorest quality has not tillered so much as the best.

Sample No. 2—From R. A. Whitney, Stephen, Minn. No grade. About one-fourth of the kernels were fairly well filled out but blistered, the balance much shrunken, and some apparently stack-burnt. Marked: "Frosted Aug. 17th and 30th, soft dough stage; straw green."

The growth consists of vigorous healthy plants, of good color, and twelve inches high. Most of the plants have stooled and have three vigorous shoots of the height given above, while some plants have five shoots, and 67 per cent. of the seed formed good plants. The best quality selected gave the strongest growth.

Sample No. 21.—No grade. Shrunken, blistered, light and exceedingly poor; marked: "Poor wheat, but an average sample of Saskatchawan fife wheat, from Himmelsbach Bros., near Crookston, rusted and frosted:" weight per bushel, 39 pounds. The plants are healthy and rather vigorous. They are commencing to stool and are 9 inches high. Forty-eight per cent. of seed sown, or only thirty-four per cent. of the whole sample, produced good plants. Only thirty-nine per cent. of this sample sank in water.

Sample No. 22.—No grade. Soft, shrunken, light, blistered and exceedingly poor. Rusted and frosted. Saskatchawan Fife from Himmelsbach Bros., Crookston, Minn. Grown on light soil; weight per bushel 40 pounds. The plants are healthy and rather vigorous. They are commencing to stool and are nine inches high. Fifty per cent. of seed sown produced good plants or forty-eight per cent of the whole sample. Of this sample only thirty-nine per cent. was heavy enough to sink in water.

Sample No. 23.—No grade. Soft, shrunken, blistered and light, though a little better than No. 22. "Rusted and frosted Saskatchawan fife. Best quality raised by Himmelsbach Bros., Crookston, Minn.;" weight per bushel 43 lbs. The plants are healthy and vigorous, and are now, February 4th, commencing to stool. They are nine inches high and sixty per cent. of seed sown produced good plants, or forty-two per cent. of the whole sample. Sixty-two and a half of the whole sample was sunk seed.

Sample No. 24.—No grade. Shrunken, soft, light and blistered, with an occasional well filled grain. It was said to be rusted and frosted Scotch Fife wheat, best quality grown by Himmelsbach Bros., near Crookston, Minn.; weight per bushel 41 pounds. The plants are healthy and fairly vigorous, and stooling well. They are nine inches high, and 60 per cent. of the seed sown produced good plants, that is forty-six per cent. of the whole sample. Fifty-five per cent. of the whole sample was heavy enough to sink in water.

Sample No. 25.—No grade. Soft, shrunken, light, badly blistered, and with no heavy grains. Marked: "Rusted and frosted Scotch Fife wheat." It was said to be an average sample of wheat from the region southwest of Crookston, Minn., and was collected by Samuel Marin; weight per bushel 39 pounds. The plants are healthy, rather vigorous and are commencing to stool. They are nine inches high, and sixty-eight per cent. of seed sown, or forty-two per cent. of the whole sample produced good plants. Sixty-eight per cent of the whole sample was heavy enough to sink in water.

Sample No. 26.—No grade. All the seed was much shrunken and badly blistered, but harder than No. 23. Marked: "Rusted and frosted Scotch Fife." Best sample from region southwest of Crookston, Minn., collected by Samuel Marin; weight per bushel 40 pounds. The plants are healthy and vigorous, and stooling well. They are ten inches high, and sixty per cent. of seed sown produced good plants, or fifty-six per cent. of the whole sample. Sixty-seven per cent. of the whole sample sank in water.

Sample No. 27.—No grade. Shrunken, blistered and apparently somewhat stack burnt, about one-half of the kernels quite hard; the balance very soft. Marked: "Rusted and frosted" Mammoth spring wheat, grown by Samuel Marin, southwest of Crookston; weight per bushel 46 pounds. The plants are healthy and vigorous and stooling well. They are eleven inches high and sixty-six per cent. of seed sown produced good plants, or sixty per cent. of the whole sample. Seventy-two per cent. of the whole sample sank in water.

Sample No. 28.—No grade. About one-sixth of the kernels fairly well filled out, but blistered. Marked: "Rusted and frosted, Blue Stem wheat," from S. L. Collins, Crookston. Weight per bushel 47 pounds. The plants are healthy and vigorous and stooling well. They are eleven inches high and seventy-eight of the sunk seed, or sixty-three per cent. of the whole sample produced good plants. Sixty-seven per cent. of the seeds were heavy enough to sink.

Sample No. 29.—No grade. About one-fourth of the kernels were well filled, but blistered; the remainder shrunken, but very much better than No. 22, being harder and not so much bleached. Marked: "Rusted and frosted blue stem wheat." Bought by the M. & N. Elevator Co. from S. L. Collins' farm, Crookston. Weight per bushel 51 pounds. The plants are healthy and vigorous and stooling well. They are eleven inches high and sixty-eight per cent. of the sunk seed or fifty-seven per cent. of the whole sample produced good plants; ninety-one per cent. of the seeds were heavier than water.

Sample No. 30.—No grade. About one-sixth of the kernels were fairly well filled out, but badly blistered. The remainder much shrunken, but quite hard. Marked: "Rusted and frosted, Saskatchawan Fife wheat, from Kelso farm, near Hallock, Minn. Weight per bushel 43 pounds." The plants are healthy and vigorous and are stooling well. They are ten inches high, and seventy-four per cent. of the sunk seed, or sixty-nine per cent. of the whole sample produced good plants. Eighty-three per cent. of the whole sample was heavy enough to sink.

Sample No. 31.—No grade. About one-third fairly well filled out, but somewhat shrunken and blistered; the remainder badly shrunken and blistered. Marked, "Rusted and frosted, Saskatchawan Fife. Best sample from Kelso farm, near Hallock, Minn. Crop of 1888." Weight per bushel 45 pounds. The plants are healthy and vigorous, and stooling well. They are ten inches high, and seventy-six per cent. of the sunk seed or fifty per cent. of the whole sample produced good plants. Sixty per cent. of the whole sample sunk in water.

Sample No. 32.—Graded rejected. This appears to be a little stack-burned. One-third of the kernels are well filled out, but blistered and bleached. The remainder are shrunken, but pretty hard. Marked: "Stack-burned wheat, crop of 1887, slightly frosted. Will it germinate?" Weight per bushel 53 lbs. The plants are vigorous and healthy and stooling well. They are ten inches high and sixty-six per cent. of the sunk seed produced good plants.

Sample No. 34.—Shrunken, bleached, blistered and soft, with an occasional fairly well developed kernel. Marked: "Frosted wheat," from W. J. Anderson, Grand Forks, Dak.; weight per bushel, 40 pounds (this sample was sown Jan. 8). Eighty-six per cent. of the sunk seed, or about 67 per cent. of the whole sample, produced good plants.

Sample No. 36.—No grade. About one-third of the kernels were fairly well filled out, but blistered, the remainder shrunken with some stack-burned grains. Most of the kernels are quite hard. Better than most damaged wheat this year. Raised by Peter Cornelius, Crookston, Minn. Weight per bushel 51 pounds. This sample was sown Jan. 26th, and now, February 4th, it is five inches high and vigorous. About ninety per cent. of the whole sample has produced good plants.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN GROWING PLANTS IN A GREENHOUSE AND IN THE OPEN GROUND.

It has been found in practice, that many seeds which have but a weak vitality will frequently germinate in the greenhouse, while in the open ground they will not start if the soil or season is very unfavorable. Some of our most reliable seedsmen have found that a simple germination of seeds in moist air, or on cloth or paper, is not sufficient, but that the plants should grow for some time in soil, in order to test their real strength, and that they should be grown by the side of seeds known to be of good quality, so that the test of vitality may be a relative one.

In considering this greenhouse test of seed wheat, and deducting conclusions for guidance in field planting, there are a few important points to be considered.

1st. This wheat was germinated at a temperature ranging from 40 degrees at night to 65 degrees in the day; which is a higher and more favorable temperature than wheat ordinarily has in the open ground.

2d. This wheat was planted one-half inch deep, and had perfect drainage and the proper amount of moisture; while in the open ground the conditions would not, probably, be so favorable.

3d. The season at which these experiments were commenced was very unfavorable for plant growth. The days in January are very short, the plants get comparatively little effect from the very oblique rays of the sun.

4th. Although as high as fifty per cent. of some of the wheat which was soft as well as shrunken has germinated, yet its apparent vitality is not so great as that of wheat which is shrunken but hard. In every test made with wheat that was hard, although it might be shrunken, by rust or other cause, and be graded only as chicken feed, there was a good per cent. of germination and a strong growth. Wheat which does not weigh over 40 pounds to the bushel, such as is considered under numbers 21 to 25, inclusive, uniformly gave a low per cent. of germination, and a little inferior growth, as compared with others of greater weight per bushel.

CONCLUSIONS.

The work of testing this wheat did not devolve upon me, because of my knowledge of raising wheat as a business, but on account of my possessing facilities for growing plants in the winter. Since undertaking these tests, I have become much interested in them, and have endeavored by drawing out the opinions of practical men, to obtain an idea of their practical significance. Submitted herewith will be found the opinions of several experienced wheat men, who are much interested in the subject, and who have kindly allowed me the use of their letters for publication. The general feeling as expressed by those who have examined these tests, is that the conditions under which the samples are growing are exceedingly favorable for growth. One and all express surprise at the high percentage of germination, and the amount of vigor exhibited by these plants, and think that, should we have a favorable season, much of the poor wheat would grow and develop good plants and good crops. I am disposed to be very careful about recommending the planting of poor seed, for I am aware of the millions of dollars that are at stake, and would much prefer to urge extra care in the selection of seed wheat, than to suggest the lowering of the standard even for a single year. For this reason I have given full data in connection with each sample received, and will allow those more particularly interested to draw their own conclusion.

ADDITIONAL EXPERIMENTS.

Since the foregoing experiments were completed, the following additional tests have been made;

Test No. 1.—Feb. 4th, thirteen samples of very much damaged wheat of the grades so abundant this year, together with a sample of No. 1 hard to serve as a basis of comparison, were sown in a box in the greenhouse, in good prairie soil, without manure, one inch deep and kept moderately moist. Feb. 8th. Just as the young blades showed about one-half inch above ground it was subjected to a temperature of twenty-two (22° F) degrees in the open air for three hours. This caused the young sprouts to look very watery but did not seem to injure them. The following day, Feb. 9th, the plants were again placed in the open air for three hours, where the thermometer recorded ten degrees. This time the young leaves were frozen so severely that about three-quarters of an inch of the ends was killed. The plants were now allowed to grow in the greenhouse until the morning of February 11th, by which time they had commenced to grow again and were two inches high. They were then, for the third time, placed in the open air, where the recorded temperature was four degrees above zero with the result that about two inches of the tops were so completely frozen as to be killed outright. I feared they would not recover, but by the morning of the 14th they were again two inches high, and fast outgrowing the damage. Only a very little difference could be seen between the growth and power of recovery of the plants from No. 1 hard wheat and those from very much damaged wheat.

Test No. 2.—This was carried on the same as test number one, only the soil was kept in a muddy condition. The result in this case was that the seed required a little longer time to germanate but the plants recovered from she freezing they were subjected to, appareetly in the same degree as the samples in test number one.

Test No. 3.—This consisted in sowing the seed at the uniform depth of two inches and firmly packing the soil over it. The result in this case, so far as per cent. of germination went, was practically the same as in the foregoing report, where the seed was sown at a depth af only one-half inch.

REMARKS.

If this wheat had been grown at a lower temperature, than was the greenhouse, it would have been hardier and have resisted the freezing much better.

These tests are valuable in that they help to show the vitality of the seed and power to resist unfavorable influences at the most critical period of its growth.

This poor wheat, some of which is frosted only, and some both frosted and rusted, and some only rusted, has given a high per cent. of germination, and shown an amount of vigor which has surprised me.

The wheat considered in the body of this report is, at this date, Feb. 14th, in about the same relative condition as therein reported; and plants from the lightest frosted wheat do not show quite so much vigor as plants from the best grades.

The above innocent-looking little coupon means a good deal.

Most of our readers, probably, are familiar with the name of John B. Alden, Publisher, New York, who has done so much in popularizing and cheapening high-class literature. His edition of above described, one of the most famous books of the century, is a remarkable specimen of his enterprise. A copy of the book, to be seen at this office, printed in large type, on good paper, well and nicely bound in cloth, shows it to be fairly equal to books our readers in years past have been accustomed to pay $1.00, $1.50, or even $2.00 for, his regular price being 50 cents.

In consideration of our placing Mr. Alden's enterprise thus prominently before our readers, and commending it, as we can do most heartily, he has consented to allow us to make the above very remarkable coupon offer to our subscribers. Please notice carefully the simple and reasonable conditions:

1st. Paid in advance subscribers to THE JOURNAL.
2d. To be presented within a specified date.
3d. 25 cents cash with the coupon, and 12 cents postage, if by mail.

The first condition is our requirement. If you have paid us—thank you; it is a pleasure to acknowledge it with the above privilege. If you have not yet paid, the above is an inducement for you to do so at once. If you have a neighbor who "borrows" your paper, or who is not a subscriber, will you kindly tempt him, for us, to subscribe by showing him this notice.

To favor our subscribers as much as practicable we have arranged with Mr. Alden (and this is where the importance of the date comes in) that if subscribers so request all books shall be shipped together in our care, and we will deliver them at our office; the cost of freight will not be over 3 cents a copy, instead of 12 cents postage, by mail.

If this very remarkable opportunity is welcomed by our readers as heartily as we anticipate, we hope to be able to arrange with Mr. Alden to present them other similar opportunities during the year.

A Lesson of The Hour.

Minneapolis Journal.

Benjamin Harrison is President. Grover Cleveland has laid down the office of chief magistrate of a nation of more than sixty millions of people and is again a private citizen.

But not only has the burden of office been transferred from one man to another. The change has involved also the surrender of power by one great party to another great party between which there is now a wider divergence of policy than at any other time since the Democratic declared the war a failure.

It is always a matter for remark by European observers, the subject of monarchical governments, that these changes are made so quietly and with such slight disturbance to the peace of society in America. It would be impossible for them to change rulers or dynasties without serious complications and they are perhaps justified in their failure to understand the ready acquiescence of the defeated in the exaltation of the victorious in this country.

But the events of today suggest a different thought to the citizen of the Republic and to his servant, the office-holder.

When four years ago Grover Cleveland stood where Benjamin Harrison does today the people had been persuaded that a change would be a good thing for the country, and that if the government should be taken away from the party which had held it so long many abuses would be exposed and corrected and the public business would be much more economically done.

There was greater economy for awhile in some directions, at least less money was spent, but there were no exposures of serious abuses and in the end the expenditures were as large as before. There had been nothing gained in that respect. Even civil service reform, to which the new administration was so solemny pledged, failed to make any progress. On the other hand, there were a good many things about the new government that did not please the people at all. They regretted the indifference and the incapability of the chief magistrate to respond to the patriotic feeling of the people when time and place and incident served to arouse such sentiments in their own hearts. They lamented a disappointing want of statesmanship and where they had anticipated commanding ability and great positive force of character they were grieved to discover only mediocrity and obstinacy.

However, they conceded to all this good intentions and might have been content if at this point the chief magistrate had not undertaken, with the consent of his party, still acting possibly with the best intentions, to inaugurate a policy which would have betrayed the industrial and commercial interests of the country to its enemies. The result of that step is seen in the inauguration of a Republican President today in Mr. Cleveland's place.

And as the citizen reflects upon the comparatively uneventful and yet highly educational past four years he is entitled to the comfortable conclusion that the power in this country is his after all, and that his will is supreme, while the office-holder is very forcibly reminded that his tenure is dependent on his intelligent as well as his faithful service of the people who have comitted certain public duties to his hands. And it is well enough for both citizen and office-holder to be frequently reminded of their respective powers and functions. It is encouragement for the one and admonition for the other and wholesome for both.

The Seed Grain Bill.

Cor. Hallock News: I am a farmer, and one of the farmers who suffered most severely by the frost of last fall; so severely indeed that I did not have a bushel of wheat fit either to sow or sell, and so am a fit subject for the seed grain bill, and as such would like to give, through your valuable paper, my opinion of its merits and demerits.

To set forth its merits, I would ask if there was really any need of it, and taking myself as one to whom it would apply, if it were applicable to any one, I answer no, positively no. I had no money it is true with which to buy my seed but I had that which one year of frost cannot kill; I had good credit, so had no trouble in procuring seed, and as I bought my own seed I got it at first cost without any commission to pay, and as I had arrived at the conclusion, by former experiments, that wheat if not too badly frosted will grow, I got my seed for about half the coast at which the government could have furnished it to me.

This I think will prove conclusively that the seed grain bill is altogether superficial, for, surely the state cannot give credit to a citizen who has no credit; and he whose credit is good can get credit in his own county without the intervention of state. Farther is it not a poor advertisement for this county and for all counties to which it applies. It is a libel on Kittson county that she cannot sustain one year of poor crops; and the libel is proved by the contentment of our farmers under the present reverses, and their faith in the country, which has not been perceptibly lessened by the failure of crops this year. OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MARCH 7, 1889.

HALT!

The National Tribune.

Gentlemen of Congress:

The veterans have the floor. They are in order. They rise to a question of the highest privilege—a matter involving their vital interests. They have the right to be heard; to be listened to attentively, and to have their wishes respected.

They won this right at the last election, if not before. They and those who felt with them defeated the present administration, and reversed the majority in congress because of hostility to their interests, and elected a president and congress on the platform of justice to them.

If ever the result of an election had a meaning, the result of that last fall meant that the people of the country believe that the first duty of the nation is to the men who saved its life, and that the discharge of its financial obligations to them must take precedence of everything else.

The veterans demand your earnest attention to this undoubted fact. They insist that you give it the consideration that its importance deserves. You are the servants of the people, bound above all things to observe and carry out the people's will. The people have said in words that admitted of no doubt, that before anything else was done the nation's pledges to the veterans must be redeemed—that this sacred duty must be discharged before any other great step is taken; that it must have precedence over reduction of the revenues, and over every other measure.

The veterans say they have waited long enough—that they have exhibited unexampled patriotism and patience. They waited without a murmur for long years until the money-lenders could be satisfied. Out of their earnings they paid heavy taxes ungrudingly, to pay the last cent required by the bondholders. They have waited until every pressing national need was provided for. They have waited until the treasury vaults were filled to bursting with unneeded money. They submit that, in all conscience, it is an insult to ask them to wait longer.

Their defeat of Mr. Cleveland, and their taking away from his party its control of the House of Representatives, was their indignant and emphatic protest against being compelled to wait any longer. The election of Gen. Harrison and a republican majority in congress was due to their belief that that would put an end to their waiting.

Now, gentlemen of congress, the course marked out for you is clear and unmistakable. It is to halt at once in this revenue tinkering, of every kind and description, and address yourselves, first of all, to the enactment of proper pension legislation. Give the veterans their long-denied rights. Deal with them in the same spirit as the money-lenders were dealt with. Fulfill the nation's pledges to them with the same careful regard to the letter and spirit of the contract. Enact the legislation recommended by the G. A. R. national encampment. Do this at once, before anything else. That done, you can give what attention you please to revenue reform, and whatever else claims your attention.

There is no need of pointing out what will follow a failure to comply with this earnest desire of the veterans and the people at large.

The issues in the last election and the fate of those who thwarted the nation's desire for prompt justice to her defenders are too recent to need to have your memories refreshed. The veterans, more than one million strong, are in no mood for trifling. They will deal with you as summarily as you deal with your predecessors, if you give them the same reason.

The Farmers Will be on Top.

The Western Rural.

The people concerned in the binding twine trust do not like The Rural's advocacy of putting the conspiracy under the farmer's foot and crushing the life out of it. Of course not. The plan was not devised for the enjoyment of these conspirators. It was expected at the beginning that it would cause them considerable uneasiness, and it will give them a great deal more before they get through with it. Farmers, let us go straight ahead to victory in the matter. Do not permit the thought of extra work, inconvenience or loss to occupy our minds one single second. We can afford a little extra trouble and some inconvenience, and if the binding twine people are to have all the profits, we might just as well, and a good deal better, let the profits go in some other direction. We cannot afford to pay twenty or twenty-five cents for twine. That is the whole of the matter; and we shall make more profit by stacking the grain loose than we can if we pay that price for twine. And bear in mind that just one season of battle on this line will be the end of the trust and of every other trust that lives principally upon the farmer. It will be a Waterloo to the schemes that are especially intended to rob the farmers.

The response that we are getting from farmers is grand, glorious and inspiring. In all our advocacy of reforms, through all these long years, we have never been quite so encouraged as we have by the letters that are coming in, in which the writers say: We are with you in the twine fight—we will not use it at trust prices. A pull all together for once will do the business for all time, and we are in the fight we might with advantage spot that portion of the press that under pretense of being "practical" is practical in the line of bolstering up the contemplated twine trust robbery of our wheat growers. We make abstracts below from the hundreds of letters we are receiving: Frank Colo —address not given—writes: I will agree to use no binding twine unless it can be had for a reasonable price. E. A. Hadley, of Nebraska, writes: Every farmer I have talked with agrees to cut and stack loose. They are getting awake up here and are ready for anything reasonable. The following resolution was passed by Farmers Alliance No. 797 of Iowa, and has just been received by us: Resolved, That we, the undersigned farmers, believing in justice and equality and seeing that a trust is formed for the purpose of exacting from us about double the value of binding twine for the harvest of 1889, agree to cut our grain with our harvesters, and use a sheaf carrier and dump the grain loose in windrows, without binding, and stack the straw loose, unless the syndicate is broken and twine furnished at a price not exceeding twelve cents per pound. The resolution is signed by the following: J. C. Kirby, D. C. Slaid, A. B. Watson, E. O. Slaid, Joseph Angstman, Wm Kirby, A. E. Hartson, G. R. D. Kramer, A. Essman, L. Bruns, F. Bruse, H. Alberts, G. Ukena, K. J. Doeden, F. B. Andrews, H. E. W. Loomis, N. Long, G. Stutzman, Charles Bell, Pete Bohlen, Wm. Stock, B. J. Ruiter, F. Beach, A. Stock, C. Windt, J. Bumgarden.

We will give more names next week. The fight is on. The line of battle is strengthening, and we shall achieve a victory, if we all join hands and stand firm.

Cooling Milk.

The Prairie Farmer.

Nothing should be done without a good reson for it, whether the operator knows it or not. Even in case of sickness, it is better to do nothing, except to make the patient as comfortable as possible, than to administer medicine of which you do not know the effects, to cure disease of which you do not know the nature. Don't act on the supposition that you "must do something," whether you know what ought to be done or not. If you do, the chances are many to one that you will do wrong—for usually there is but one right way to many wrong ways.

This applies to dairying, as well as to sickness and other matters. The intelligent dairyman will seek to find a reason for everything he does. It is foolish to act without some definite end in view. To be able to give a reason for everything, marks the difference between the wise and the otherwise.

What is the object in cooling milk? In cheese-making it has a double object—that of delaying the souring of the milk, and that of retarding the rising of the cream. The lower the temperature is run, especially if it comes to a standstill, the slower and more imperfect the separation of the cream, which has but little upward tendency unless the temperature is falling. The cooler the milk is made before being allowed to rest, the better it is for keeping the cream rising.

In butter-making, it is desirable to prevent the temperature from falling, as much as possible, until the milk is set for cream-rising. Every degree lost in temperature causes a loss of cream—that is, reduces the quantity that will rise. There are two reasons for this: Cream rises best on a falling temperature, and hence, every degree the milk is cooled lessens the distance the temperature has to fall, and also the chance the cream has to separate. The other reason is, that the colder the milk gets, the more dense it grows, and hence, the more difficult it is for the globules of cream to rise through the slowly-thickening mass. Still another reason, based on Dr. Babcock's recent discovery, may be given. It is that a little delay in setting the milk not only causes a loss of temperature and greater diversity of fluid, but gives time for the fibrin in the milk to coagulate, thereby entangling the fat-globules in the coagulum.

These would seem to be reasons enough for cooling milk, aside from the fact that the temperature naturally falls to that of surrounding atmosphere, and artificial means would have to be employed to prevent the milk from cooling—if that were disirable. But much experience has shown that it is not. To keep up the temperature would hasten souring, while a fixed high temperature would militate against the rising of the cream to any considerable extent. The advantages of both time and a falling temperature would be nearly lost.

The manner of cooling has not appeared to be of much consequence, where all the other conditions are right—except that it must be rapid in deep setting, or the milk will sour and thicken before the cream is up. The practice of excluding the atmosphere is of comparatively recent origin, and like that of raising cream in a vacuum, has not yet been shown to have any special advantage—unless it be to exclude an impure atmosphere—while open setting and absorption of oxygen, in a pure atmosphere, are claimed by good authority to have some important advantage, which a few experiments have seemed to confirm. Among these are development of flavor and color.

T. D. C.

The Cattle of Holland.

The Prairie Farmer.

The Netherlands, including Friesland, Groninger, Zeeland, Gelderland, Overyssel and Flanders have, from remote antiquity, been celebrated for fine milking breeds of cattle. The now celebrated Holstein-Friesian cattle have, under this name—probably a misnomer—attained wide celebrity in the United States, from the immence messes of milk which they give. The Flanders cow was selected by Guenon as the representative of the best milking qualities in a cow.

There are variations in color of the several varieties of the Netherland cattle, from nearly black to nearly white, and white belted. The Holland cow and the Friesian—now called the Holstein-Friesian in the United States—are probably the best representatives of the improved varieties of a race of cattle that, in the days of Cæsar, where required to pay tribute to the Roman Empire, partly in kind, and probably for the reason of their superiority—in those long past days—in milk and flesh.

It will not be necessary to enter into a discussion of the merits of the several subdivisions of the race. It is enough to say that in the early days of the development of the Durham in England—now called Shorthorn—it was probably due to a cross of the Netherlands cattle that the Shorthorns to-day show such wonderful heredity in the occasional production of great milkers, as well as deep-milking families of Shorthorns where this heredity has been carefully preserved.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION

Of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company.

We, the undersigned, do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of incorporation under title one (1), of chapter thirty-four (34), of the general laws of the State of Minnesota, and the several acts of the legislature of said State, amendatory thereto, and for that purpose have adopted and signed the following articles of incorporation.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this corporation shall be

"The Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company."

The general nature of its business shall be to construct, maintain and operate for the transportation of persons and property for hire, a main line of railroad with one or more side-tracks, or lines of rails, and branch lines. The main line to commence at some point on Lake Superior at or near the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, extending thence in a westerly and northwesterly direction through the city of Crookston, to the international boundary line, at some point on the northern boundary line of Kittson County, in the State of Minnesota, with a branch line extending from said main line, at the city of Crookston, in a westerly direction through Polk County to the Red River. And also a branch line extending from the city of Crookston, in a southeasterly direction to the city of Brainerd, in Crow Wing County, Minnesota.

ART. 2. The principal place of business of said Railroad Company, shall be at Crookston, Minnesota.

ART. 3. The time of commencement of the said corporation shall be on the first day of March, 1889, and the same shall continue for a period of fifty years.

ART. 4. The amount of the capital stock of the said corporation shall be five millions of dollars, ($5,000,000), and the same shall be divided into fifty thousand (50,000) shares of one hundred dollars ($100) each, and all capital stock subscribed for shall be paid in at the times and in the amounts required by resolution of the Board of Directors.

ART. 5. The highest amount of indebtedness or liability to which said corporation shall at any time be subject shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000).

ART. 6. The names and places of residence of the persons forming this association for incorporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague, Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone. William Anglim,
John R. McKinnon, John McLean,
John Locken,

all of whom reside at the City of Crookston, in Polk County, Minnesota.

ART. 7. The names of the first Board of Directors of said corporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague. Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone. William Anglim.
John R. McKinnon. John McLean.
John Locken.

The government of said corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of seven (7) directors, to be elected by and from the stockholders annually, as hereafter provided. The annual meeting for such election shall be held at the office of the company at the City of Crookston, on the first Monday of February of each year, and until their successors are elected and qualified the said directors above named shall respectively continue to be such directors. The directors shall at their annual meeting to be held immediately after the annual meeting of the stockholders, elect a President, a Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Until the annual meeting as aforesaid:

Robert J. Montague shall be President.
John McLean, Vice-President.
Edmund M. Walsh, Secretary.
William Anglim, Treasurer.

In case of the resignation of any of said officers or directors, or their inability or refusal to act, their places shall be filed by the remainder of said Board of Directors, at any meeting called and held for that purpose. If for any cause the annual meeting for the election of the officers and directors shall not be held at the time above specified, it may be held at any other time that the directors may appoint for that purpose.

In witness whereof, the said incorporators have hereunto set their hands and seals this 16th day of February, A. D. 1889.

ROBERT J. MONTAGUE, (Seal.)
JOHN MCLEAN, (Seal.)
EDMUND M. WALSH, (Seal.)
WILLIAM ANGLIM, (Seal.)
JOHN LOCKEN, (Seal.)
JOHN R. MCKINNON, (Seal.)
NATHAN P. STONE. (Seal.)

In presence of O. O. Christianson, Alex. McKinnon, witnesses to all of the foregoing signatures.

Speech of Col. Graves.

On the D. & W. Bills.

While the House had under consideration the D. & W. forfeiture bill and the bill to extend the grant, Speaker Graves made a speech which, so clearly sets forth the situation, giving reasons why the road should not be hampered by adverse legislation, that we present it as reported in the daily papers of St. Paul, so that should there be any doubting Thomases in our midst they may get a correct view of the matter. The forfeiture bill was killed and the bill granting three years extension passed by a vote of 66 to 30:

I do not propose to speak long, or to do more than to clear the ground for others. This legislature is not asked to give a land grant. The first bill before you proposes to forfeit the Duluth & Western grant. If there is no such grant in existence, and your action now would be to make one, what is the sense of reason for that bill? Our enemies have proved our case for us. You see the point. We ask you not to forfeit it, but to say squarely, by passing the other bill, that you will not forfeit it at present and will give the road an extension of years. You have the example of every other legislature of this state that has been called on to decide such a question. They have always given extension of these grants, and the result has been that they have secured the railroads, developed the state and made it what it is to day. In 1875, when I was in the legislature, a grant of swamp lands was made to aid a railroad from Duluth to the Mesaba range, about seventy miles north of Duluth. We told the members then that we believed there was iron up in that country. They laughed at the idea, but they said we were good fellows and the swamp land wasn't worth anything anyway unless there was a railroad built up there, and so gave us the chance—half as a joke and half as taking a chance in a lottery. We pooled in some money, sent it up to the Mesaba range, dug some of the ore, and upon being assayed it proved to be poor stuff. The hoped-for enterprise fell flat and was practically abandoned. In 1878 the legislature said, as the Iron Range scheme is dead, we will give the grant to the Duluth & Winnipeg, and passed that act, providing that in case of forfeiture by the Iron Range road the other should have it. In 1880 the term for the Iron Range road expired. It forfeited its grant. Then the D. & W. people went to work and spent three or four hundred thousand dollars on surveys, grading and tunnel work near Duluth. They thus secured vested rights in the grant. In 1883 it had been found that iron ore of good quality existed at Vermilion range, twenty-five miles beyond the Mesaba range, and the Iron Range project revived. The legislature waived their forfeiture, set the road on its feet again, and very wisely, as the result has shown, caused that development which has now placed Minnesota in the front rank of iron producing states. From 1880 to this time great efforts have been made to enlist capital in the Duluth & Winnipeg road. They have not been successful until this last year, but now have built twenty miles of the road and will build the rest within three years if this legislature says so.

The question is, shall you say so? Is it best for the interests of the whole state, not for Duluth merely, or for the Red River Valley, but for all the state? This railroad is to run from Duluth northwesterly to the boundary, and so to Winnipeg. It is through a country of rocks, and swamps, and woods. A country which cannot and will not be developed by ordinary means. Wagon roads cannot be built there at less than $300 to $500 a mile. New settlers cannot stand that, and so you see it to-day a wilderness, while all the rest of the state is becoming crowded with people. One-third of the territory of the state is comprised in the country to be opened up by this road. The state now owns about 6,000,000 acres of swamp land there. The school fund has two sections of land in each of some 600 townships there, about 600 sections of which will be directly affected in value by the building of this road. To-day all that state land has but a nominal value, except such bits as have good pine on them and are near enough to the Mississippi for the logs to be floated down to Minneapolis. Build a railroad through that country and the same result will come as has followed in the country traversed by the Iron Range road. I call your attention to the statement made by State Auditor Braden. Before the Iron Range road was built no one wanted the state and school lands there; wouldn't take them and pay the taxes. Now we make frequent sales at $5 an acre and upward, and Mr. Braden is now drawing up an act to authorize him to make mineral royalty leases on such of these lands as may have mineral in them. Leases which may bring in an income to the state of $100,000 a year from a single quarter section. Now, to raise 500,000 acres of school lands from a nominal value up to $1,000,000 or $2,500,000, and 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 acres of swamp lands up in similar proportions is to make a great deal of money for the state. I doubt if you would save as much by cutting off every clerk and door keeper attached to both these houses. But there is a greater thing than that. Minnesota is to-day largely agricultural. Its people want a near-by market at good prices for the products of the farm. The region up there is not capable of producing food supply for generations to come. Any population there must be engaged in mineral and timber production. They will consume your meats and vegetables and breadstuffs. They will buy and use your horses and cattle and all the products of the farms. You cannot ship vegetables to Yew York, Pennsylvania or Liverpool to advantage—they can go to these iron and timber regions of your own state, and your land which is devoted to raising them will net an income of $50 to $200 per acre instead of the $10 or $15 if devoted to wheat. In short, you must develop the northern half of Minnesota if you want farming to pay in the southern half. A fair presentation of this case cannot be made without allusion to the influences that are at work about here to have you forfeit this grant. There is, of course, a great railroad company which very naturally does not want a competing line built into this country. Now, I have nothing but kindly feelings towards the railroads, and that one in particular, and will help them in all proper ways, but they must not send their paid lobbyists around here to influence members and work real injury to the whole state without its being shown up. This is a poor time for monopolists, and a poor time for members of the legislature to show by their votes that they are serving monopolies. The people can see through such things, and will surely draw the correct conclusions. The other day I heard a gentleman argue before the public lands committee for the forfeiture of this grant, and next morning a newspaper said Gen. Blank appeared for the people of the state of Minnesota! Now, fellow representatives, we have had a good many jokes among ourselves this winter, but that is the greatest joke of all—it ought to make any respectable horse laugh! I am very sorry to see one other influence at work here. There are some narrow-minded and short-sighted men in the Twin cities that want every railroad killed that does not run into their limits. They propose also to monopolize at least all this part of the earth, and are working to that end. It is a despicable policy and it is very short-sighted, for the northern part of the state, if developed, will surely enrich and benefit the cities. I confidently hope that such narrowness will have no weight with this body. Stamp on it, gentlemen! Say the state of Minnesota shall go on, and its progress shall not be impeded by private greed or hungry monopolists. The members of this house have been more than kind to me, but I have just this one personal request to make this session: Please give me your votes for this measure; help me in this act of justice and wisdom. The state of Minnesota is a young and lusty child, with growing strength and splendid possibilities of future development. But look at it for a moment—the child is but half developed. One side, the side looking towards the south and warmed by the genial rays of the sun, you see a complete, well rounded-out system, while on the cold northern side the child is undeveloped. But on the northeast we do see something; there is a rudimentary arm, so to speak, stretching out a little, and as the little fellow lays before us kicking and crowing in the exuberance of youth, what do we see in the grasp of that chubby little fist? Open it. Why it is iron ore—sparkling, specular hemdtile. The little fellow in his struggles to use his muscles has opened to our view a mine of wealth. Let us go on and develop the rest of that side—it evidently pays. Give him another leg to stand upon, so he may walk erect and be a man among the rest. Let him rest the new foot on the fertile boundary of Manitoba, and give him the leverage of a new position from which to strike great blows of industry and perseverance in the work of life. Shall we expect a lop-sided, misshapen dwarf to attain to the glories and the power of sound and vigorous manhood? No, indeed! Then, now in these young days, develop this body politic all around. Rather specially stimulate the backward and weakly side of our state, and make it all ready for the glorious future which certainly awaits it.

THE LAMPLIGHTER COUPON.

Our Book Coupon No. 2 presents another remarkable result of Alden's Literary Revolution. A copy of the book to be seen at this office, which Mr. Alden sells for 50 cents, is printed in large type on good paper, excellent printing and tasteful cloth binding, and is every way superior to the edition formerly published at the price of $1.50.

Few readers of books have not heard of The Lamplighter, which with two or three exceptions, is the most popular and widely circulated novel ever published by an American author.

Wholly free from any attempt at sensationalism it is intensely interesting, and though not a theological novel it is thoroughly Christian in its tone. We congratulate our readers on our ability to offer them a book so every way excellent, on such surprisingly easy terms. Please notice carefully the simple and reasonable conditions on which it is offered:

1st. Paid in advance subscribers to THE JOURNAL.
2d. To be presented within a specified date.
3d. 25 cents cash with the coupon, and 12 cents postage, if by mail.

The first condition is our requirement. If you have paid us—thank you; it is a pleasure to acknowledge it with the above privilege. If you have not yet paid, the above is an inducement for you to do so at once. If you have a neighbor who "borrows" your paper, or who is not a subscriber, will you kindly tempt him, for us, to subscribe by showing him this notice.

To favor our subscribers as much as practicable we have arranged with Mr. Alden (and this is where the importance of the date comes in) that if subscribers so request all books shall be shipped together in our care, and we will deliver them at our office; the cost of freight will not be over 3 cents a copy, instead of 12 cents postage, by mail.

The Railroad Situation.

The Western Rural.

Happily for the people at large the ropes are steadily tightening about the railroad iniquity, by which name the reckless, consciencless issue of watered stock may be denominated. The interstate commerce law points directly to the ultimate wiping out of this stock which farmers and other shippers have been compelled to pay dividends upon for so long a time. The roads cannot pool; they cannot enter into any agreement by which they can keep up rates. They have tried various plans. The presidents met in Chicago recently and tried to patch up an agreement, but some of the roads would not have it; and now the railroad people express the belief that some of the roads will go into the hands of receivers while others will be compelled to pass their dividends. We think that this prediction will be true, but it is not to be regretted. The end to be aimed at is to blot this watered stock out of existence. The roads themselves cannot do it. They have sold the stock and somebody has pocketed the proceeds, and the poor people have been paying dividends upon it. The high salaried, well clothed schemers against the industries of the country have committed a colossal robbery, and forced the people to save them from the penitentiary perhaps by compelling them to pay high enough rates to make their watered stock profitable to the holders. The only way out of the scrape is to put the road in the hands of a receiver, and then to blame "Granger legislation" for the catastrophe to "honest enterprise."

The holders of this stock will suffer, it is true, and they have purchased it honestly enough. Certainly we wish this class of people no harm, but they themselves will not claim that our farmers should be taxed to save the victims of a great corporate conspiracy. Perhaps they have a cause of action, both civil and criminal, against the men who have defrauded them. We advise them "to see a lawyer." But we are specially interested just now in having our own class escape the unjust taxation that this watered stock has laid upon them, and had just as lief they would escape through the action of the courts in putting the roads into bankruptcy as any other way. We shall advocate the escape at all events, and shall continue to arouse public opinion against the iniquity of railroad management, whatever may be the results to the roads. They have been traveling along the lane a long time, but it is a long lane that never has a turn, and we are getting to the turn in this one pretty rapidly.

American Agriculturist: The Hereford's characteristics are well known. The massive form, kindly white faces, waxy horns, short legs and bright red color, marked with white beneath, on the withers and brush, are familiar features to all who have any knowledge of American cattle. The great points of the Hereford's are: first, their greatest weight is in the parts from which the best beef is cut; and second, they will thrive and fatten on pasturage which would scarcely support some other breeds, though they also respond very readily to liberal feeding.

Fight the Twine Trust.

Western Rural.

The battle against the contemplated twine trust goes bravely on. Hundreds of letters are being received by us, endorsing our plan of crushing the outrage, and Alliance after Alliance is sending in resolutions endorsing The Rural and pledging co-operation. The Rural is always grateful for the endorsement of its friends and for the kind words they so often speak of it. But just now we are most interested in crushing this proposed attempt to rob our farmers; and hope that all the energy of our readers will be turned in that direction. We have received just three letters which either hint at or suggest some other ylan than that proposed by The Rural. One that suggested that it was impractical to carry out our plan, was noticed in a recent issue. The scores and hundreds of letters we are receiving, in which one sentence is always conspicuous, viz: We will use no twine at trust prices, show very distinctly that it is to be made practical. One writer even went so far as to say that he didn't believe it paid to use twine nine times out of ten. However that may be, the declaration that our friends will not use trust twine is very general.

One writer says that he was contemplating buying a self-binder the coming summer but will not now do it. This opens another branch of the subject. It brings the machine men distinctly among the victims of this trust greed, and we shall soon have their active opposition to the conspiracy. The more help the better. Two friends have written us that they think it would be better for the farmers to organize companies for the manufacture of their own twine. But there is nothing that can be obtained out of which to manufacture it. The syndicate have got their hands upon all the raw material. That was the first step they took. It may be depended upon that the conspirators have got a firm grip upon us, unless we refuse to use the twine. It is possible that by the time the twine is needed the trust will find the determination to stuck the grain loose so general that it will feel compelled to keep the price as low as formerly and even to make it lower. At all events our only hope is in saying that we will not buy twine at an extortionate price and stick to it.

The Duluth & Winnipeg Land Grant.

Duluth Tribune: A twin city newspaper has at last been found which does not view everything connected with Duluth with an envious eye, and which is fair enough to take up arms against the proposed forfeiture of the Duluth & Winnipeg land grant. The St. Paul Dispatch is alluded to, and the following is taken from an editorial in its columns yesterday.

"This measure should be treated on its intrinsic merits. The land grant in question was made in good faith. It was made in pursuance of a settled and recognized policy of the state at that time. Whatever change has sience taken place in public sentiment on the subject of railroad land grants should not be allowed to have a retroactive effect so as to effect a former bonafide transaction. The construction of the road in question will materially aid in the development of a portion of this state which is sadly in need of development, and the people of that section naturally enough oppose any line of policy which will throw obstacles in the path of that enterprise, if it does not wholly defeat it."

It will be seen that the Dispatch takes the only real legal side of the question, and bravely tells the twin city sympathizers with the forfeiture, that their position is a false one. This is what Duluth has been trying to tell them for some time, but they do not apparently care how false their position, if it will only revert to their own aggrandisment and to the hindrance of Duluth's interests. That the proposed forfeiture will be defeated by the honest members of the legislature, however seems now to be a certainty, and it will be no more of a triumph for Duluth than for right.

Boiled Down.

American Agriculturist: One of the essentials of soiling is a fertile soil.

Every farm ought to have its experimental patch.

The early killed is the easily killed weed, and the weed that robs the crop least.

If you are careful to keep the furrows straight, you will do faster and better plowing.

A diversity of crops distributes work, receipts and expenses more evenly through the year and through the years.

In no other way can the farmer so radically do the work of nature to his advantage as by using tile; for underdrainage both lengthens the season and deepens the soil.

The smaller the field the more fence required and the more land taken from cultivation. The more oblong the field, the more fence required to inclose a given area; convesely, the nearer a square is the field the less fence is required.

The Cabinet.

Minneapolis Journal.

A President's cabinet is a good deal of a personal matter. If it suits him it ought to suit other people. The members of the cabinet are supposed to be the President's aids The country looks to him for results: it is comparatively immaterial though whom the results are accomplished.

It is naturally interested, however, in the composition of a body of men who are to be his advisers when he desire counsel and in its estimate of the men whom he has called around him it feels a greater or lesser confidence in his success.

President Harrison's cabinet is something of a surprise. With two or three exceptions in the more prominent places no one could have predicted his choice when he was elected. The appointment of Mr. Blaine was expected, Mr. Wanamaker was regarded as a possibility and Gov. Rush was spoken of, but not even Mr. Windom, who is probably the most fortunate selection of them all, was thought of till within the last month, while Proctor, Tracey, Noble and Miller were not named in anybody's guess.

The public has already made up its mind with regard to Mr. Blaine. He is expected to radically reform the state department and to inaugurate a very different policy from that of the late administration. President Harrison's conservatism, however, is relied upon to hold his brilliant premier in check. That is the plain English of the public feeling with regard to Blaine. Thousands who admire his ability, but doubt his judgement, are willing to see him at the head of the state department with such a man as Harrison in the President's chair.

Mr. Windom is fully in sympathy with Mr. Harrison on the tariff question and it was the distinguished financial wisdom and ability which he has already displayed as secretary of the treasury that secured him the appointment this time. Mr. Wanamaker is expected to give satisfaction because he is a successful business man. Gen. Tracey is not well known to the country, but is in a position to make himself of great service. There is something for the secretary of the navy to do now. Of course we must have a secretary of war, and why not such an estimable a man as Gov. Proctor? The Northwest is also gratified at the appointment of Gov. Rusk, whose stern virtues make him to be highly honored, though what business President Harrison has with a secretary of agriculture is a question which he has probably never undertaken to answer, being in no sense responsible for the creation of the office.

The appointments of Mr. Noble and Mr. Miller are undoubtedly the result of a desire to have men in these responsible places whose qualification have shown them to be such, through long intimate personal acquaintance, as to give the President the utmost confidence in their faithfulness to him. Particularly does this seem to have been the case in the appointment of Mr. Miller, with whose habits of thought and legal attainments President Harrison is thoroughly familiar. The appointment of Mr. Noble may also have a special political significance as Missouri is in one sense a Southern state and is also making rapid progress toward Rrepublicanism.

Altogether, the cabinet is strong where strength is especially needed and respectable everwhere.

Fergus Falls Journal: A gentleman who has just returned from Washington says that he saw Congressman Comstock on his arrival there and that he had almost as much baggage as Tom Lowry had on his return from his European trip, and it was of much greater value—to those whose hopes it contained. But the congressman was sorely distressed. Like the man who was asked to hold the baby, he did not know what to do with it. Some one suggested that he have it dumped into the Potomac. He didn't want to do this, for if he did he could never come back and face his constitutents again. Then what a relief it would be not to see a constituent for twenty-four hours! But there was no rest for the weary; and his term was just beginning. Even yet not a single plum had been gathered. The congressman looked as if he would gladly trade his election certificate for a return trip ticket to the peace, quiet and comfort of his own home at Moorhead.

A Damaging Measure.

St. Paul Daily News.

The House has passed and the Senate has under consideration a bill regulating the rate of interest in Minnesota which, if it should become a law, will seaiously affect the business interest of the state. Minnesota is not sufficiently wealthy to bar out outside capital by prohibitory legislation. The great progress made by both cities and country during the past twenty years has been the result of bringing in foreign capital, and it will be suicidal to shut the door in the face of what is a prime necessity to our further development.

The bill in question positively forbids the charging of a rate above 8 per cent either by the way of commissions or any other device. Under the existing law, while 7 per cent is legal rate, 10 per cent is allowable. While as a rule the majority of real estate loans do not exceed 8 per cent, and many are for a less rate, there is no wisdom in prohibiting people who need money, and have the security to offer, from obtaining it. Any one familiar with financial affairs knows that a sufficient amount of money to meet many of the demands of business and improvement cannot be obtained unless the lender secures 8 per cent, and if the borrower desires to pay the agent who secures the loan a commission of 2 per cent, he should not be forbidden that privilege. If he is, there will be a stagnation in our advancement. The loan agency is as legitimate a business as merchandise, and the services of the agent are entitled to compensation as much as other professional service.

The value of money is regulated by the same laws of supply and demand as apply to other commodities, and while laws forbidding usury are wise and just, there is just as much danger of going to the other extreme. What would be thought of a bill arbitrarily limiting the legal rate a farmer should receive for his wheat, regardless of what the demand might be? There are wise and just laws against forestalling the markets and making combinations to unfairly advance the price of necessities of life, but no law attempts to regulate the price of bread-stuffs growing out of supply and demand. There is no more justice or wisdom in legislation ruinous to legitimate business, than there would be in legislation to curtail the production of cereals.

The senate should be sufficiently wise and conservative to see that the bill in question does not become a law.

Waiting for Something to Do.

United Presbyterian.

Waiting for something to do is often the situation of Christian people, and good ones, too, who really wish to be useful. But the opportunity never seems to come to them. They probably look for something large and striking, or for that which will yield them immediate fruitage; or perhaps they think individual effort is useless, and that they must be made part of an organization, or at least be one of a committee. The mistakes made by such persons are the reasons for much sluggishness and want of progress in the Churches and among Christians everywhere. In general, the little things need to be done. There are many of them, and they are always at hand, and by their very character offer opportuninities for those who are capable of doing them. And for the most of us, these little things are best adapted to our capacities. The great ones are for the great natures, and of these there are only a few. If only Christians will learn that a smile, a kindly word, a helpful visit, a generous ministry—that something of this kind done as it is needed, or is appropriate, and as part of the every day life, is useful and acceptable service, how full of energy and music will the Churches become.

Fergus Falls Journal: About the meanest thing which we have heard of lately is the advertisment of a Pelican Rapids man in a Minneapolis paper stating that he would give a young lady $50,000 to marry him within six months. The ad wound up by saying "enclose a two cent stamp for return postage." A special mail service has been put in on the branch to accommodate the increasing business, and the advertiser is making his fortune selling the postage stamps which he receives.

W. G. COOKE, Publisher.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MARCH 14, 1889.

'Round Home.

Wm. Watts says he will not under any circumstances consent to run for mayor.

W. C. Andrew, representing Averill, Carpenter & Co., was in the city on Tuesday.

Miss Eunice Copeland entertained a number of her little lady friends on Thursday evening of last week.

J. P. Lundin, of Stephen, was in the city on Monday, renewing old acquaintances, but talking no politics.

Geo. J. McManus goes down to St. Paul this evening to see about it. He goes to look after the—usury bill.

E. D. Childs came up form St. Paul for a few days this week. He is hopeful for the D. & W. bill in the senate.

Bro. Stevens, of the Warren Register, was in the city on Monday. He anticipates good times for the coming summer.

See B. C. Jorgenson's notice of wheat for sale elsewhere in this issue. Mr. Jorgenson has the finest sample we have seen and his price is very reasonable.

Wheat crazy. The best price offered is 87 cents and none of that kind for sale. The only 1 Hard wheat there is in the county is held for seed at $1.25 per bushel.

"Baby carriages were not affected by the frost or blight and we have harvested a large crop of A 1. Call and examine them" is what F. E. Hertz & Co., say of their elegant stock in that line.

Dave Welsh was brought before Esq. Lewis on Monday on a charge of getting slightly mixed up as to the ownership of Barnes & Slocum's groceries. The Judge sent him up to hotel de Paulsrud to await the decision of the district court in the case.

S. F. Markham intends to start for California the last part of the week, to be gone all summer probably. His family will remain in the city. Mr. M. has the agency for the best Accident Insurance Co. in existence.

L. K. Aaker went out to interview the Thirteen last week and reports having had a nice visit with many of his old friends out there. L. K. says a trip out there is like unto an oasis in the desert of life, refreshing to the weary spirit and invigorating socially.

Sheriff Paulsrud drove down to his farm last week to see about the spring's work. His handsome deputy went out to the 13 Tps. meanwhile and reports that the farmers out there are just finishing picking their orange crop and are now dragging, just for greens.

Messrs. Ellington, Anglim and Montague returned from St. Paul this week and report that the bonding bill will no doubt pass with Sampson's sanction. The reason he assigns for delay is on account of the drainage bill. He promised to introduce the bill on Tuesday, the 13th.

F. E. Hertz & Co., display an elegant line of wall paper this spring. The stock is so arranged that one may see how it will look when put on the wall and thus be enabled to make a suitable selection. They make a specialty of wall papers and are able to suit any taste, and any purse.

What makes F. E. Hertz & Co's., fruit and confectionery store so popular is a conundrum that we cannot guess unless it is the fact that their store is so neat their stock always new and fresh neatly and temptingly displayed and the pains taken by them to supply their customers with the best at the most reasonable rates. They invite a call from everybody.

On Tuesday D. Jacobus put globe burners for incandescent lights into the office at the Commercial hotel and now mine host Bemis feels all-same like a boy again. Arrangments will soon be made by which this system can go into general use in the city, which will prove a great convenience and we will wonder how we ever got along without them.

The report of the committee who went to St. Paul to see Mr. Sampson does not seem to be very encouraging to our people, who fear that he will either refuse to pass the bill or will so amend it as to defeat their wishes. If Mr. Sampson is a man of honor, as we believe he is he will keep his word and pass the bill as it is. He came before a meeting of our citizens on Feb. 23d, where the bill was thoroughly discussed and then and there gave his sacred word of honor to the citizens of Crookston that he would pass that bill right away after a certain date. On that pledged word he can neither amend nor neglect to pass the bill.

H. A. Mason and Dave Robinson returned in safety from Washington last week. Report having had a grand time, but could not see anybody there owing to the dense crowds. Herb says the report that was circulated here that he was to call off at the inaugural ball must be mixed, as the nearest he could get to that institution was across the street. He brought along some samples of oranges as big as your head, (unless you've just been elected, been to the inaugural ball, been out 'o nights or somedings like dot,) and as handsome as a pumpkin chromo. The boys say they were tired to death, but think it paid to be there.

DIED.

At his residence in this city, on Friday, March 8th, 1889, after a long and painful illness, Reuben Reynolds, aged 68 years. Mr. Reynolds was born in 1821, at Covington, Genessee County, N. Y. In his youth he studied for the ministry and was ordained a Methodist Episcopal clergyman: afterwards he preached several years as a Unitarian. In 1855 he came to Minnesota, locating at Rochester, where he served as clerk of the court, one term, and as judge of probate, two. In 1870, he moved to Alexandria, associating himself with Hon. Knute Nelson in the practice of the law. From thence he went to Otter Tail County, moving from there in 1872 to Detroit, in Becker Co., where he filled the position of Receiver in the U. S. Land Office at that place. In 1876 he went to Minneapolis and entered into partnership with John W. Arctander in the practice of law. In 1879 he was appointed by Judge Stearns, Clerk of the Court for Polk County and came to this city, which has since been his residence. For four years he was associated with Wm. Watts, as attorney-at-law, and it is said of him that he tried the first case ever tried before a district court in Polk County. This was in the primitive days and in lieu of the court house, Judge Stearns mounted a stump, Judge Reynolds as an attorney, occupied a log, and W. F. Ball as the other attorney, another log. The court room was, as near as we can recollect, in front of the present Lake View House. When an associate Judge was allowed this district, Judge Reynolds was appointed, and it was while serving his first term that he was stricken with the malady from which he never recovered. He was a life long republican, always taking a very active part in every campaign, working day and night, sometimes, for the success of his cause. He was a man of very deep, strong convictions, and in the cause of temperance he was a radical. The settlers of this county have reason to remember the interest he took in the indemnity land question, as he labored hard in their behalf. The Judge was an easy, fluent talker, plain, earnest and convincing, and never took the floor unless he had something to say. In 1844 he was married at La Monte, Michigan, to Miss Lucia A. Tucker, of Vermont. Eight children were born to them, of whom four are now living, Mrs. L. D. Dagget, of Erie, Pa., Mrs. Minnie Ellis, of California, George and Fred, who were the only ones able to be present during the last sad hours. Rev. Mr. Staples, Unitarian minister of St. Cloud, held services at the Congregational church on Sunday at 4 o'clock, giving a brief review of a long life; the casket was profusely covered with flowers, and the church was filled to overflowing with the neighbors and friends gathered to pay the last say respects to their departed friend and counsellor. The Polk County Bar Association attended in a body. The remains were taken to Alexandria for interment.

Last week THE JOURNAL printed and sent to all of the towns we were able to reach before town meeting day, the following resolution:

RESOLVED, That we, the undersigned, farmers of Polk County, Minn., believing in justice and equality, and seeing that a trust is formed for the purpose of exacting from us about double the value of binding twine for the harvest of 1889, agree to cut our grain with our harvesters and use a sheaf carrier and dump the grain loose in windrows without binding and stack the straw loose, unless the syndicate is broken and twine furnished at a price not exceeding fourteen cents per pound.

The town of Gentilly was the first to respond with a list of 68 names. If the 30 towns we were able to reach in time to have the matter attended to on town-meeting day respond in like manner, the result will show that there is a good deal of independence in Polk County. In order to make this more effective, every town should have one of these resolutions signed by every resident farmer. We have enough on hand to supply one copy to each town and will be glad to do so on application. Drop us a card and receive a copy by mail, get it filled out and return to us. These lists are to be forwarded to the Western Rural, of Chicago, and will be used to help break the trust. The resolution is the same that the Farmers' Alliance has adopted, and should there be names enough obtained to make a material difference in the amount of twine used, the result will be that twine will be no higher here than heretofore. If not, it is liable to go to 25 or 30 cents per pound—a price that no farmer can afford to pay. Send to THE JOURNAL office for these resolutions and let them be numerously signed.

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL: The veteran newspaper man, H. P. Hall, has taken charge of the St. Paul Daily News and we notice a great improvment in that paper. If anybody kin make anything of the News, Hall kin.

Ada Herald: As H. P. Hall did not take charge of the News for several days after the above was in type; it required wonderful foresight to "notice a great improvment in that paper." Anybody could notice a great need of improvment, but Bro. Cooke was a little too previous in his "notice."

Wrong you are, Bro. Phillips, THE JOURNAL had not been favored with the News on exchange until Mr. Hall took charge, and it was on receipt of the first number noting the change in management, that we wrote the above. That was the first intimation of a change that we had had.

Fairfax, Minn.

The Last Kick from Sockdolager.

Last week the following telegram was received at the U. S. Land Office:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7, 1889.

Register and Receiver U. S. Land Office, Crookston, Minn.: A law having been enacted by Congress that no public lands of the United States, except in the State of Missouri, shall be subject to private entry, you will permit no sale or location at private entry in your district.

S. M. STOCKSLAGER, Com.

Why the State of Missouri should be favored above all others we fail to see clearly. Anyhow it don't matter as we have but little of that kind of land in this district.

(Communicated.)

GARDEN, Minn., March 7, 1889.

ED. JOURNAL:—County division talk and scheming seems to be the order of the day. The latest is from the McIntosh Tribune. It says that "Crookston and Fosston are working a scheme to divide east of range forty-three, and if such a thing is done they will find opposition from more than one quarter." I don't know where the opposition will come from, but I do know it would be the only right way to divide the county. Our town would be situated the farthest from the county seat of any in the county; but we will be satisfied, I think, to a man, and it is the only division we will be satisfied with. We belong to the original Polk County, and all we ask is to get leave to stay in it. If the Thirteen Towns want to divide, as I suppose they do, for they say that they are ready and dead ripe for division (and perhaps for offices!) then let us all help them to get rid of that fraction of Polk County which lies west of the Empire (or Kaiserdom) of the Thirteen Towns.

Died.

In this city on Friday last, Roy, only child of Joseph and Emma Mathews, aged six years and three months. For a number of years the little fellow had been a great sufferer from a disease of the hip and although all that loving parents could do was done for him it was ail of no avail and he passed away as before stated. The funeral was largely attended on Sunday.

Will Boycott Twine.

Special to the Globe.

Sioux City, Io., March 9—The binding twine trust is becoming greatly alarmed at the actions of the farmers of many Iowa counties in organizing for resisting the demands for an increased price for twine, by declaring that they will lay aside self-binders next harvest and used the rake and bind by hand if the price is not reduced. In Webster a formal organization has been perfected, and in many other counties steps in that direction have been taken. Unless the price is reduced its use will be almost entirely discontinued in North Iowa.

Beltrami Telaugraphs.

BELTRAMI, March 12, 1889.

At the annual town meeting to-day the following officers for the town of Reis were elected:

Supervisors.—J. E. Johnson, Chair'm. O. N. Olslund, Jas. Murphy.

Town Clerk.—D. C Hallock.

Treasurer.—E. W. Johnson.

Assessor.—K. O. Flakne,

Justice of the Peace.—W. J. Nickle.

Constables.—H. B. Budd, J. J. Carey.

Road Overseers.—J. F. Aagard, Dan. Sullivan.

Poundmaster.—I. W. Webb.

$565 was appropriated for the revenue, bridge and poor fund.

Mesmorism is becoming popular in Beltrami.

All of our best farmers have signed a resolution denouncing the twine trust.

Will the county commissioners explain why so many applicants for seed grain from this place were refused aid?

Mr. Wells the new proprietor of the Reis farm is here inspecting the property.

EDNA.

Is it Watered Already?

In its issue of Monday, March 4th the St. Paul Dispatch among other things says of the Duluth, Crookston & Northern Railroad Company: "The amount of the capital stock is placed at $59,000,000, and the company's indebtedness is limited to the same amount." That would look like about $54,000,000 of watered stock as the original amount was $5,000,000 and we are assured by the company that such is really the present amount.

Attention is called to the advertisement of the National Builder Pub. Co., of Chicago, Ills., elsewhere in this issue. The National Builder is a magazine that should be in the hands of every carpenter in the country. It has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind in America and justly so for it is the best. A sample copy may be seen at this office.

Mr. A. Sture, one of the progressive farmers of Black River, called in to encourage THE JOURNAL by a renewal, on Thursday last and chat with us on twine and kindred subjects. He is of the opinion that this country ought to raise the material and manufacture its own twine. Thinks hemp, properly handled would answer every purpose, and thinks the experimental farm should take hold of the matter and develope it. Mr. Sture is a lover of good horses and two years ago last July bought a fine four-weeks-old English Shire horse colt, which, the following winter he brought home. He says the colt is the easiest keeper among his horses and has developed into an exceedingly fine animal. As Mr. S. contemplates a visit to Sweden about May 1st, to be gone some time he has concluded to offer his colt for sale rather than to trust the care of him to inexperienced hands, and will offer somebody a good bargain. He invites all admirers of good horse-flesh to call and look this animal over.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson dropped in to see us on Saturday and chat over the prospect of the future. The Capt. is one of those practical, wideawake farmers whose influence is felt for good in this country. Speaking of seed he says that he has less fears for wheat than other grains especially oats; says farmers may well be careful about sowing oats if his own experience is any criterion to go by. Out of several tests he has made the best did not exceed 50 per cent of sprouted kernels and as a result of his test he has bought 500 bushels of '87 oats for seed and will sow none of his crop of '88. Speaking of the prospects for farming he says it is the greatest wonder in the world to him that at least nine-tenths of the farmers in the country are not absolutely bankrupt paying as they have from $400 to $500 per span for teams, $300 and upwards for selfbinders and everything else in proportion and ten per cent interest on top of all that, why, I tell you these facts speak volumes for the fertility of a country that can stand such a strain and not be utterly bankrupt. The fact is every business has been sapping the substance of the farmers to the utmost limit. How can you help it? Well, it is a poor time to lock the door and cry "stop thief," after the horse is stolen but on the principle of "better late than never" great good could be done by organizing farmers' clubs. Suppose, said he such clubs had been organized in the early day. The time approaches when self-binders are wanted. A. wants 2, B. wants 3, C. wants 1 and in all a dozen or so are found to be wanted. Instead of going singly to any firm they might happen to strike and paying whatever the price might be and interest at any figure demanded, suppose they send one man around to the different firms to see what terms could be had on the whole number needed. Don't you suppose that those machines could be had far less than what they could if bought one or two at a time and on better terms? I tell you I know that they could for I have bought them by the quantity for myself and I know what could be done. The very same principle would work everywhere to the immense advantage of our farmers if they would only combine and with each other. The day is surely coming when farmers will be driven to this act in self-defense or else they will be driven to the wall. All these various trusts and combines of other business men point to this inevitable result just as sure as day, and this attempted twine steal is only one of the fingers of fate. Why, said he if the farmers do not combine against this twine trust and defeat it in some way they will suffer severely until the combination is broken, for if it works in this instance look out for the future. He says it would pay better to stack loose if the farmer should lose one-third of his crop by it than to submit to this great injustice, if it should be the means of bankrupting the human sharks who intend to make their millions this year out of the necessities of the poor farmers. Farmers' clubs would be a good place to discuss this twine question and take action upon it. Farming is as much of a business as any other calling and the nearer to business principles it can be run the greater success will be attained. So says a man who has farmed on business principles in this country and made it pay and his words are worthy due consideration. THE JOURNAL has never ceased to urge the necessity and the benefits to be derived from co-operation and it will ever do so until the result is brought about.

Just For Amusement.

BY S. D. BARNES.

I have just been celebrating All Fool's Day. It is a happy anniversary to me; and, together with my family, I celebrate it regularly; not in the customary off-hand manner of the world at large, but in a way and for a reason of my own. The way that this particular observance of the Higginson family first originated may be learned from a perusal of the following lines:

On the morning of the first day of April, 1882, I ate my bleakfast at a little village hotel in one of the northern counties of Arkansas; and, after paying the modest sum of a "dollar and two bits" assessed for the feed and lodging of myself and horse, I mounted and resumed my journey along the highway leading to Little Rock; and if ever a poor, homeless, wayworn traveler carried a heavier, less contented, heart in his bosom than mine upon this particular morning, I must say that I commiserate him with my whole soul.

To state the case plainly, I was completely disgusted with the rambling, aimless life that I had led since drifting away from my old home in the northern states; and, though my business of cattle-buying was quite profitable, I had found that I lacked the disposition to save the money gained, and, as a rule, had to do the bulk of my trading on borrowed capital; paying the money-lender principal and interest after each transaction was completed, and then living extravagantly on the surplus as long as it lasted, when, reduced to my bottom-dollar, I would solicit another loan and pin myself down to business again for a few months.

On the trip from which I was just returning I had been particularly lucky—considering the earliness of the season—and was returning to head-quarters with enough in my purse to liquidate all claims and have a couple of hundred left. But still I was heartily sick of it all, and was debating seriously with myself the advisability of selling my horse and saddle at the first opportunity and leaving the southwest forever.

I was in just such a frame of mind that I believed that I should hardly have hesitated if an opportunity had offered to change places with any person happy enough to possess a home; and, as I rode along the highway past the comfortable houses of the hardy mountain-farmers, I made myself miserable by noting the careless, contented faces of the people I encountered, and comparing their lot in life with my own, and always to my own disadvantage.

At my feet, a gentle slope, of perhaps a quarter of a mile, led down to a small stream that gurgled along past cultivated fields on either side, hidden, however, at the crossing by a growth of small trees. Beyond was a second ridge, similar to the one upon which I had paused, though somewhat lower; and near its summit, environed with a grove of peach-trees radiant with bloom, stood a snug little cottage, looking so home-like and attractive with its glory of white paint and blue cornices that I could have strangled its happy owner for being so much more fortunate than myself.

At the tasty little picket-fence that skirted the road a horse was tied,—a big sorrel, with white stockings that reached well up the leg,—and, as I looked, I saw a man come running toward it from the house, pursued, as far as the gate, by three female forms, and there came, wafted on the morning air, loud shouts of feminine mirth,—clear, ringing peals of laughter that rang in my ears like the sweetest of music. If the man joined in the merriment it was silently, for, lifting his hat with an extravagance of courtesy, he rode down the hill to meet me; and, as his horse was impatient and full of fire, he passed the stream first, and we met in the shade of the low elms, totally concealed by their branches from those he had just left.

Somewhere I have read the statement that, if there are more people in the world than there are hairs on the human head, there must, consequently, be two people in existence possessing exactly the same number of hairs. The truth of the proposition is self evident. By the same logical reasoning,—if the world contains more individuals than individualities,—some man must needs have a "double," and, unexpectedly, I found myself confronted with mine.

The recognition of this fact was instantaneous and mutual. When I first saw him pass from the house to the gate I had detected something familiar in his appearance: and now, when he drew rein within ten feet of me, I could see that in form and face and general bearing, even to the cut of the moustache and the lump on the too-prominent nose, he was exactly my image in every respect.

I was thunderstruck. If my own astonishment had not been so complete, I might have enjoyed a laugh at the amazed, open-mouthed wonder with which he regarded me. As it was, however, he recovered his self-possession first, and extended his hand.

"I'm awful glad to meet you, Dick Miller!" he said, with a grin. "Same to you, Charles Higginson!" said I, and we shook hands heartily. "Strange, to think that I have combed your hair and washed your face every day for the last twenty-six years, and yet never shook hands with you till to-day!"

"Queer, ain't it? And now if you will turn around I can see the back of my neck," said he.

"Ain't we a nice pair of April fools?" I inquired, after we had laughed at our own folly, in the manner peculiar to our kind.

"Don't!" he exclaimed, depreciatingly. "I have heard of April fools to-day, until I am tired all over. You see I am a married man, and my wife's mother, and two of my sisters live with us. Last year I was smart enough to get ahead of the whole crowd of women on this fool business, and to-day they are paying me back."

"Too many for you are they?"

"Rather! To begin with, my wife stopped the clock last night, and got me up at midnight to build a fire and draw a bucket of water. Then she told me I was an April fool, and advised me to go to bed.

"Yes?"

"Then Sister Kate painted the baby's face with some kind of red stuff, and gave him the butcher knife to play with, then hollered for help, I don't know when I have had such a fright before. Then Sister Molly boiled some eggs for breakfast, and when I broke one, there was nothin' there but the shell; and finally the old lady got me to try to put laudanum and cotton in her hollow tooth, when the Lord knows she hasn't had a tooth in her head for ten years."

"Well, I suppose you are going to get even with them?"

"I'd give up all hopes, but if you will help me I'll try 'em for luck. See here, Mr. —what did you call yourself?"

"Higginson, — Charley Higginson."

"Well, Mr. Higginson. You are traveling, I see, would your business admit of your laying over a day.

"My dear sir," I began, "I never allow personal affairs to obstruct the pathway of duty; and when I meet a fellow creature in such evident distress."

"That's me," he assented gleefully, "I am an object for public pity, if there ever was one, but if you will take a hand in the game well change all that. See here now, do you think you could fill the position of the Lord of the Manor, the patriarch of the flock, and the head of a most interesting family group for a few hours, with credit to yourself and the good cause.

"It would be lots of fun, if we could carry it out successfully," said I, very much taken with the originality of the scheme.

"Oh, there is no danger of a failure," he replied, reassuringly.

"Sally—that's my wife—has gone over to Billy Watson's to see their new baby, and won't be home till late; and the old lady is too near blind to ever find out the difference."

"But your sisters?"

"Oh, I'll put you on to a way to pull the wool over their eyes. It's a go, aint it?" Don't say no! All we have to change is our coats and hats, for I see we both wear ducking overalls, and our boots are about the same style. Oh, Great Boston! I'll show them girls who's April fool."

"The next thing is a horse-swap," said Miller, as he drew my broad-brimed hat down over his ears. "I am only going a couple of miles up the road, and won't ride your horse hard. Now let me give you a few pointers."

"The only danger of discovery is from sister Molly," he added, finally. "She was brought up by an aunt in East Texas, and received no education, but she is as sharp as a steel trap, and you'll have to keep your eyes open when she is around. However, if you follow my directions you will be all right. You see. I am subject to fits of neuralgia, and you want to make 'em think you've got an awful bad attack."

"How will I manage it?"

"Easy enough. Take this red handkerchief and tie it around your jaw. There, that hides half of your face. Now ride back to the house and tie your horse just inside the gate, the girls will take care of him. Go into the room on the left of the hall, and drench your face with Pain Killer, you will find the bottle on the fire-board; and then flop over on the bed and groan. If anybody speaks to you, hold on to your jaw and growl. Don't cuss, but use as strong language as would be permissible for a leader in the Sunday-school, and a deacon in the Mt. Pisgah Church. If you have to say anything of double strength, say Great Boston! That's my own private property, and they are used to hearing it. And now that you are thoroughly posted, here's my hand. Good-by, and good luck to you. I will drop in at twelve o'clock, and see how you are getting along," and he rode off up the hill, highly elated at the contemplated joke upon his unsuspicious wife and sisters.

I fulfilled his directions to the letter. Leading the big sorrel inside the gate, I threw the bridle-rein over a picket, and left him where he could paw up a flower-bed with his forefeet, and demolish a rose-bush with his heels. I felt no apprehension but that the girls would attend to his case as soon as they saw him. No one was visible about the house as I entered, but the clatter of earthenware and the murmur of feminine voices indicated the locality of the kitchen. I opened the door on the left of the hall; threw my hat in one corner of the room, and my boots in the middle of the floor; got hold of the liniment bottle and rubbed my jaw with its odorous contents; kicked over chairs, and stretched myself on the bed. There were two beds in the room, I took the one nearest the fireplace.

The clatter of the falling chair brought a small boy upon the scene. It is wonderful how boys will naturally gravitate to a racket. This particular kid was, perhaps, four years old, and small for his age, but he grasped the situation at once and proceeded to make comments thereon.

"That's granny's bed!" said he.

I lay perfectly quiet. Of course the genuine Dick Miller would have known whose bed it was without any telling, and, if he had found it convenient to repose thereon, would hardly have moved for forty "Grannies."

"I'm goin' ter tell her, daddy," continued the boy, menacingly, then waited for some time to watch the effects of his threat. Finding me obdurate he fell back to the kitchen for reinforcements, and I heard his shrill voice announcing, that—"Dad's in the room with his head tied up, an he's wallerin' all over granny's white counterp'in with his dirty, old breeches!"

"I expect your pa has got another one of his bad spells," I heard the weak voice of the old lady say. "Mebby one of you girls had better go and see if he don't want something." Light feet pattered along the hall, but paused at the door of my room, and I heard a little scream of dismay.

"Oh, that great old horse! He is just ruining every thing in the yard! I don't see why Dick didn't leave him outside, or call some of us to take him. Kate! I wish you would come and see after Dick, I've got to put old Prince in the stable."

"Does your face hurt you, brother?" inquired a gentle, sympathetic voice at my bedside.

I would gladly have told her that the magic of her presence had instantly relieved the pain; but I remembered the course that I had been directed to pursue, and followed it.

"Oh, no!" I growled," "there's nothin' wrong in my face! Nothing at all! Don't see how you ever came to think of such a thing."

"But, Dick, you have got your head tied up, and I can smell that Pain Killer; and you groan so! Is there anything you want?"

"No," just as short as I could speak. I had caught a glimpse of her through my fingers and saw she was read-headed and not very good-looking, and I didn't care if she did get mad. She turned to leave the room when her eyes suddenly rested on my feet, and she stopped.

"Dick!" she exclaimed, "did you buy them socks at the store?"

"Of course I bought 'em at the store! Great Boston! where did you think I bought 'em? What difference is it to you where I buy my socks!"

"But, brother!" she persisted, "you have got more good home-knit socks already than you can wear out in two years. What is the use of buying more?"

"When I want socks, I want 'em," I growled, "and there's no use tryin' to find anything in this place when a man wants it. Where there are four women to put things away, how do you expect a man to find so small an article as a pair of socks?"

"I'm sure I don't have to stay here any longer than I am wanted," exclaimed the thoroughly aroused Kate. "There are other places where I would be welcome, and I can go at any time. You don't need to throw out your insinuations at me, sir!"

I rolled over with my face to the wall, groaning wearily, and she viciously kicked my boots under the bed and left the room to relate her troubles to the old lady in the kitchen.

A few minutes after her departure, sister Molly honored me with a visit. She had quite recovered from her anger at Prince's ravages in the front yard, and was very solicitous regarding her brother's headache.

"It is too bad that you are subject to such awful attacks, Dick, and they come so sudden and unexpected too; You know you were feeling very well this morning at breakfast!" "Do you want me to send after Sally?"

No, I had no desire to see Sally jest then, and I expressed myself to that affect. "I'll be better directly," I groaned, as though my recovery was the saddest thing the future could have in store for me. "Let her stay away from home a month if she wants to."

"I'm sure she doesn't go away often," said Miss Miller, taking up cudgels for her absent sister-in-law at once, "and after Kate marries Sally, will be tied at home more than ever. She has her hands full with the children, you know: and I don't see how I'm going to manage all the milking and churning by myself. But there, I'm making your poor head ache worse with my chatter."

"Oh, not at all, I like to listen to you. Suppose you sit down here and read me something out of the last paper." I meant to evince my brotherly affection, and show a due appreciation of her kind heart, but to my surprise her face suddenly flushed and the sweet blue eyes filled with tears.

"I wouldn't have believed it of you, Dick," she sobbed, "I know I can't read and haven't education like the rest of you, but it's cruel to taunt me with it in this way."

Terribly grieved at my mistake I hurried to make my peace. "I had forgotten, Mollie, I wouldn't have hurt your feelings for the world, and you know it. So dry your eyes and tell me how you enjoyed yourself last Sunday." Unlucky guess. I knew I was on the wrong track again when she turned on me with a shocked, half-angry countenance. "As though I could enjoy myself at Aunt Rhoda's funeral! Dick, I'm ashamed of you."

She was gone, and I was alone with my reflections, but not for long. I heard sister Kate hail some one that chanced to pass, and I overheard the request made. They had sent for Sally. Shades of Plato and Socrates, endow me with endurance commensurate with coming trials!

The old lady came in and sat down by the door, taking particular care to avoid noise and bustle. I expected she would open a conversation, but was doomed to disappointment. The small boy also came in and hung over the foot-board of the bed, cracking hazelnuts with his teeth and slyly snapping the shells at his good old grandmother. I lay with the pillow over my head, and groaned every breath. The clock struck eleven. Just one hour more and I would be relieved from my somewhat tiresome predicament. Only sixty short minutes, but, ah—

Suddenly the half-strangled squall of an infant was heard at the front gate.

"Thar's Sally!" said the old lady, speaking for the first time; and she added something else which I failed to hear, for the youngster had suddenly swooped down on me with an aggressive demand for my pocket-knife.

"I want yer knife, daddy! Daddy, I want yer knife!"

I had hung my coat on the bedpost, and the knife was in one of the pockets. I told him so, as the quickest way of getting rid of him, and then turned to get a view of my anxious wife. The first glance was quite prepossessing. She seemed to be rather a nice little woman and it really seemed cruel to practice such a deception upon her, even in sport. I was waiting anxiously for her first words, when that blessed boy was heard from again.

"Oh, mammy! See what a purty pickshur!"

In rummaging around in my pockets he had struck a veritable bonanza, and, with that generous pertinacity for which childhood is remarkable, was determined to share his discovery with the whole family.

The "pickshur" he offered for inspection was a photograph of a younger sister and myself, "grouped" in a manner that was highly suggestive of brotherly and sisterly affection.

"Oh, my!" shrieked sister Kate. That's Dick."

"Let me see that!" exclaimed Mrs. Miller, excitedly. "Give me that photograph this minute—I have a right to see it;" and, womanlike, she retreated to the darkest corner of the apartment to investigate the matter all to herself.

Presently she returned to the bedside. I could not see her, but I heard her firm, decisive foot-falls, and, in my dire apprehension of what was coming, I forgot, for a time, to groan.

"Richard!—Richard Miller!"—She pronounced the first name "Ree-char-r-rd" in her anxiety to let me know which one of the "Millers" she was addressing—"Whose likeness is this?"

"Mine," said I, with a Washingtonian love for veracity that bodily fear could not entirely banish.

"Hear him, mother! he owns that this is his picture!"

The old lady had by this time secured her "spec's" and was examining the photograph with care and deliberation.

"Sally!" said she. "This hyar is Deck!"

"Of cours it is. I knew it—and he owns it," said her daughter, bitterly. "And now, sir, will you tell me who that—that woman is!"

"Certainly! It is my sister."

What a chorus of denials went up at this statement. Even kind-hearted little Mollie joined in with the rest, and informed me that I ought to be ashamed of myself; to which I humbly ascented.

Just then the old lady made a discovery.

"Sally, what is this writ on the back hyar!"

"'Ever thus through life. January 20th, 1879,' " chorused three feminine voices.

"Why, Sally!" added Kate, solemnly and slowly. "You had only been married a little over two years."

I glanced at the clock again. Twenty minutes after eleven. Oh, for the power of a Joshua! not to make the sun stand still, but to shove it ahead a few notches.

"January twenty, seventy-nine," mused the old lady. "Sally, whar's yer memmyrandy!"

"Yes, your diary," put in sister Kate, "get it, quick."

"Let me save you the trouble," said I, resolved to confess all, and then throw myself on her mercy. "I cannot bear to witness your distress when I can explain all with a word"—but she wouldn't listen to me at all, and I had to sit on the bedside in silence and watch her turn the leaves of that confounded diary.

"September—October—Nov—Oh, here it is! January the 19th—Jan. 20th. 'Rained all day. Made a pair of pillow slips, and shammed my new delain dress with the old one. I hope dear Dick will come to see me to-night—Oh, pshaw! that is 1877. Let me see—Here is '79, 'Jan. 20th. Baby had the croup last night. Mother thinks he is bad off. Wish Dick was here'—and here the little woman threw the book down, and burst out sobbing as though her heart would break.

"Oh, Dick—Dick! To think that—struggling on alone—here by myself—and our little, darling baby at death's door—everything to see after—and you off there with her!"

The last word was a scream which brought me to my feet in alarm. Mrs. Miller was evidently approaching hysterics.

"Oh-h-h dear! she continued. "If I had only died before I seen that picture—standing there with his ar-r-rm around"—

By this time I had reached the middle of the room, where, coatless, in his stocking feet, and my head swathed in a red handkerchief, I was vainly striving for a hearing. Finally Molly took pity on me and interceded in my behalf.

"It is only just to hear what he has to say, Sally."

"Nothing that he can say will have the slightest effect now," sighed Mrs. Miller, now totally exhausted, and reclining on a rug with her head supported in Kate's lap. "Speak on, sir."

"I am sincerely sorry that this has ever occurred." I began. "It is all the result of a very natural mistake. I am not your husband, as you suppose"—

I could not continue, for my voice was drowned in a scream.

"And you have the hardihood to tell me this before my mother and my child! Oh. you unnatural monster!"

I could see that another paroxysm was coming on and I fled. Not through the hall, for she was between me and the door, but the entrance to a side-room was handy, and I made use of it.

I found myself in a little apartment, about eight feet by ten, evidently used as a sleeping-room by the hired help, when such was required in the busy crop-season. The only articles were a beadstead and a chair, but in one corner sat a pair of gum boots, probably left by the last occupant, and over the bed hung an antiquated specimen of an army revolver. This last I took from its nail and mechanically turned in my hand, much as a blind man might have handled a book, not knowing whether it was Shakespeare or the Bible.

Suddenly I heard the voice of that awful boy again.

"Goody! Goody! We're going to have chicken for dinner."

No attention was paid to his clamor, and he proceeded to explain at the top of his voice.

"'Cause daddy's got the 'volver and he's goin' to shoot our old rooster, I know he is."

"Oh, what a wealth of undying love was expressed in the horrified cry that burst from my much injured, but forgiving, wife.

"Quick, girls! Quick! Don't let him do it! He'll kill himself. Dick, Dick! Don't do it!"

Some vast tidal wave might sweep down upon a vessel at anchor, smothering it in its overwhelming torrent, and bearing the shattered remnants back to its ocean lair, so this half-frantic, wholly-terrified group of females invaded the sanctity of my last refuge. Loving and solicitous arms were about my neck, the revolver was snatched from my nerveless hand and hurled through the window, and I was dragged back into the larger apartment. Literally, I was in the hands of my friends.

For a moment I think I was half insane from the tumult and confusion, and fought like a tiger to be free, but each of my loving sisters clung to an arm, Mrs. Miller's blue lawn sleeves were encircling my neck with suffocating pressure, the old lady had me around the waist, and I was comparatively helpless.

As we were waltzing past the open door, some one dashed into the hall, and I caught a glimpse of a familiar face.

Never did Wellington experience one fourth the delight at the coming of Blucher. I essayed to wrench free from my persecutors; stepped on sister Kate's toes; stumbled, and we all went down in a confused heap, just as the entire building rang with Dick Wellington's peculiar cry.

"Great Boston! What a set of April fools!"

He stood in the doorway with my hat and coat in his hand—Dick Miller, without a doubt. I lay on the floor convulsed with laughter—also the genuine and only Dick Miller. Wife, sisters, mother-in-law, struggled to their feet and looked from one to the other in amazement; the old lady standing, half bent, with her hands on her knees peered at us through her spec's in the most comical manner imaginable.

"Wal, I never did!" she said. "A body would think you was some kin."

Mrs. Miller had commenced to cry silently, and kind-hearted Dick went over and took her tenderly in his arms, though she still seemed to doubt of his identity.

I looked at sister Molly, but she wasn't crying and consequently needed no sympathy; therefore, to allow my friend time to make the necessary explanations, I proferred an elbow to each of the amazed sisters.

"Suppose, girls, we adjourn to the kitchen and see about some dinner," said I. I will leave my wife to entertain this stranger for the present," and, like sensible young ladies, they grasp the situation at once, and arm in arm we left the room.

That was six years ago. Another snowy cottage now adorns the little ridge across the branch. Several little Higginsons and Millers have been added to the population of Arkansas, and the old lady has passed to a better land, but the principal personages of this story still survive, and it is needless to add that Sally and Molly have long since ceased to make any mistakes in the identity of their respective husbands.

Artificial Silk.

There seems to be a possibility that an artificial substitute may be found for the product of the silkworm. A Paterson, N. J., silk manufacturer recently said: "It is by no means impossible that artificial silk may sometime replace the product of the silkworm's labor. That, of course, is only a possibility and not a probability, but it is very probable that artificial methods will replace the tedious and expensive means now employed to utilize the worms. It has for some time been known that worn-out silken fabrics can be utilized by putting them in a chemical bath which separates foreign substances from the silk itself, and saves the latter in a solution. This solution can be respun or used to plate other thread."

It is said that Dr. Chardome of France has succeeded in making a purely artificial silk. He makes a solution of nitro-cellulose, alcohol, ether, ferrous chloride and tannic acid, in nicely calculated proportions, and runs it from a resevoir through an exceedingly minute hole into a bath of water, acidulated with one-half of one per cent. of mono-hydrated nitric acid. The fluid hardens in the water, and is dried in hot air. It is said that the thread can be readily dried, but what other valuable qualities it has, if any, are not stated.

Groups of Cities.

One of the curiosities of New York city is the growing tendency to form a group of cities instead of one, for as one moves about the eastern streets he goes distinctly from one nationality to another. On one street, or group of blocks, one language is spoken, and on contiguous blocks, another. Mulberry street and vicinity is wholly Italian in spirit, in speech, in sports and employments. Mott street, a little further on, is the Chinese home, a hive of Celestials. There is also a Bohemian, a Poland, a Hungary, a Palestine, while Ireland is pretty much all over and everywhere.

This grouping of nationalities is seen also in marked degree in Chicago, and in a lesser degree elsewhere. It is not easily avoided, but it is attended with evils and dangers. It is slow work assimilating such people into our common nationality. The Irish and Germans most easily fuse with our native Saxon stock.—Globe Democrat.

What Becomes of Reporters.

Julian Ralph, a well-known New York newspaper man, in an article in the Epoch on "What Becomes of Reporters?" furnishes these data: About thirty men reporting in New York fifteen years ago are still reporting, and more than half that number died in the harness. In the same time possibly as many as 150 men drifted into the business, made no mark, and drifted out. Of 250 or more reporters the writer had known in New York 30 are still reporting, 50 others are in journalism and 20 of the remainder, who are now in other callings, are conspicuous before the public. The daily press of New York employs about 350 reporters. Mr. Ralph concludes that journalism seems to have but a small outlet into commercial callings.

Things Worth Remembering.

To those who are called upon to nurse the sick through a long and severe illness, it is of the utmost importance, not only to themselves, but also to their patients, that their own health should be preserved and their own strength maintained. And this not only through the critical stage, but also during the period of convalescence.

The following simple precautions will aid in preserving health and strength while nursing the sick: If the disease of the patient be such as to cause any marked odor of the breath, or exhalations from the skin, take care always to sit on that side of the bed or sick person which is opposite to or away from the direction which the effluvia will take toward the window or whatever other drafts the room may afford. Sit so their breath is carried away from you. Do not sit too close to them nor take their breath if you can avoid it. To keep one's strength in a case of prolonged care and anxiety, and particularly so if obliged to sit up nights, great benefit will be derived from taking a warm bath early in the morning and putting on fresh undergarments every other evening; or if the malady be very infections in its nature, it is best to change the clothing every morning. It will be found that the warm bath, followed by a brisk rubbing of the whole body with a very coarse towel or flesh brush, will refresh the tired person almost as much as sleep.

It is well to keep up the appetite with small doses of quinine—two to five grains—twice a day, and eat nourishing food, with a little wine occasionally. This is a way in which a lady who makes nursing her business, keeps herself well and strong. I give the directions as she gave them to me, hoping they may possibly benefit some one, as may also the following incident, which was related to me by our family physician. Being called upon to visit a sick child, he found the babe in apparently good health, but crying and struggling continually as though suffering extreme pain and anguish. The mother stated that the child was desirous of nursing continually, and in order to quiet it, she had been obliged to let it nurse as often as the crying paroxysms came on. When that failed to quiet it, paregoric or soothing syrup had been administered.

"When did you give the babe a drink of water last?" inquired the physician.

"I don't remember," replied the mother, "I seldom let him drink any water. Does he need it?"

"Need it?" exclaimed the doctor. "Why should he not need it as much as you? The child is suffering from thirst, nothing more."

He accordingly called for cold water, gave the infant a few tablespoonfuls, and it immediately ceased crying and fretting and soon went peacefully to sleep, enjoying a long, refreshing slumber, the first for many hours. Mothers and nurses should remember this. Infants who nurse may often suffer torment for the lack of a drink of water. Often a child cries from nothing but thirst; therefore use common sense, and instead, of dosing it with poisonous compounds give the little sufferer all the water he wants.—Portland Transcript.

Col Wintersmith Tells a Snake Story.

Col. Dick Wintersmith listened with apparent good-natured disgust to some of the snake stories which the youngsters were trying to crowd down his throat the other evening at Chamberlain's, says the Dallas News. As yarn after yarn was unwound by the enterprising narrators the colonel seemed to get restless, until finally he broke out with:

"That's all right, boys, but the trouble with your snake stories is that they are not——"

"Well, suppose you tell us one that is absolutely true," suggested one of the company.

"I will," said the colonel promptly.

And then "Dick" told how he had found himself traveling one hot afternoon along a cart road cut through what seemed miles of chaparral, somewhere in Texas, I believe. Suddenly his pony stopped, and he was nearly thrown over the animal's head. "I got off," Col. Wintersmith went on to say, "and looked about to see what the trouble was, and soon found, about a rod ahead, a huge rattle-snake asleep across the roadway, his head down the slope on one side and his tail in the gutter on the other. I tried to make the poney jump the snake but he wouldn't budge. There wasn't a stone or a stick big enough to handle in sight, and I had no fire-arms. I was in a pickle, but I couldn't go back and didn't like to stay where I was. However, while considering the situation, I saw away ahead on the further side of the rattler a sapling such as is used to bind hay upon a rick. Hitching my pony to the brush I stepped back so as to get a good start, took a running jump, leaped over the snake, ran to the sapling, grabbed it with both hands, ran, swinging it over my head, back to his slumbering snake-ship, and whacked him right across the head, breaking it at once——"

Here the colonel took a long breath and something else besides. The company looked disappointed.

"Is that all?" some one asked.

The colonel cast a look of withering contempt upon the youth adjusted his gold rimmed spectacles, and then continued:

"Yes, breaking it at once. And hang me, gentlemen—you may believe me or not—if I didn't discover that my sapling was the snake's mate, and——"

"Oh, colonel! Come, now, tha'ts a little too——" came in chorus.

"And that," went on the colonel, not in the least disturbed, "and the same blow had killed it also.

After that nothing remained for the company to do except to break up.

A DELIGHTED YOUNG WOMAN.

Look at my face and my hands—not a pimple,
Such as you saw there some time ago.
See my fresh cheeks, and I'm getting a dimple,
I don't look at all like I used to, I know.

My face was all blotches—complexion like tallow;
No wonder they thought me and called me a fright;
No one need have pimples and skin gray and sallow,
If she'll take what I took, ev'ry morn, noon, and night.

I asked the delighted young woman what she referred to, and she answered, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the best beautifier in the world, because it purifies and enriches the blood, and pure rich blood gives good health, and good health—beauty.

TABERNACLE PULPIT.

Dr. Talmage Rises to Inquire, "Shall America Be Reserved for Americans?"

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 3.—Dr. Talmage preached in the Brooklyn Tabernacle this morning on the subject, "Shall America Be Reserved for Americans?"

Text, Acts xvii, 26: "And hath made of one blood all nations." That is, if for some reason general phlebotomy were ordered, and standing in a row were an American, an Englishman, a Scotchman, and an Irishman, a Frenchman, a German, a Norwegian, an Icelander, a Spaniard, an Italian, a Russian, and representatives of all other nationalities bared their right arm and a lancet were struck into it, the blood let out would have the same characteristics, for it would be red, complex, fibrine, globuline, chlorine, and containing sulphuric acid, potassium, phosphate of magnesia, and so on, and Harvey and Sir Astley Cooper and Richardson an Zimmerman and Brown-Sequard, and all the scientific doctors, allopathic, homeopathic, hydropathic, and electic, would agree with Paul as, standing on Mars hill, his pulpit a ridge of limestone rock fifty feet high, and among the proudest and most exclusive and undemocratic people of the earth he crashed into all their prejudices by declaring in the words of my text that God had made "of one blood all nations." The countenance of the five races of the human family may be different as a result of climate or education or habits, and the Malay will have the protecting upper jaw, and the Caucasian the oval face and small mouth, and the Ethiopian the retreating forehead and large lip, and the Mongolian the flat face of olive hue, and the American Indian the copper-colored complexion, but the blood is the same and indicates that they all have one origin, and that Adam and Eve were their ancestor and ancestress.

I think God built this American continent and organized this United States republic to demonstrate the stupendous idea of the text. A man in Persia will always remain a Persian, a man in Switzerland will always remain a Swiss, a man in Austria will always remain an Austrian, but all foreign nationalities coming to America were intended to be Americans. This land is the chemical laboratory where foreign bloods are to be inextricably mixed up and race prejudices and race antipathies are to perish, and this sermon is an ax by which I hope to help kill them. It is not hard for me to preach a sermon, because, although my ancestors came to this country about 250 years ago, some of them came from Wales and some of them from Scotland and some from Holland and some from other lands, and I am a mixture of so many nationalities that I feel at home with people from under every sky and have a right to call them blood relations. There are madcaps and patriotic lunatics in this country who are ever and anon crying out, "America for Americans." Down with the Germans! Down with the Irish! Down with the Jews! Down with the Chinese! are in some directions the popular cries, all of which vociferations I would drown out by the organ of my text, while I pull out the stops and put my foot on the pedal that will open the loudest pipes and run my fingers over all the four banks of ivory keys, playing the chant "God hath made of one blood all nations."

There are not five men in this audience, nor five men in any audience today in America except it be on an Indian reservation, who were not descended from foreigners if you go far enough back. The only native Americans are the Modocs, the Shawnees, the Chippewas, the Cherokees, the Chickasaws, the Shaminoles, and such like. If the principle America only for Americans be carried out, then you and I have no right to be here and we had better charter all the steamers and men-of-war and yachts and slooks and get out of this country as quick as possible. The pilgrim fathers were all immigrants, the Huguenots all immigrants. The cradle of most every one of our families was rocked on the bank of the Clyde or the Rhine or the Shannon or the Seine or the Tiber. Had the watchword "America for Americans" been an early and successful cry where now stand cities would stood Indian wigwams, and canoes instead of steamers would have tracked the Hudson and the Connecticut, and instead of the Mississippi being the main artery of the continent it would have been only a trough for deer and antelope and wild pigeons to drink out of. What makes the cry of "America for Americans" the more absurd and the more inhuman is that some in this country who themselves arrived here in their boyhood or arrived here only one or two generations back are joining in the cry. Escaped from foreign despotism themselves they say, "Shut the door of escape for others." Getting themselves on our shores in a life-boat from the shipwreck saying, "Haul the boat on the beach and let the rest of the passengers go to the bottom!" Men who have yet on them a Scotch, or German, or English, or Irish brogue crying out: "America for Americans!" What if the native inhabitants of heaven, I mean the angels, the cherubim, the seraphim born there should stand in the gate and when they see us coming up at the last should say: "Go back! Heaven for the heavenians!"

Of course we do well not to allow foreign nations to make this country a convict colony. We would have a wall built as high as heaven and as deep as hell against foreign thieves, pickpockets, and anarchists. We would not let them wipe their feet on the mat of the outside door of Castle Garden. If England, or Russia, or Germany, or France send here their desperadoes to get clear of them we would have these desperadoes sent back in chains to the places where they came from. We will not have America become the dumping-place for foreign vagabondism. But you build up a wall at the narrows before New York harbor, or at the Golden gate before San Francisco, and forbid the coming of the industrious and hard-working and honest populations of other lands who want to breathe the air of our free institutions and get opportunity for better livelihood, and it is only a question of time when God will tumble that wall flat on our own heads, with the red-hot thunderbolts of his omnipotent indignation. You are a father and you have five children. The parlor is the best room in the house. Your son Philip says to the other four children: "Now John you live in the small room in the end of the hall and stay there; George, you live in the garret and stay there; Mary, you live in the cellar and stay there; Fannie, you live in the kitchen and stay there. I, Philip, will take the parlor. It suits me exactly. I like the pictures on the wall. I like the lambrequins at the windows. I like the Axminster on the floor. Now I, Philip, propose to occupy this parlor and command you to stay out. The parlor only for Philippians." You, the father, head of this arrangement and what will you do? You will get red in the face and say: "John, come out of that small room at the end of the hall; George come down out of the garret; Mary, come up from the cellar; Fannie come out of the kitchen and go into the parlor or anywhere you chose; and, Philip for your greediness and unbrotherly behavior, I put you for two hours in the dark closet under the stairs." God is the father of the human race. He has at least five sons, a North American, a South American, a European, an Asiatic, and an African. The North American sniffs the breeze and says to his four sisters and brothers and sisters: Let the South American stay in South America, let the European stay in Europe, let the Asiatic stay in Asia, let the African stay in Affrica, but America is for me. I think it is the parlor of the whole earth. I like its carpets and its upholstery of the front window, namely the American sunrise, and the upholstery of the back window, namely the American sunset. Now I want you to all stay out and keep to your places." I am sure the father of the whole human race would hear of it and chastisement would come and, whether by earthquake or flood or drought or heaven-darkening swarms of locust and grasshopper or destroying angel of pestilence, God would rebuke our selfishness as a nation and say to the four winds of heaven: "This world is my house and the North American is no more my child than is the South American and the European and the Asiatic and the African. And I built this world for all the children, and the parlor is theirs and all is theirs." For, let me say, whether we will or not, the population of other lands will come here. There are harbors all the way from Baffin's bay to Galveston, and if you shut fifty gates there will be other gates unguarded. And if you forbid foreigners from coming on, the steamers they will take sailing vessels. And if you forbid them coming on sailing vessels they will come in boats. And if you will not let them come in boats they will come on rafts. And if you will not allow wharfage to the raft they will leave it outside Sandy Hook and swim for free America. Stop them? You might as well pass a law forbidding a swarm of summer bees from lighting on the clover top, or pass a law forbidding the tides of the Atlantic to rise when the moon puts under it silver grappling hooks, or a law that the noonday sun should not irradiate the atmosphere. They have come. They are coming now. They will come. And if I had a voice loud enough to be heard across the seas I would put it to the utmost tension and cry: Let them come! You stingy, selfish, shriveled up, blasted souls who sit before your silver dinner plate piled up with breast of roast turkey incarnadined with cranberry, your fork full and your mouth full and cramming down the superabundance till your digestive organs are terrorized, let the millions of your fellow-men have at least the wishing bone.

But some of this cry, America for Americans, may arise from an honest fear lest this land be overcrowded. Such persons had better take the Northern Pacific or Union Pacific or Southern Pacific or Atlantic & Charlotte air-line or Texas & Santa Fe and go a long journey and find out that no more than a tenth part of the continent is fully cultivated. If a man with 200 acres of farm land should put all his cultivation on one acre he would be cultivating a larger ratio of his farm than our nation is now occupying of the national farm. Pour the whole human race, Europe, Asia, Africa, and all the islands of the sea into America and there would be room to spare. All the Rocky mountain barrennesses and all the other American deserts are to be fertilized, and as Salt Lake City and much of Utah once yielded not a blade of grass now by artificial irrigation have become gardens, so as a large part of this continet that now is too poor to grow even a mullen stalk or a Canada thistle, will through artificial irrigation like an Illinois prairie wave with wheat or like a Wisconsin farm rustle with corn tassels. Besides that, after perhaps a century or two more, when this continent is quite well occupied, the tides of immigration will turn the other way. Politics and governmental affairs being corrected on the other side of the waters, Ireland under different regulation turned into a garden, will invite back another generation of Irishmen, and the wide wastes of Russia brought from under despotims will with her own green fields invite back another generation of Russians. And there will be hundreds of thousands of Americans every year settling on the other continents. And after a number of centuries, all the earth full and crowded, what then? Well, at that time some night a panther meteor wandering through the heavens will put its paw on our world and stop it, and putting its panther tooth into the neck of its mountain range will shake it lifeless as the rat-terrier a rat. So, I have no more fear of America being over-powered than that the porpoises in the Atlantic ocean will become so numerous as to stop shipping.

It is through mighty addition of foreign population to our native population that I think God is going to fill this land with a race of people 95 per cent superior to anything the world has ever seen. Intermarriage of families and intermarriage of nations is depressing and crippling. Marriage outside of one's own nationality and with another style of nationality is a mighty gain. What makes the Scotch-Irish second to no pedigree for brain and no stamina of character, so that blood goes right up to the Supreme court bench and to the front rank in jurisprudence and merchandise and art? Because nothing under heaven can be more unlike than a Scotchman and an Irishman and the descendants of these * two conjoined nationalites, unless rum flings them, go right to the tip toe in everything. All nationalities coming to this land the opposites will call all the while be affianced and French and German will unite and that will stop all the quarrel between them, and one child they will call Alsace and the other Loraine. And hot-blooded Spaniard will unite with cool-blooded Polander and romantic Italian with matter-of-fact Norwegian, and 150 years from now the race occupying this land will be in stature, in purity of complexion, in liquidity of the eye, in gracefulness of noise, in dome-like brow, in taste, in intelligence, and in morals so far ahead of anything now known on either side the seas that this last quarter of the nineteeth century will seem to them like the dark ages. Oh, then how they will legislate and bargain and pray and preach and govern! This is the land where by the mingling of races the race question is to get its death blow. How heaven feels about it we may conclude from the fact that Christ, the Jew, and descended from a Jewess, nevertheless provided a religion for all races, and that Paul, though a Jew, became the chief apostle of the Gentile, and that recently God has allowed to burst in splendor upon the attention of the world Hirsch, the Jew, who, after giving $10,000,000 to Christian churches and hospitals, has called a committee of nations and furnished it with $40,000,000 for schools to elevate his race in France and Germany and Russia to higher intelligence and abolish, as he says, the prejudices against their race, these $50,000,000 not given in a last will and testament and at a time when a man must leave his money anyhow, but by donation at 55 years of age and in good health, utterly eclipsing all benevolence since the world was created. I must confess there was a time when I entertained race prejudice, but, thanks to God, that prejudice has gone, and if I sat in church and on one side of me was an Indian and before me was a Chinaman and behind me a Turk I would be as happy as I am now standing in the presence of this brilliant audience and I am as happy now as I can be and live. The sooner we get this corpse of race prejudice buried the healthier will be our American atmosphere. Let each one fetch a spade and let us dig its grave clear on down deeper and deeper till we get as far down as the center of the earth and half way to China, but no further lest it poison those living on the other side the earth. Then into this grave let down the accursed carcass of race prejudice and throw no it all the mean things that have ever been said and written between Jew and Gentile, between Turk and Russian, between English and French, between Mongolian and anti-Mongolian, between black and white, and put up over that grave for the tombstone some scorched and jagged chunk of scoriæ spit out by some volcanic eruption and chisel on it for epitaph: "Here lies the carcass of one who cursed the world. Aged, near 6,000 years. Departed this life for the perdition from whence it came. No peace to its ashes!"

Now, in view of this subject I have two pointblank words to utter, one suggesting what foreigners ought to do for us and the other what we ought to do for foreigners. First, to foreigners: Lay aside all apologetic air and realize you have as much right as any man who was not only himself born here but his father and grandfather and his great-grandfather before him. Are you an Englishman? Though during the revolutionary war your fathers treated our fathers roughly England has more than atoned for that by giving to this country at least two denominations of Christians—the Church of England and the Methodist church. Witness the magnificent liturgy of the one and the Wesleyan hallelujahs of the other. And who shall ever pay England for what Shakespeare and John Milton and Wordsworth and a thousand other authors have done for America? Are you a Scotchman? Thanks for John Knox's Presbyterianism, the balance wheel of all other denominations. And how shall Americans ever pay your native land for what Thomas Chalmers and Macintosh and Robert Burns and Christopher North and Robert McCheyne and Candlish and Guthrie have done for Americans? Are you a Frenchman? We can not forget your Lafayette, who, in the most desperate time of our American revolution, New York surrendered and our armies flying in retreat, espoused our cause and at Brandywine and Monmouth and Yorktown put all America under eternal obligation. And we can not forget the coming to the rescue of our fathers Rochambeau and his French fleet with 6,000 armed men. Are you a German? We have not forgotten the eleven wounds through which your Baron de Kalb poured out his life blood at the head of the Maryland and Delaware troops in the disastrous battle at Camden, and after we have named our streets and our cities and counties after him we have not paid a tithe of what we owe Germany for his valor and self-sacrifice. And what about Martin Luther, the giant German who made way for religious liberty for all lands and ages? Are you Polander? How can we forget your brilliant Count Pulaski, whose bones were laid in Savannah river after a mortal wound gotten while in the stirrups of one of the fiercest cavalry charges of the American revolution? But with no time to particularize I say, "All hail to the men and women of other lands who come here with honest purpose!" Renounce all obligation to foreign despots. Take the oath of American allegiance. Get out your naturalization papers. Don't talk against our institutions, for the fact that you came here and stay shows that you like ours better than any other. If you don't like them there are steamers going out of our ports almost every day and the fare is cheap and, lest you should be detailed for parting civilities, I bid you good by now. But if you like it here then I charge you at the ballot-box, in legislative hall, in chuches, and everywhere be out-and-out Americans. Do not try to establish here the loose foreign Sabbaths or transcendentalism spun into a religion of mush and moonshine, or foreign libertinism or that condensation of all thievery, scoundrelism, lust, murder, and perdition which in Russia is called nihilism and in France called communism and in America called anarchism. Unite with us in making by the Grace of God the 15,000,000 square miles of America on both sides the Isthmus of Panama the paradise of virtue and religion.

My other word suggests what Americans ought to do for foreigners. By all possible means explain to them our institutions. Coming here, the vast majority of them know about as much concerning republican or democratic form of government as you in the United States know about politics of Demark or France or Italy or Switzerland, namely nothing. Explain to them that liberty in this country means liberty to do right but not liberty to do wrong. Never in their presence say anything against their native land, for, no matter how much they may have been oppressed there, in that native land there are sacred places, cabins, or mansions around whose doors they played and perhaps somewhere there is a grave into which they would like, when life's toils are over, to be let down, for it is mother's grave and it would be like going again into the loving arms that first held them and against the bosom that first pillowed them. My! my! how low down a man must have descended to have no regard for the place where his cradle was rocked. Don't mock their brogue or their stumbling attempts at the hardest of all languages to learn, namely the English language. I warrant that they speak English as well as you could talk Scandinavian. Treat them in America as you would like to be treated if for the sake of your honest principles or a better livelihood for yourself or your family you had moved under the shadow of Jungfrau, or the Rhigi, or the Giant's causeway, or the Bohemian forest, or the Franconian Jura. If they get homesick, as some of them are, suggest to them that God is as near to help them here as he was near them before they crossed the Atlantic and that the soul's final flight is less than a second, whether from the beach of the Caspian sea or the banks of Lake Erie. Evangelize their adults through the churches and their children through the schools and let home missions and tract societies and the bible translated in all the languages of these foreign people have full swing.

Rejoice as Christian patriots that instead of being an element of weakness the foreign people thoroughly evangelized will be our mightiest defense against all the world. The congress of the United States recently ordered built new forts all up and down our American coasts and a new navy is about to be projected. But let me say that $300,000,000 expended in coast defense will not be so mighty as a vast foreign population living in America. With hundreds of thousands of Germans in New York, Germany would as soon think of bombshelling Berlin as attacking us. With hundreds of thousands of Frenchmen in New York France would as soon think of firing on Paris. With hundreds of thousands of Englishmen in New York England would as soon think of destroying London. The mightiest defense against European nations is a wall of Europeans reaching all up and down the American continent, a wall of heads and hearts consecrated to free government. A bulwark of foreign humanity heaved up all along our shores, reinforced by the Atlantic ocean, armed as it is with tempests and Caribbean whirlwinds and giant billows ready to fling mountains from their catapult, we need as a nation fear no one in the universe but God, and if found in his service we need not fear him. As 600,000,000 people will yet sit down at our national table, let God preside. To him be dedicated the metal of our mines, the sheaves of our harvest fields, the fruits of our orchards, the fabrics of our manufactories, the telescopes of our observatories, the volumes of our libraries, the songs of our churches, the affections of our hearts, and all our lakes become baptismal fonts, and all our mountains altars of praise, and all our valleys amphitheaters of worship, and our country, having become fifty nations consolidated in one, may its every heart-throb be a pulsation of gratitude to him who made "of one blood all nations" and ransomed that blood by the payment of the last drop of his own.

Effects of Using the Telephone.

At the meeting of the American Otological society in Washington, Dr. Clarence J. Blake, of Boston, read a paper on the influence of the use of the telephone on hearing power. He thinks this influence must be injurious, because the extremely low intensity, as demonstrated by experiment, of the sounds to be caught from the telephone, compelled a strain of the ear which soon fatigued it, and made it especially liable to injury by the accidental sounds of comparatively high intensity, which were constantly liable to be heard. Dr. C. H. Burnett said he had seen several patients who believed that the continued use of the telephone had impaired their hearing. Dr. O. D. Pomeroy gave the case of a patient who said the use of the telephone fatigued her very much, and, she thought, had made her decidedly worse.—Science.

Wonderful Masons.

The old Egyptians were better builders than those of the present day. There are blocks of stones in the pyramids which weigh three or four times as much as the obelisk on the London embankment. There is one stone, the weight of which is estimated at 880 tons. There are stones thirty feet in length which fit so closely together that a penknife may be run over the surface without discovering the break between them. They are not laid with mortar, either. We have no machinery so perfect that it will make two surfaces thirty feet in length which will meet together as these stones in the pyramids meet. It is supposed that they were rubbed backward and forward upon each other until the surfaces were assimilated, making them the world's wonders in mechanical skill.—London Budget.

In the West Virginia Mountains.

"There is much ignorance in many of these mountain counties," said a Baptist orator at Clarksburg, W. Va. "A man was riding through McDowell county on his way to the county seat. She replied: 'I did not know that county had any seat.'" Then he added: "That reminds me of an officer traveling through the county during the war. He asked an old man what was the populotion of his county. He replied: 'I don't know; it is over on Tug Fork.'"—Richmond Religious Herald.

Another Mystery Explained.

Sensible wife—My dear, you remember, of course, that before our marriage I told you I rather enjoyed cigar smoke. Well, I am sure I do not love you any less now, yet the fact remains that I find your smoking intensely disagreeable! Why is it?

Sensible Husband—When I had only myself to support I smoked two for a quarter; now I smoke two for five.—Philadelphia Record.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

A large number of forged checks for small amounts have been in circulation at Duluth lately.

Efforts are being made to hold a musical festival at Red Wing in the near future.

There were but two marriage licenses issued in Washington county during February.

President Bushnel, has made arrangements for holding a Fat Stock exhibit in St. Paul during fair week.

The Pipestone County Agricultural association has decided to hold a fair this fall in connection with the corn palace.

A West End man has brought a suit against the city of Duluth to recover $25,000 for injuries received on account of a defective sidewalk.

The ladies' aid society at Adrian is making arrangements to hold a grand fair and baby show on the evening of March 20.

The outlook for an enlargement of the manufacturing industries at Red Wing is said to be most encouraging.

The Republic says that Jackson enjoyed the spectacle of a lot of boys from 14 to 16 years old drunk one night recently.

H. C. Jackson of Mount Pleasant received a telegram that his mother, Mrs. John A. Jackson, was dying at her home near Tracy.

The boat yard at Wabasha, owned and operated for many years by W. T. Dugan, has been sold to Mr. Godfrey who has been superintendent of the works for some time.

More deaths occurred at Sauk Centre recently than ever before in the same period. During the first three days of the week there were five deaths.

Owing to the great increase in the receipts of corn at Duluth the board of trade has appointed a committee to draft a set of rules governing the trade in that product.

James Morrison, who was convicted of purloining bells from harnesses on the streets of Sauk Centre has been sentenced to jail in default of payment of his fine.

The Beobachter, a German paper published at Mankato, for the last seventeen years by J. M. Broomer, has been sold to Ehrler & Co., who have taken possession.

John Casserly, living east of Marshall, lost his barn by fire, including six horses, nine cattle and hogs and seven or eight hundred bushels of grain. Loss, $1,600; insurance, $800.

There is great excitement over the coal find in the southwestern part of Jackson county and steps are being taken to organize a company with a capital of $50,000 for the purpose of developing the find.

The First National bank, recently organized in Pipestone opened with the following officers: Charles Myins, president; C. J. Caley, vice president; Henry Briggs, cashier.

People of Marshall raised a cash bonus of $2,000 for the location at that place of a hundred-barrel steam flouring mill. This offer is open to all until accepted. A St. Peter syndicate is considering its acceptance.

John Holler, who burned his five children and killed his wife at Dickenson, Dak., was once a resident of Albany, Stearns county, and burned his house there. His first wife was killed in a row there.

Arthur A. Walker, the young clerk of the register department of the Minneapolis postoffice who was arrested for robbery, is still in the county jail. His uncle will soon arrive from Redwood Falls, Minn., and will probably furnish bail.

Joseph Unsell, aged forty-three years, son of John Unsell committed suicide at Wabasha by shooting himself through the head. He had recently returned from the west, and had been in very low spirits since his arrival. Ill health is the alleged cause.

Sheriff Mollison of Austin has just received from a friend visiting at Gettysburg, Pa., a cane cut from the spot near Little Round Top, where the First Minnesota regiment lost 307 men in a single engagement. Sheriff Mollison was in Company G, of the old First. Out of about 700 men, only forty survived.

The committee sent by the city council of Fergus Falls to Washington to secure a suspension of the president's order abolishing the United States land office returned without having accomplished the object of its mission. The committee saw a number of Minnesota congressmen, but was told that the matter of consolidating this land district with that of St. Cloud had been thoroughly discussed, and that at present there was no possible chance of doing anything. Knute Nelson claimed that he had known nothing about the matter until he saw the order, and the congressman was disposed to be a little wrathy because he had been so entirely ignored in the case.

So Say We, All of Us.

Isn't the new phrase "in the soup" rather overworked? It is not very expressive slang; it lacks wit and point. Its origin was with a tough, who saw a roystering companion in the water of the ocean, and as he didn't wish to describe it as "the drink" or "the spill" he maudlinly spoke of it as the soup. Would it not be just as well to regard the phrase as having had its day and retire it to the company of other slang no longer current?

The Key of Death.

About 1600 a stranger named Tebaldo established himself as a merchant in Venice. He became enamored of a daughter of ancient house, and, asking her hand, was rejected, the young lady being already affianced. Enraged, he set himself to plan revenge, and, being a skillful mechanician, he invented a formidable weapon. This was a large key, the handle of which, when pressed, sent out from the other end of the key a needle of such fineness that it entered the flesh and buried itself there, leaving no external trace.

With this weapon Tebaldo waited at the church door till the maiden he loved passed in to her marriage. Then, unperceived, he sent the slender needle into the breast of the bridegroom, who, seized with a sharp pain from an unknown cause, fainted, was carried home and soon died, his strange illness baffling the skill of the physicians.

Again Tebaldo demanded the maiden's hand, and was again refused. In a few days both her parents died in a like mysterious manner. Suspicion was excited, and on examination of the bodies the small steel instrument was found in the flesh. There was universal terror; no one felt that his own life was secure.

The young lady went into a convent during her mourning, and after a few months Tebaldo begged to see and speak with her, hoping now to bend her to his will. She, with an instinctive horror of this man, who had from the first been displeasing to her, returned a decisive negative; whereupon Tebaldo contrived to wound her through the grate. On returning to her room she felt a pain in her breast and discovered a single drop of blood. Surgeons were hastily summoned. Taught by the past, they cut into the wounded part, extracted the needle and saved her life. Tebaldo was suspected, his house was searched, the key discovered and he perished on the gallows.

There is a tradition that Duke Francis of Padua had a poisoned key of a similar character, which unlocked his private library. When he desired to rid himself of an obnoxious member of his household or suite he would send him to bring a certain volume from his book case. As the key was turned in the lock out shot a poisoned needle, stabbed the hand of the holder and instantly shot back again. Examination of the hand revealed only a small, dark blue spot, but in a few moments the person grew strangely giddy, and would be found on the floor, apparently in a fit. In twenty-four hours he would be dead, and a verdict rendered—"apoplexy."—Notes and Queries.

New England Earness.

Concord Monitor: There is an old gentleman in the Southeastern part of the state who keeps horses and carriages to let and who is very careful not to overcharge his patrons. One day a gentleman hired a wagon of him to go to Portsmouth, where he had a carriage of his own which he wished to get home. He hitched his own horse to the old gentleman's wagon and drove to Portsmouth, but on his return harnessed into his own carriage, drawing the wagon behind. When he asked how much he was to pay the old gentleman said: "Wall, I get 25 cents when the wagon goes to Exter. It's further to Portsmouth and I ought to have more. Call it 33 cents." "But," said the gentleman, "I only rode to Portsmouth in your wagon; I didn't use it coming back." "Wall, that's so. I guess 25 cents are enough." said the old gentleman after a moment's reflection.

CONGRESSIONAL.

FRIDAY, MARCH 1.

SENATE.—Senator Plump, presented a report from the conference committee on the forfeiture bill. In presenting it Mr. Plump said that the bill was in almost the precise shape in which it passed the senate with this qualification, that the conference bill contains a provision for the entry of lands under the homestead law only in favor of persons now settled on the lands to be forfeited. For the purpose of arrangement, the order of the sections had been changed, and there was a provision inserted requiring the attorney general to bring a suit to determine the question as to certain lands which had been first held by the land office to be the property of the Northern Pacific road, and had been afterward to be public land, and which had been sold by the Northern Pacific road. With these exceptions the bill was in the precise shape, for all essential purposes, as when it passed the senate. Senator Edmunds insisted that the report should be printed before consideration should be given, and it was informally laid aside.

HOUSE.—The house to-day passed with an amendment the bill raising the limit of cost on the Winona public building from $70,000 to $150,000. It took three days to get this done, and Mr. Wilson had finally to leave the matter in the hands of Allen of Michigan to secure its passage. The senate afterward concurred in the house amendment.

Mr. Hofman presented to the house conference report on the bill for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead law. The statement accompanying the report explains that the bill will only prevent the further sale of any public lands of the United States adapted to agriculture and provides that these shall be disposed of only under the homestead law. The bill further provides that pre-emption settlers whose claims have been heretofore initiated and are still subsisting may change their filing and entry to a homestead to be considered under that law. The right of location of soldiers' certificates is left as under existing law. The report was agreed to—yeas 143, nays 7.

On motion of Mr. Anderson of Iowa the house passed the joint resolution to promote commercial union with Canada. This resolution was introduced by Mr. Hitt and was reported unanimously from the committee on foreign affairs. It provides that whenever it shall be duly certified to the president that the government of Canada has declared a desire to establish commercial union with the United States, having a uniform revenue system, like internal taxes to be collected and like import duties to be imposed on articles brought into either country from other nations, with no duties upon trade between the United States and Canada, he shall appoint a committee to meet those who may be likewise designated to represent the government of Canada, to prepare a plan for the assimilation of the import duties and the internal revenue taxes of the two countries, and an equitable division of receipts, in a commercial union; and said commissioners shall report to the president, who shall lay the report before congress.

The vetoed Des Moines river lands bill was again brought up in the house. A motion to pass it over the veto failed of the necessary two thirds the vote standing yeas 147, nays 103.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2.

SENATE.—The President vetoed the direct tax bill. Mr. Sherman controverted the position taken by the president as to the power of congress to pass the bill, saying if congress had the power to levy the tax, it also had power to refund it. Mr. Vest honored the president for his veto and would vote to sustain it. Mr. Morgan differed with the president in regard to the bill and would vote for it. Mr. Edmunds said he had originally opposed the bill, not on the broad grounds on which the president had put in his objections. He would vote against its passage. The vote was taken and the bill passed over the veto—yeas 45, nays 5. The negative votes were given by Senators Blair, Call, Coke, Edmunds, Jones of Arkansas, Pasco, Reagen, Saulsbury and Vest.

The senate passed the Yellowstone Park bill upon the lines of the house amendments. The senate had passed the bill once before, but it went to the house and was amended to considerable extent, and it was understood would be passed by the house if the senate would agree to the house amendments. These included the amendment in relation to the Cinnabar & Clark's Fork railroad. The section prescribing a commissioner for the park is stricken out and the bill is so amended as to meet the views of Mr. Holman, who has expressed great hostility to the measure as passed by the senate. It is expected that the house will pass the bill as reported by the house committee on public lands

HOUSE.—The house devoted its attention to the consideration of conference report on the land grant forfeiture bill. The house conference were divided upon the subject of an agreement. Mr. Payson made a report favoring the senate bill, claiming that it was the only measure which could result in absolute forfeiture, and that the house would better accept it than to stand out for a measure which could not hope for successful enactment. Messrs. Stone and Holman reported a disagreement with the senate committee, and made an appeal to the house to stand by the measure passed by that body in all of its radical features. The house showed an apparent desire to take up Mr. Payson's view of the case, and Stone of Missouri began to filibuster against the adoption of Mr. Payson's report. At midnight the house was voting upon dilatory motions to prevent the adoption of the report.

At 1:30 this morning the house took a recess until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION, MARCH 4.

SENATE.—The direct tax bill was passed by the senate over the president's veto, but every attempt to take it up for consideration in the house was defeated by filibustering tactics.

The understanding that President Harrison will send in the names of the members of his cabinet to the senate to-morrow, and that they will be confirmed at once. As to the length of the session there is a diversity of opinion, the Chandler and Hoar resolutions of alleged frauds in elections and outrages is still on the calender, and if passed by the Republicans in pursuance of the caucus action last month, a delay may ensue which will carry the session far into the spring. The Democrats, under the senate rules, may filibuster indefinitely, and if the Republicans are to carry out the decree of the caucus it will have to be by wearing out the Democrats. Possibly an announcement of policy will be made this week.

HOUSE.—In the house to-day Mr. Blanchard of Louisiana offered the following resolution: "That the sergeant-at-arms of the house take the necessary steps to secure forthwith to the members of the house and to the families of members of the house free access through the corridors of the capitol." The resolution was based on the refusal of senate employes to recognize tickets to the senate galleries, issued to representatives and given to members of their families. Mr. Anderson of Kansas moved to amend the resolution by adding the words: "And because of the arrogant assumption of the senate and the insolence of its employes, the sergeant-at-arms is directed to open the passages between the two chambers." Ruled out on a point of order. A heated discussion ensued, and a message from the senate announcing the adoption by that body of a resolution acceding to the request of the house (as contained in the Blanchard resolution), under such regulations as the presiding officer of the senate might prescribe, did not serve as much of a balm for the wounded feeling of the house, and it was unceremoniously laid on the table.

That Historic Rock Must Go.

The rock to which a chain was attached during the war of the Revolution, to prevent vessels going up the Hudson River, will have to be removed in making excavations for the Peekskill bridge in the Highlands. It will be taken out entire and preserved, either at West Point, Washington's headquarters, Newburg, or the rooms of the Historical Society, in New York.

An elder sister, who was talking to a small brother the other day about the evils of using slang, happened shortly afterward to use the word "dictator." "You shouldn't say Dick Tater," said the little purist, "you should say Richard Potato."

HAIL TO HARRISON.

On His Old Family Bible President Harrison Takes the Oath of Office.

The Army, Navy and Supreme Court Dignified Witnesses of the Imposing Ceremony.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 4.—Benjamin Harrison is president. The ceremony which made him so had an impressiveness that dripping skies could not quench, nor depressed spirits cloud. For the first time in half a generation the responsibility for the entire control of the government is laden in a single political party, taught by its own errors and strengthened by adversity. This reflection lent soberness to the memories and earnestness to the hopes of the Republican leaders who assembled in the senate chamber to witness the inauguration of President Harrison. This circumstance gave an importance to the ceremony and a meaning to the new epoch it inaugurates higher than any found in recent political changes. The scene in the senate chamber was worthy of the occasion. The surroundings lent an intensifying influence to the inspiration of the hour. The day was a dismal failure in every other spectacular aspect. Costly decorations were dimmed and draggled. The pomp and bravery of the military procession was clouded. The dramatic effectiveness of the inaugural proper on the east steps of the capitol was destroyed. Everything which had been planned to take place in the open air by the persistent downpour of rain from early in the morning till late in the afternoon, accompanied at noon by a strong wind that sucked across the capitol park, drifting the rain drops in slanting sheets under umbrellas and into the very teeth of the president and the knot of people bold enough to surround him during the delivery of his address.

At 11:05 Mr. Pruden, the efficient assistant secretary of the president of the United States, who has been handed down in that confidential office by word of mouth by every president since Gen. Grant, came to announce the last official message from the president of the United States. Directly after Mr. Pruden had made this announcement there entered the senate chamber a tall man with a heavy head of iron gray hair and a long curly iron gray beard. It was ex-Senator Jones of Iowa, one of the oldest men in the body. He was a second in the famous Jones and Scilly duel; he for many years was in the United States senate and he always was a Democrat until the last campaign, when, in response to the claims of the mugwumps that Iowa was to go Democratic, he published a two-column letter declaring why all Democrats should vote for Harrison. At 11:10 the presiding officer appointed a committee to wait upon the president of the United States to join a committee on the part of the house to announce that the work of the session was ended and to inquire whether he had any further message to communicate. There entered soon after another reminder of the days of Republican rule in Louisiana, ex-Senator Pitt Kellogg and Frank Morey of that state. A little time before there had joined a notable group of which Hannibal Hamlin and Senator Sherman were conspicuous figures, a gentleman who was unknown to most in the senate. He resembled in appearance very much Mr. Hunt of Louisiana, who was the secretary of the navy under Garfield, and who was one of the last discoveries of Garfield in the trying hours in the morning of the 4th of March, when he was endeavoring to patch his broken cabinet slate. This gentleman was Mr. Noble of St. Louis, the man whose name is supposed will be sent to the senate to-morrow as secretary of the interior. He looked like a man of strong character, and had altogether a fine presence.

THE ARMY STAFF.

At 11:30 Gen. Schofield, major general of the United States army in command, appeared at the east door of the senate chamber, which was the wrong door; but he soon found his right place. He was dressed in the full uniform of a major general. His stalwart figure filled out every fold of his heavily gilt-laced coat until not a single wrinkle remained; a yellow silk sash crossed his broad breast; he held in his left hand a richly mounted sword and in his right he carried a cocked hat with a trailing plume. The retired general of the army, the admiral of the navy and the officers of the army and navy, who by name, have received the thanks of congress, were assigned seats in the area in front of the desk of the presiding officer. Time is laying a heavy hand upon the general staff. At the last inauguration a place was kept for the retired general of the army and for the lieutenant general of the army. The great commander who was the retired general of the army then, now lies by the side of the Hudson at Riverside. The great soldier who was then the lieutenant general of the army lies in another grave on the heights of Arlington, overlooking the Potomac. And the old soldier, who a few months ago stood by the side of that then open grave, who is now retired general of the army, is among the last of the long list of noted heroes of the war. Scattered about in the brilliant assemblage were the staff officers in their gorgeous regulation uniforms.

THE SUPREME COURT.

At 11:20 the supreme court of the United States appeared at the door of the senate chamber, preceded by their marshal, Maj. Wright, and by their clerk, Mr. McKenny. The justices wore their silk robes. With the exception of the chief justice, whose commission is of the latest date, they seated themselves in the order of their commissions in the large red leather upholstered chairs on the right of the area immediately in front of the vice president's desk. As seated they were in the following order: Chief Justice Fuller, Justices Miller, Field, Bradley, Harlan, Gray, Blatchford and Lamar. With them, too, was ex-Justice Strong, retired, and Bancroft Davis, the clerk of the United States supreme court. The latter carried with him the family Bible of the Harrison family, upon which latter Gen. Harrison was sworn. Stanley Matthews was the only member of the court who was not present; he has not yet recovered from the long and serious illness with which he for so many months has been prostrated. At 11:50 the committee on the part of the senate—the tall, grave and stalwart Senators Sherman and Saulsbury—appeared at the main door of the chamber and announced that they had called upon the president of the United States, and had informed him that the business of the congress was ended, and that he had stated that he had no further communication to make. That was the last message from Grover Cleveland to the senate of the United States. A glance at the clock showed at that hour but ten minutes remained of the legal life of the congress. But there had been a notable delay, as a consequence of which the committee of arrangements was not able to bring the outgoing and incoming presidents together at the place that was expected. The consequence was that the venerable functionary of the senate who has so often played the part of Joshua, found it necessary to again cause time to stop still. Three times to-day, once more than the record of former years, did he turn back the hands, so that altogether nearly thirty minutes were added to the life of the congress in this way. Soon after that all eyes were turned to the gallery in which were the seats reserved for the family of the president-elect. They entered, Russell Harrison escorting his mother, the wife of the president; the venerable Mr. Scott, the father of Mrs. Harrison; Mr. and Mrs. McKee and some other relatives, while Mrs. Morton, the wife of the vice president, was escorted by Mr. McCammon, the chairman of the committee on arrangements. All eyes were turned in that direction. The lady who has now become the first lady of the land and mistress of the White House was at once subjected to the critical examination of the eyes of her own sex. She bore the gaze apparently well and without concern. In fact, she had not long been in her seat before she took out a note book and resting it upon the marble railing in front began to make some memoranda. It was 11:58 by Mr. Bassett's clock and 12:15 actual time when the presidential party entered the senate chamber. Mr. Cleveland was escorted by Mr. Crockrell, of the committee of arrangements, and conducted to the chair prepared for him. He was followed for the last time officially by the members of his cabinet. There were two changes in the cabinet, which was present in that senate chamber four years before: Manning, then rotund and rosy, the strongest man, it proved, that Mr. Cleveland had selected, has joined the majority; and Lamar, deemed then a chivalrous dreamer, and not fitted for cabinet work, proved that he was more successful as secretary of the interior than some of the other senatorial selections for the Cleveland cabinet, and more fortunate than all the rest. He sat on the other side of the aisle to-day, lodged upon the supreme court for his life.

THERE WAS BAYARD,

heir to gentlemanly formalism, political preferment and snug estate, an aristocrat who was the ideal of his party, but who seems to have been the most unsuccessful of all of Cleveland's cabinet advisers. There was Garland, whose reputation as a lawyer did not stand the test of time, and who was another failure in Cleveland's cabinet. There was Vilas, the type of a flourishing Western physician, the most intense partisan of the cabinet. There was Fairchild, Manning's successor, Tilden's old law clerk, and Whitney still looking young, alert, discreet, who possesses the delightful faculty of always looking the perfection of physical and mental neatness, and through whose glasses a pair of keen but friendly eyes look out upon a world which he has never had occasion to regard as otherwise than as the best of all possible worlds. And at the end of the list, but the first on any list of those who wish to judge the administration from the standpoint of the sincerity of its civil service professions, was Mr. Endicott, a scholar and idealist who has been truer to his professions than his party was, and who lays down the portfolio of the war department respected by all and admired and honored by his opponents. He has made but two changes in his department; one was to fill a vacancy caused by death, and the other one created by resignation. After that came the routine of the swearing in of the new senators. They were brought to the desk of the vice president in groups of four to six; escorted generally by colleagues from their own states.

THE TABLEAU

on the east front, ordinarily so dramatic and impressive in other years, had much less interest to-day. The president stood under an umbrella and shouted the terse sentences of his inaugural in the teeth of the wind, many of them, for that matter, directly into the face of Grover Cleveland, who sat at his immediate right grim and impassive, and into that of Chief Justice Fuller, who sat at his left, almost as impassive as the man who gave to him the highest judicial honor in the land. A few hundred people gathered about the president on the platform, but fully four-fifth of the seats were unoccupied. Those who ventured into the chill air and the drenching storm shivered under a canopy of dripping and interlacing umbrellas. The rest of the distinguished persons who were to have occupied the platform cowered under the porticos, waited in the rotunda, peered through the windows, or left the capitol as soon as the inaugural party passed out of the senate chamber. The only scene at all worthy of the day was within the four walls of the senate chamber. In the senate chamber itself the solemn dignity and virile force of Senator Ingalls was emphasized by his imminent departure from the chair he has so graced. The demeanor of the principal personages of the political drama played on this impressive stage gathered a new gravity from their surroundings. President Cleveland bore himself with more dignity than when sitting for the last time in his cabinet, and the spectacle of Gen. Harrison stepping gravely down the center aisle of the senate chamber appealed much more strongly to the imagination than did that of the same person an hour later battling with the wind and rain in the endeavor to deliver his inaugural outside.

VICE PRESIDENT MORTON

has more physical presence than Gen. Harrison, but less personal force and impressiveness. His voice seems weak, after Ingalls' virile tones, and his brief opening address was read from notes. The vice president spoke as follows:

Senators: I shall enter on the discharge of the delicate and (at times) important duties of the position to which I have been called by the people of the United States without experience as a presiding officer; and therefore bespeak in advance the indulgent consideration which you have been always ready to extend to the occupant of the chair. As presiding officer of the senate it will be my effort to administer the rules of procedure with entire fairness and to treat every senator with the courtesy and consideration due at all times to the representatives of great states in a legislative body. I hope that our official and personal relations will prove mutually agreeable, and that our duties will be discharged in a manner to maintain the dignity of the senate and to add to the prosperity and happiness of this great nation.

Nearly all present in that stately chamber regretted that the ceremony could not have been completed in the senate chamber, with its dramatic surroundings and freedom from the battle of the elements. Had the inaugural address been delivered there, it would have been completely heard by about 2,000 selected persons, instead of in broken fragments by a few hundred out of the thousands outside who were near enough to catch the words which came from the president's lips. Until the last moment it was not decided whether to finish the ceremonies in the chamber or to repair to the platform. The latter course was taken in accordance with the strong and directly expressed wish of Gen. Harrison himself that he might take the oath in the actual presence of the people and say his first words as the head of the republic directly to them. To realize this sentiment, he risked pneumonia and spoiled the dramatic effectiveness of his inauguration, but a great many of the people to whose sympathies and support he was determined directly to appeal will give him a little warmer place in their hearts for cherishing it.

THE INAUGURAL PARADE.

Despite the Inclement Democratic Weather the Gaudy Troops March Bravely Led by the Gallant Veteran of a Real and Bloody War, Gov. Beaver.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 4.—Mrs. Harrison, with her great white bouquet of lilies of the valley, and accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. McKee, joins her husband on the reviewing stand and as all rise to their feet in her honor, the president hands her to a seat at his right hand where she joins him in close attention to the review and frequently takes part in the recognitions of special merit. Mr. Russell Harrison has also entered and takes a position on his father's left a short distance away. Is it in compliment to the fair arrivals that the next band, arriving in a few moments, strikes up "Annie Laurie?" Close at hand rides Gen. Hantranft, at his rightful place of leadership of the fully 10,000 Pennsylvania militiamen who now in rank upon rank and regiment upon regiment pass by, the veritable army they, and the especial creation of Gen. Hartranft when governor, his discipline being so genuine that imprisonment and court martial and, it is alleged, capital punishment at the muzzle's point for certain specified, though never as yet perpetrated, offenses, characterize its iron code. The result, as seen to-day, is that Pennsylvania possesses probably the best drilled volunteer soldiery in the world, and, as to numbers, one is reminded ere long when an hour has elapsed and still the Philadelphians and Pittsburgers et al. continue filing past, of ex-President Cleveland's observation just four years ago to-day under stress of the same surprise: "Are there no others but Pennsylvanians?" If order is heaven's first law, the

and Senators Cameron and Quay is to be doubly congratulated on its magnificently organized militia. The Philadelphia Second rightly leads their army's van, and earns the vociferous applause at their brilliant uniforms and more brilliant marching. Though their banners are furled against the Democratic storm, and though the terra cotta leggings are sadly mud bespattered, their step is precision itself. At this point, is it because Mrs. Harrison is detected shivering, that her watchful husband tenderly places a warm wrapper across her shoulders, Mrs. Russell Harrison meanwhile holding the white mass of lilies? In the advancing regiments of Pennsylvania the Chester County Grays carry knapsacks that surely have seen service, and the blankets are strapped on the back in regular army style. A prancing white horse with a mane like a zebra's bears one of the commandants. No, he will not be unhorsed, though a stretcher suggestively is carried almost next. The First Regiment band (Pennsylvania) deserves the applause, the loudest yet; Maj. Ryan's State Fencibles march grandly and the four colored drummers pound away vigorously if with little results, thanks to the state of the atmosphere; still more Pennsylvanians, horsemen in yellow uppers, and the horses all white; now a mounted officer drops his sword and a bystander picks it up, the helmeted cheeks looking a shade more bronzed. These troopers are followed by but the pails are empty—there is quite enough water from above. Meanwhile Mr. Harrison talks with his party sometimes—oftener with the vice president than others; Mr. Morton standing immediately on his left, and partly screened at times by the post—but as soon as a new command comes along he always lifts his hat, returning its commander's salute. A white drum major is now among the crowd, and, most wonderful of all, has an ordinary mortal's hat. And now President Harrison takes a cup of coffee, which Mr. McKee, ever attentive to the general's wants, has had brought on a tray from the White House kitchen, doubtless from the first pot boiled for the new occupants. Meanwhile Mrs. Harrison fortifies herself against the increasing mists, wind-blown into the stand, by tying a handkerchief across her brow, and from one point of view a crown is suggested and regally it is worn in her brave endurance of the uncivil elements. Similar coronets are simultaneously put on by Mrs. Harrison's sister, Mrs. Lord, who now is next to her, and by Mrs. W. H. H. Miller, whose husband flanks the row of chairs. Presently Mrs. Russell Harrison, in her wine-colored rubber wrap, goes from the stand, doubtless thinking of baby Mathena, who, at length, after many a prattleless day, brings a nursery to the White House.

A BUCKET BRIGADE,

THE GOVERNOR OF OHIO

on a noble animal has a reception that makes him uncover repeatedly, and perhaps recall the Chicago convention last June. In this division march the venerable representatives of the Tippecanoe Veteran clubs of Philadelphia, 600 members. Each old man in the squad is over seventy, and the average is nearer eighty, and all voted for the first Harrison for president. The white-haired marchers stop and cheer the president, and he greets them most cordially. New Jersey and Maryland finally succeed Pennsylvania, and gaudy helmets with brass spikes rule the avenue. The Baltimoreans composing the famous Fifth regiment of the state, and ranking there as does the celebrated Seventh regiment does in Gotham, stride by to the accompaniment of "Maryland, My Maryland." No handsomer men have passed, nor any better versed in Upton. South Carolina and Georgia send good colored troopers with altitudinous shakos. The mist still insinuating into the stand, Mrs. Harrison, herself an umbrella, is compelled to shield herself with the great white-ribboned bouquet and continues to use it as a sunshade, until, evidently on the president's suggestion and urging, she presently leaves the stand escorted by Mr. McKee. Col. Fitzgeral leads his like a grand duke and brings down the Lafayette square galleries with one voice and one yell. And he deserves it all, as do his men and musicians, and all the world knows it. The Seventh, with their white belts and crossed white bands on their breasts, and their splendid uniformity of movement, matching the rich uniform, made a long drawn picture and not surpassed on the avenue throughout the day. Vice President Morton, and the president with him, were especially enthusiastic. Dakota has a good corps, and their black shakos of native bear skins would win for her statehood by the solid vote of all the boys in Washington. A patriotic spectacle, though saddened by the many crutches and sleeveless coats and torn battle flags, is this array of veterans and heroes of the late war, and as they stop before the presidential stand their cheers have the ring of a battle royal; and the recognition of the uncovered repeatedly bowed head, is worthy of an old commander. The Lincoln Club of Cincinnati, 175 strong, have a discipline and dash that are equally waterproof, and the president's stand rings again with the hand clapping. The Cleveland Grays, 108 substantial men of Cleveland, one of the oldest military organizations in the West, march like old men, on their heads huge bearskin shakos.

SUCCESS AND FAILURE.

The Inaugural Ball Partakes of Both of These Attributes—The President Did Not Dance.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, The ball was a great success financially, but it was a failure as a ball. It was impossible to dance on account of the great crowd. The ball room began to fill at 7:30. There were 2,000 persons present. From that time until 11 o'clock they came in rapidly. In all of the dressing rooms there was a tremendous crush. There were no seats in the ball room, and it was necessary for the crowds to keep moving. Music began at 9. The band played continuously. By 10:30 the only place left in the ball room was a narrow corridor around the whole circle. Through this lane the mass of people who wished to promenade did so. The rest looked on as spectators, just as the thousands had stood on the curb all day to see the procession. About 10:20 the committee endeavored to widen the circle, and partially succeeded; then the presidential party came, but did not remain over half an hour. Mr. Canaday, sergeant-at-arms of the United States senate, walked on one side of President Harrison, and a large policeman on the other. Behind him in close proximity was one of the treasury secret service men. Behind the president marched forty members of the reception committee. Under their escort Vice President Morton and Mrs. Harrison passed along the line; then came Mr. and Mrs. McKee and Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harrison.

THE LADIES.

carried immense bouquets. A failure of the president's coachman to reach the right entrance was the ignoble reason why President and Mrs. Harrison came late to the ball. They got there about ten o'clock, and fifteen minutes after that hour the reception, which was only participated in by four or five hundred people, was in full swing. A pretty incident of it was that each lady, as she entered the reception room, was presented with a highly perfumed rose bud and ribbons as a souvenir.

ADMIRAL JOUETT

escorted the vice president. President Harrison's appearance was the signal for an outburst of applause and clapping of hands, which was kept up all along the line of march. Slowly and laboriously a narrow lane was made through the dense throng, and President Harrison, stopping at frequent interval to allow those ahead of him to force their way, marched entirely around the immense court and partly back again to the upper rooms. Here the vice president caught up with the first part of the procession, and a few minutes later the whole party came out again and were escorted by one of the stairways to the first balcony and thence to their rooms. The president took the pressure of the crowd smilingly, and bowed his acknowledgements in return to the salutations of the ladies. Judge McCammon, as the head of the reception committee, made the introductions to President Harrison. Mrs. Harrison took no part in it. She stood with Mr. and Mrs. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. Halford, and Miss Halford in a group just back, and watched the scene with great interest. It was all over in a few minutes, and the president, escorted by the reception committee, came down stairs and made a circuit of the ball room. Mrs. Harrison was escorted by ex-Senator Boutwell. The presidential party remained up stairs a few minutes longer, and then

QUIETLY DEPARTED.

It was estimated that fully 1,500 persons were present. After the president's departure the dancing began, but, owing to the immense crowd, was carried on with difficulty. The ball was, doubtless, the handsomest on record, and the feature of the day's ceremonies, though the weather was a potent factor to its wonderful success. The credit for the success of the event to-night and for the completeness with which all the details of the arrangement of the ceremonies of the day were made is due primarily to Col. A. T. Britton, who, as chairman of the executive committee, has worked day and night since election to achieve the result attained. He has had efficient assistance from the members of the various committees. Large numbers of people left the building immediately after the departure of President Harrison, and by midnight the floor was sufficiently cleared for dancing. At that hour the picture presented from an upper gallery was, indeed, one of imposing grandeur and surpassing loveliness. The brilliant toilets of the dancers, the thousands of silken banners, flags and streamers, the stately garlands, wreathed columns, the rich shade of the heavy damask, satin and velvet hangings, the odor of the flowers, the music, the flood of radiance from thousands of colored lights, the great canopies of color overhead—all united to charm the senses and fill the mind with wondering admiration.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

A State Document Worthy to Be Treasured in the Annals of Our History.

Calmly Logical, Grave and Dignified, It Reviews the Past and Forecasts the Future.

But the Unhappy Mugwump Can Glean No Satisfaction From Reading Between the Lines.

There is no constitutional or legal requirement that the president shall take the oath of office in the presence of the people. But there is so manifest an appropriateness in the public induction to office of the chief executive officer of the nation that from the beginning of the government the people, to whose service the official oath consecrates the officer, have been called to witness the solemn ceremonial. The oath taken in the presence of the people becomes a mutual covenant—the officer covenants to serve the whole body of the people by a faithful execution of the laws, so that they may be the unfailing defense and security of those who respect and observe them, and that neither wealth, station, nor the power of combinations shall be able to evade their just penalties or to wrest them from a beneficent public purpose to serve the ends of cruelty or selfishness. My promise is spoken; yours unspoken—but not the less real and solemn. The people of every state have here their representatives. Surely I do not misinterpret the spirit of the occasion when I assume that the whole body of the people covenant with me and with each other to-day to support and defend the constitution and the Union of the states, to yield willing obedience to all the laws, and each and every other citizen his equal civil and political rights. Entering thus solemnly into covenant with each other we may reverently invoke and confidently expect the favor and help of Almighty God—that he will give to me wisdom, strength and fidelity, and to our people a spirit of fraternity and a love of righteousness and peace.

PAST AND FUTURE.

This occasion derives peculiar interest from the fact that the presidential term, which begins this day, is the twenty-sixth under our constitution. The first inauguration of President Washington took place in New York where congress was then sitting, on the 30th day of April, 1789, having been deferred by reason of delays attending the organization of the congress and the canvass of the electoral vote. Our people have already worthily observed the centennials of the declaration of independence, of the battle of Yorktown and the adoption of the constitution; and will shortly celebrate in New York the institution of the second great department of our constitutional scheme of government. When the centennial of the institution of the judicial department by the organization of the supreme court shall have been suitably observed, as I trust it will be, our nation will have fully entered its second century. I will not attempt to note the marvelous and in great part happy contrasts between our country as it steps over the threshold into its second century of organized existence under the constitution and that weak but wisely ordered young nation that looked undauntedly down the first century when all its years stretched out before it. Our people will not fail at this time to recall the incidents which accompanied the institution of government under the constitution or to find inspiration and guidance in the teachings and example of Washington and his great associates, and hope and courage in the contrast which thirty-eight populous and prosperous states offer to weak in everything except courage and the love of liberty, that then fringed our Atlantic seaboard. The Territory of Dakota has now a population greater than any of the original states (except Virginia) and greater than the aggregate of five of the smaller states in 1790. The center of population, when our national capitol was located was east of Baltimore, and it was argued by many well informed persons that it would move eastward, rather than westward. Yet in 1880 it was found to be near Cincinnati, and the new census about to be taken will show another stride to the westward. That which was the body has come to be only the rich fringe of the nation's ribs. But our growth has not been limited to territory, population and aggregate wealth, marvelous as it has been in each of those directions. The masses of our people are better fed, clothed and housed than their fathers were. The facilities for popular education have been vastly enlarged, and more generally diffused. The virtues of courage and patriotism have given recent proof of their continued presence and increasing power in the hearts and over the lives of our people. The influences of religion have been multiplied and strengthened. The sweet offices of charity have greatly increased. The virtue of temperance is held in higher estimation. We have not attained an ideal condition. Not all of our people are happy and prosperous; not all of them are virtuous and law-abiding. But, on the whole, the opportunities offered to the individual to secure the comforts of life are better than are found elsewhere, and largely better than they were here one hundred years ago.

A MORE PERFECT UNION.

The surrender of a large measure of sovereignty to the general government, effected by the adoption of the constitution, was not accomplished until the suggestions of reason were strongly reinforced by the more imperative voice of experience. The divergent interests of peace speedily demanded a "more perfect union." The merchant, the shipmaster and the manufacturer discovered and disclosed to our statesmen and to the people that commercial emancipation must be added to the political freedom which had been so bravely won. The commercial policy of the mother country had not relaxed any of its hard and oppressive features. To hold in check the development of our commercial marine, to prevent or retard the establishment and growth of manufactures in the states, and so to secure the American market for their shops and the carrying trade for their ships was the policy of European statesmen and was pursued with the most selfish vigor. Petitions poured in on congress urging the imposing of discriminating duties that should encourage the production of needed things at home. The patriotism of the people, which no longer found a field of exercise in war, was energetically directed to the duty of equipping the young republic for the defense of its independence by making its people self dependent. Societies for the promotion of home manufactures and for encouraging the use of domestics in the dress of people were organized in many of the states. The revival at the end of the century of the same patriotic interest in the preservation and development of domestic industries and the defense of against injurious foreign competition is an incident worthy of attention. It is not a departure, but a return, that we have witnessed. The protective policy had then its opponents. The argument was made as now, that its benefits inured to particular classes or sections. If the question became in any sense or at any time sectional, it was only because slavery existed in some of the states. But for this, there was no reason why the cotton producing states should not have led or walked abreast with the New England states in the production of cotton fabrics. There was this reason only why the states that divide with Pennsylvania the mineral treasures of the great southeastern and central mountain ranges should have been so tardy in bringing to the smelting furnace and to the mill the coal and iron from their near opposing hillsides. Mill fires were lighted at the funeral pile of slavery. The emancipation proclamation was heard in the depths of the earth, as well as in the sky—men were made free and material things became our better servants. The sectional element has happily been eliminated from the tariff discussion. We have no longer states that are necessarily only planting states. None are excluded from achieving that diversification of pursuit among the people which brings wealth and contentment. The cotton plantation will not be less valuable when the product is spun in the country town by operatives whose necessities call for diversified crops and create a home demand for garden and agricultural products. Every new mine, furnace and factory is an extension of the productive capacity of the state more real and valuable than added territory. Shall the prejudices and continue hang upon the skirts of progress? How long will those who rejoice that slavery no longer exists cherish and tolerate the incapacities it put upon their communities? I look hopefully to the continuance of our protective system and to the consequent development of manufacturing and mining enterprises in the states hitherto wholly given to agriculture, as a potent influence in the perfect unification of our people. The men who have invested their capital in these enterprises, the farmers who have felt the benefit of their neighborhood, and the men who work in shop or field will not fail to find and to defend a community of interest. It is now quite possible that the farmers and the promoters of the great mining and manufacturing enterprises which have recently been established in the South may yet find that the free ballot of the workingman, without distinction of race, is needed for their defense as well as for his own? I do not doubt that if those men in the South who now accept the tariff views of Clay and the constitutional expositions of Webster, would courageously avow and defend their real convictions, they would not find it difficult, by friendly instruction and co-operation, to make the black man their efficient and safe ally, not only in establishing correct principles in our national administration but in preserving, for their local communities, the benefits of social order and economical and honest government. At least until the good offices of kindness and education have been fairly tried, the contrary conclusion cannot be plausibly urged.

NO SECTIONALISM.

I have altogether rejected the suggestion of a special executive policy for any section of our country. It is the duty of the executive to administer and enforce, in the methods and by the instrumentalities pointed out and provided by the constitution, all the laws enacted by congress. These laws are general, and their administration should be uniform and equal. As a citizen may not elect what laws he will obey, neither may the executive elect which he will enforce. The duty to obey and to execute embraces the constitution in its entirety and the whole code of laws enacted under it. The evil example of permitting individuals, corporations or communities to nullify the laws, because they cross some selfish or local interests or prejudices, is full of dangers, not only to the nation at large, but much more to those who use this pernicious expedient to escape their just obligations, or to obtain an unjust advantage over others. They will presently themselves be compelled to appeal to the law for protection, and those who would use the law as a defense must not deny that use of it to others. If our great corporations would more scrupulously observe their legal limitations and duties they would have less cause to complain of the unlawful limitations of their rights or of violent interference with their operations. The community that by concert, open or secret, among its citizens, denies to a portion of its members their plain rights under the law has severed the only safe bond of social order and prosperity. The evil works, from a bad center, both ways. It demoralizes those who practice it and

of those who suffer by it in the efficiency of the law as a safe protector. The man in whose breast that faith has been darkened is naturally the subject of dangerous and uncanny suggestions. Those who use unlawful methods, if moved by no higher motive than the selfishness that prompted them, may well stop and inquire what is to be the end of this. An unlawful expedient cannot become a permanent condition of government. If the educated and influential classes in a community either practice or connive at the systematic violations of laws that seem to them to cross their convenience, what can they expect when the lesson that convenience or a supposed class interest is a sufficient cause for lawlessness has been well learned by the ignorant classes? A community where law is the rule of conduct, and where courts, not mobs, execute its penalties, is the only attractive field for business investments and honest labor. Our naturalization laws should be so amended as to make the inquiry into the character and disposition of persons applying for citizenship more careful and searching. Our existing laws have been in their administration unimpressive and of an unintelligible form. We accept the man as a citizen without any knowledge of his fitness, and he assumes the duties of citizenship without any knowledge as to what they are. The privileges of American citizenship are so great and its duties so grave that we may well insist upon a good knowledge of every person applying for citizenship and a good knowledge by him of our institutions. We should not cease to be

but we should cease to be careless as to the character of it. There are men of all races, even the best, whose coming is necessarily a burden upon our public revenues or a threat to social order. These should be identified and excluded. We have happily maintained a policy of avoiding all interference with European affairs. We have been only interested spectators of their contentions in diplomacy and in war, ready to use our friendly offices to promote peace, but never obtruding our advice and never attempting unfairly to coin the distresses of other powers into commercial advantage to ourselves. We have a just right to expect that our European policy will be the American policy of European courts. It is so manifestly incompatible with those precautions for peace and safety which all the great powers habitually observe and enforce in matters affecting them, that a shorter waterway between our Eastern and Western seaboards should be dominated by any European government, that we may confidently expect that such a purpose will not be entertained by any friendly power. We shall, in the future, as in the past, use every endeavor to maintain and enlarge our friendly relations with all the great powers, but they will not expect us to look kindly upon any project that would leave us subject to the dangers of a hostile observation or environment. We have not sought to dominate or to absorb any of our weaker neighbors, but rather to aid and encourage them to establish free and stable governments, resting upon the consent of their own people. We have a clear right to expect, therefore, that no European government will seek to establish upon the territories of these independent American states. That which a sense of justice restrains us from seeking, they may be reasonably expected willingly to forego. It must not be assumed, however, that our interests are so exclusively American that our entire inattention to any events that may transpire elsewhere can be taken for granted. Our citizens, domiciled for purposes of trade in all countries and in many islands of the sea, demand and will have our adequate care in their personal and commercial rights. The necessities of our navy require convenient coaling stations, and dock and harbor privileges. These and other trading privileges we will feel free to obtain only by means that do not in any degree partake of coercion, however feeble the government from which we ask such concessions. But, having fairly obtained them by methods and for purposes entirely consistent with the most friendly disposition toward all other powers, our consent will be necessary to any modification or impairment of the concession. We shall neither fail to respect the flag of any friendly nation or the just rights of its citizens, nor to exact the like treatment for our own. Calmness, justice and consideration should characterize our diplomacy. The offices of an intelligent diplomacy, or of friendly arbitration in proper cases, should be adequate to the peaceful adjustment of all international difficulties. By such methods we will make our contribution to the world's peace, which no nation values more highly, and avoid the opprobrium which must fall upon the nation that ruthlessly breaks it.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The duty devolved by law upon the president to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint all public officers, whose appointment is not otherwise provided for in the constitution, or by act of congress, has become very burdensome, and its wise and efficient discharge full of difficulty. The civil list is so large that a personal knowledge of any large number of the applicants is impossible. The president must rely upon the representations of others, and these are often made inconsiderately and without any just sense of responsibility. I have a right, I think, to insist that those who volunteer or are invited to give advice as to appointments shall exercise consideration and fidelity. A high sense of duty and an ambition to improve the service should characterize all public officers. There are many ways in which the convenience and comfort of those who have business with our public officers may be promoted by a thoughtful and obliging officer, and I shall expect those whom I may appoint to justify their selection by a conspicuous efficiency in the discharge of their duties. Honorable party service will certainly not be esteemed by me a disqualification for public office, but it will in no case be allowed to serve as a shield of official negligence, incompetency or delinquency. It is entirely creditable to seek public office by proper methods and with proper motives, and all applicants will be treated with consideration. But I shall need and the heads of departments will need time for inquiry and deliberation.

PERSISTENT IMPORTUNITY

will not therefore be the best support of an application for office. Heads of departments, bureaus and all other public officers having any duty connected therewith, will be expected to enforce the civil service law fully and without evasion. Beyond this obvious duty I hope to do something more to advance the reform of the civil service. The ideal, or even my own ideal, I shall probably not attain. Retrospect will be a safer basis of judgment than promises. We shall not, however, I am sure, be able to put our civil service upon a non-partisan basis, until we have secured an incumbency that fair-minded men of the opposition will approve for impartiality and integrity. As the number of such in the civil list is increased, removals from office will diminish. While a treasury surplus is not the greatest evil, it is a serious evil. Our revenue should be ample to meet the ordinary annual demands upon our treasury with a sufficient margin for those extraordinary, but scarcely less imperative, demands which arise now and then. Expenditure should always be made with economy, and only upon public necessity. Wastefulness, profligacy and favoritism in public expenditures is criminal. But there is nothing in the condition of our country, or of our people, to suggest that anything necessary to the public prosperity security or honor should be unduly postponed. It will be the duty of congress wisely to forecast and estimate these extraordinary demands, and having added them to our ordinary expenditures, to so adjust our revenue laws that no considerable annual surplus will remain. We will fortunately be able to apply to the redemption of the public debt any small or unforeseen

EXCESS OF REVENUE.

This is better than to reduce our income below our necessary expenditures, with the resulting choice between another change of our revenue laws and an increase of our public debt. It is quite possible, I am sure, to effect the necessary reduction in our revenues without breaking down our protective tariff or seriously injuring any domestic industry. The construction of a sufficient number of modern war ships and of their necessary armament should progress as rapidly as is consistent with care and perfection in plans and workmanship. The spirit, courage and skill of our naval officers and seamen have many times in our history given to weak ships and inefficient guns a rating greatly beyond that of the naval list. That they will again do so on occasion I do not doubt, but they ought not by premeditation or neglect to be left to the risks and exigencies of an unequal combat. We should encourage the establishment of American steamship lines. The exigencies of commerce demand stated, reliable and rapid means of communication, and until these are provided the development of our trade with the states lying south of us is impossible. Our pension laws should give more adequate and discriminating relief to the Union soldiers and sailors and to their widows and orphans. Such occasions as this should remind us that we owe everything to their valor and sacrifice.

THE NEW STATES.

It is a subject of congratulation that there is a near prospect of the admission into the Union of the Dakotas and Montana and Washington Territories. This act of justice has been unreasonably delayed in the case of some of them. The people who have settled these territories are intelligent, enterprising and patriotic, and the accession of these new states will add strength to the nation. It is due to the settlers in the territories who have availed themselves of the invitations of our land laws to make homes upon the public domain that their titles should be speedily adjusted and their honest entries confirmed by patent. It is very gratifying to observe the general interest now being manifested in the reform of our election laws. Those who have been for years calling attention to the pressing necessity of throwing about the ballot box and about the elector further safeguards in order that our elections might not only be free and pure, but might clearly appear to be so, will welcome the accession of any who did not so soon discover the need of reform. The national congress has not as yet taken control of elections in that case over which the constitution gives it jurisdiction, but has accepted and adopted the election laws of the several states, provided penalties for their violation and a method of supervision. Only the inefficiency of the state laws, or an unfair or partisan administration of them could suggest a departure from this policy. It was clearly, however, in the contemplation of the framers of the constitution that such an exigency might arise, and provision was wisely made for it. The

is a condition of our national life, and no power vested in congress or in the executive to secure or perpetuate it should remain unused upon occasion. The people of all the congressional districts have an equal interest that the election in each shall truly express the views and wishes of a majority of the qualified electors residing within it. The results of such elections are not local, and the insistence of electors residing in other districts that they shall be pure and free does not savor of impertinence. If in any of the states the public security is thought to be threatened by ignorance among the electors, the obvious remedy is education. The sympathy and help of our people will not be withheld from any community struggling with special embarrassments or difficulties connected with the suffrage, if the remedies proposed proceed upon lawful lines and are promoted by just and honorable methods. How shall those who practice election frauds recover that respect for the sanctity of the ballot, which is the first obligation of good citizenship? The man who has come to regard the ballot box as a juggler's hat has renounced his allegiance. Let us exalt patriotism and moderate our party contentions. Let those who would die for the flag on the field of battle give a better proof of their patriotism and a higher glory to their country by promoting fraternity and justice. A party success that is achieved by unfair methods, or by practices that partake of revolution, is hurtful and evanescent, even from a party standpoint. We should hold our differing opinions in mutual respect, and, when submitting them to the arbitrament of the ballot, should accept an adverse judgment with the same respect that we should have demanded from our opponents had the battle been in our favor.

CONCLUSION.

No other people have a government more worthy of their respect and love, or a land so magnificent in extent, so pleasant to look upon and so full of generous suggestion to enterprise and labor. God has placed upon our head a diadem and has laid at our feet power and wealth beyond definition or calculation. But we must not forget that we take these gifts upon the condition that justice and mercy shall hold the reins of power and that the upward avenues of hope shall be free to all the people. I do not mistrust the future. Dangers have been in frequent ambush along our path, but we have uncovered and vanquished them all. Passion has swept some of our communities, but only to give us a new demonstration that the great body of our people are stable, patriotic and law abiding. No political party can long pursue advantage at the expense of public honor, or by rude and indecent methods, without protest and fatal disaffection in its own body. The peaceful agencies of commerce are more fully revealing the necessary unity of all our communities, and the increasing intercourse of our people is promoting mutual respect. We shall find unalloyed pleasure in the revelation which our next census will make of the swift development of the great resources of some of the states. Each state will bring its generous contribution to the great aggregate of the nation's increase. And when the harvests from the fields, the cattle from the hills and the ores from the earth shall have been weighed, counted and valued, we will learn from them all to crown with the highest honor the state that has most promoted education, virtue, justice and patriotism among its people.

ENGLISH COMMENT.

The Morning Post Eulogizes and the News Condems the Inaugural—A Pessimistic View of the November Election.

LONDON, March 5.—The Morning Post says concerning President Harrison's inaugural: "President Harrison's address is marked by a a commendable absence of bombast, and if this marks the future tone of the national policy another element in the concord of the world will have been secured."

The Daily News says: "Gold had a more decisive interest on the late election than on any that has gone before. The rich on both sides virtually buy places in the administration by liberal donations to campaign funds. It is a form of the purchase system which bodes no good to the state, and shows that civil service reform must begin at the very apex of the pyramid. President Harrison's inaugural address is remarkable for its numerous foreign allusions. The Union may refuse to grow in territory, but cannot refuse to grow in interests. The creation of a navy is evidently due to other considerations than the necessity for reducing the surplus. The world may soon have to reckon with a new naval power. There are more disquieting signs for those who care to find them in the curious interchange of views on commercial union between Canada and America than in the fisheries question."

The Times doubts whether President Harrison's new departure relative to naturalization laws would be advantageous either for America or the rest of the world. Mr. Blaine's foreign policy, it says, appears prominently in the address. The general assertion regarding coaling stations and harbors is probably intended to cover both Samoa and the Canadian fisheries. In the department of finance, the Times thinks President's Harrison's views are not very clear.

The Daily Telegraph says: "There is nothing at all in the address to excite alarm. The fact that Mr. Harrison is so well disposed to deal with foreign affairs in a calm and equitable spirit will be remarked with satisfaction by every country in the old world with which America has friendly relations and occasional differences."

The Chronicle says the address will be searched in vain for anything calculated to enlist the sympathies of Englishmen.

The Standard, commenting on the inaugural message of President Harrison, says: "The message, on the whole, is disappointing. Mr. Harrison was under a special obligation to strike a resounding chord. Some of the phrases suggest Walt Whitman, but it is more reasonable to credit the prolific fancy of Mr. Blaine with the full unaided inspiration. It was certainly not written to please Anglo-Saxons on this side of the Atlantic. If its form was not adopted with any view to our appreciation, still less was its matter."

All the Unionist dailies make a point of Mr. Harrison's references to law and order as a lesson to England in the Irish question.

NOTED BY NEWSPAPERS.

What Some of the Eastern Journals Think of the Inauguration Address of President Harrison.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The Jounal of Commerce of this date says: "As a whole the inaugural will be received with unlimited acclamation by the entire body of his own party, and its frankness and candor will no less heartily admired by those who were counted in the ranks of the opposition. They know just what to expect from the victorious occupants of the place of authority."

The Times finds nothing impressive in the ranks of Mr. Harrison; thinks the tone and manner commanplace. His reference to the early protective policy and its motives is wholly irrevelant to the present situation.

The Herald regards it as the deliverance of a sincere and extremely clear minded man, and says there will be no shilly shally foreign policy.

The Tribune this morning says: "The inaugural address will be criticised angrily by those whose heresies or misdeeds it rebukes. The president will not have to complain, as Dr. Johnson once did, that his speech had not been sufficiently attacked, adding, 'I never think I have hit hard unless it rebounds.' But the strong and patriotic appeal of the president will go to the hearts and the convictions of the American people, and will produce results hereafter."

CHICAGO'S VIEWS.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The Times in its editorial will say: "The president's address will entirely please his party and will not disappoint the opposition. Each expected its substance. Its form is admirable. Harrison's is a capable pen."

The Morning News will say: "The new president of the United States has acquitted himself admirably of this first duty of his office. The address shows that he has carefully weighed the leading questions of the day, and that, while standing with his party on all of them, he is yet an American who has the good of the nation at heart and who realizes that he is the president of all the people, both North and South. The policy outlined by him is wise and patriotic."

Mardi Gras Celebrations.

NEW ORLEANS, Special Telegram, March 4.—The mardi gras festivities began this afternoon with the arrival of the royal flotilla bearing his majesty Rex. The royal party disembarked at the foot of Canal street and proceeded to the city hall, where his majesty was presented by Mayor Shakespeare with the golden keys of the city. The march of triumph was then continued to the Hotel Royal, where the peers of the realm paid proper homage to Rex. To-morrow's pageant promises to be the most brilliant ever witnessed in this city.

She was carried through the ditch and flume down to the "dump," about three-quarters of a mile distant. Remarkable to relate, she escaped without injury.

A curious freak of memory is that of forgetting words of a poem or speech which has been said over a great number of times. The leading lady of a play which had been performed 700 times cannot remember her lines, even by the most violent effort, and only complete rest of a day or two would recall them. Another actress in a play which had a great run had to be constantly prompted toward the end, rehearsed every day, and yet was constantly pursued by a terrible consciousness that what she was saying to the audience was simply unmeaning gibberish.

NEWS NUNCIATURE.

A General Review of the News of the Day Condensed from Associated Press Dispatches.

Doings at Washington.

A petition bearing the signatures of 150 members of the legislature of Dakota has been received by President Harrison urging him to remove Gov. Church immediately. It is claimed that Church is an obstructionist. It is stated that "Gil" Pierce, ex-governor of Dakota, went to Indianapolis two weeks ago for the sole purpose of laying the case before Gen. Harrison. Prompt action will probably be taken, and Col. Pierce may be appointed governor.

President Harrison has taken the initiative and set his foot down upon the practice of kissing babies. A number of babies were presented to him by over-enthusiastic mothers, naturally hoping, of course, that the President would honor them with the usual presidential kiss. This he did not do, however, but satisfied himself, if not the mothers, by tickling the infants gently under the chin and shaking their tiny hands.

Before the senate met on the 5th the Democratic members held a conference in the room used for such purposes, to discuss the business to come before the senate at the special session and to determine upon a line of policy in relation thereto. No definite conclusion was reached, but the sentiment of the members was against permitting the consideration of legislative business of any character. While no formal action has been taken by the Republican senators, it is stated that they will not attempt to do anything but purely executive business; they are tired and want to get away. A two weeks' session at most is all that is expected now.

As President Harrison's family exceeds in number those of his predecessors during a number of years, a rearrangement of the rooms in that part of the executive mansion set apart for their residence has been made the necessary. According to the present plan President will occupy the central apartment on the south side front known as the "Prince of Wales room," from the fact that the Prince slept in that chamber during his stay in Washington many years ago. Mrs Harrison's chamber will be the adjoining room on the southwestern corner, and the rooms on the north front have been assigned to Mr. and Mrs. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Russell B. Harrison and the McKee children.

The Ways of the Wicked.

William Freitag, a resident of Beaver Dam, Wis., committed suicide at the Saxonio hotel at Milwaukee by turning on the gas. He had been drinking heavily. Freitag leaves a wife and two children at Beaver Dam.

George Hatch, a veterinary surgeon, known all over Southern Minnesota, hired a rig Feb. 5 from Ellis' livery stable in Mankato for ten days, agreeing to report every other day. Not a word was heard from him and Ellis got out a warrant. Hatch was arrested at his home at Mapleton, and said the rig was at Springfield, Minn. It was found here.

B. Peters, carpenter from Minneapolis, was arrested at Tacoma on the charge of robbing a woman of $290. Jan. 8 Mrs. Lena Goldberg and Peters left Minneapolis over the Canadian Pacific railroad for Seattle. While en route Mrs. Goldberg became ill, and while in the sleeper Peters robbed her of $290, which was sewed up in the lining of her sealskin sacque, leaving her penniless at Tacoma. The police officers followed Peters' tool chest and caught him at Seattle.

Astist Samuel Cowley's advertisement in New York for $28,000 worth of lost diamonds that never existed has turned out rather disastrously for him, as it has caused his first wife, whom he had abandoned, to put in a warrant charging him with bigamy. Cowley has not given her any money for several months. He has left the city. Joseph H. Gardiner, Mrs. Cowley's brother, arrived in New York from Cleveland, Ohio. He did not know anything of his sister's troubles until he came, but will now do all he possibly can for her. He says he does not know that he married his sister several years ago.

The jury in the Walters case at Bozeman, Mont., find deceased came to her death at the hands of her husband, Jacob Walters. Walters is a German about twenty-three years of age. The verdict has created considerable excitement. The mayor has just telegraphed the governor requesting him to issue an order to the local militia company to be in readiness to act, as it is feared an attempt will be made to lynch Walters. The mayor and other good citizens believe that no other disorder will be attempted, but in the mutterings heard on all sides it is deemed best to be in readiness.

Tommy Brooks, somewhat known in the west as a champion middle weight prize fighter, committed an atrocious murder in a saloon at Council Bluffs. The victim was a young man named F. DeGood formerly of Sioux City. The murder was the outgrowth of a dispute over dice between De Good and another party. Brooks walked deliberately to the side of De Good and fired a 38 caliber bull dog revolver within a few inches of his ear, killing him instantly. The murderer then walked out and escaped in the crowd in the street. Two hours later he was discovered concealed in a trunk in a house of prostitution and was arrested.

Sarah C. Leland, niece of the late Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, was at New York committed for trial in $3,000 bail. In default of that amount she was locked up, though she claims that she was suffering from hemorrhage of the lungs. Miss Elizabeth A. Dailey was the complainant against Mrs. Leland. She charges her with stealing a pair of diamond ear rings valued at $375, and of collecting $215 from one of Miss Dailey's tenants without accounting therefor. Mrs. Leland denied both charges. Further, Miss Dailey declared that Mrs. Leland took the diamonds out of her ears while she was sick, presumably for safe keeping, and returned Rhinestones in their place. Miss Anita Le and daughter of the accused, give damaging testimony against her mother. She addmitted that she had rehearsed the testimony she was to give.

There is no little excitement prevailing at Bonaparte, Iowa, over the reception of a number of threatening letters written by the White Caps. According to immoral acts and violations of law by a number of citizens of Fairfield are contained in these epistles and burning of property is threatened unless these things cease. Lynching of the White Caps if they are appehended is publicly advocated. These letters are received irregularly, both at Fairfield and here, and cease as suddenly as they appear. A majority of the people consider them as emanating from practical jokers, but there having been cases of personal attack in many places after receiving these notes of warning, some are inclined to believe that a White Cap organization really exists in Southwestern Iowa, though no violence has yet been attempted in any locality.

Joseph and Frank Bien, the Italian brothers convicted at West Superior of the murder of Charles T. Hubbard at Hawthorne last September, were sentenced to twenty years each at hard labor in the penitentiary at Waupun. In answer to the judge's question, "Have you anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced?" they requested through the interpreter that their sentence be made as light as possible, as they wished to see their parents in Italy before they died. Their trial has created a greater degree of interest than any case previously brought into the circuit court of Douglas county. A great deal of sympathy with the two convicted men is expressed, as they are strangers in a foreign country, unable to speak a word of English, and have aged parents in Italy, who, it is said, were practically dependent upon their sons for support.

The public is warned against an ingenious swindler, whose base of operations is Washington. He obtains from hotel registers the names of business men visiting that city and telegraphs their home firms to the effect that he (the member or representative of the firm) has been robbed and must have remittance at once. The firm is instructed or requested to send $50 or $75 by telegraph and to waive identification. Knowing that their representative is in Washington, the firm promptly meets the demand. Several houses have been swindled in this way during the past few days. The fraud was discovered by the manager of a branch telegraph office in the dry goods district, who received several messages of the kind described, and thinking it rather remarkable that so many New York business men should fall victims to Washington burglars notified the persons to whom the messages were addressed of his suspicions. This led to an inquiry, but the culprit evidently learned or suspected that his plan had been discovered, as he has not been arrested. It is probable that merchants in other cities have also been victimized in the same way.

From Foreign Shores.

The American exhibit of Indian corn will have a large space in the coming exhibition in Paris. A handsome corn palace will be built, and American cooks will prepare food from corn in all the various ways known to Americans. It is believed by the promoters of the exhibit that an increased demand for corn in Europe will be the result of their efforts.

The reported fight between a German and an American man-of-war off Samoa, which was referred to in California dispatches, was the subject of considerable comment among naval officers. One and all are of the opinion that if the German cruiser Olga came in contact with any vessel at the island it must have been with little Nipsic or possibly the Trenton.

The Paris Temps, commentent on the inaugural address of President Harrison, calls attention to the traditional and systematic abstention of America from a foreign policy while proclaiming loudly the duty of the country to protect her citizens wherever established. The temps sees in this new diplomatic system the logical outcome of the Munroe doctrine, which, it says, Mr. Harrison appears ready to energetically reaffirm.

The English detectives who were sent to Madrid identified the remains of Pigott in the presence of the British consul, who then ordered that the body be interred. Mr. Labouchere has witten a letter suggesting that a fund be started for the benefit of Pigott's poverty-stricken children, and accompanies the suggestion with a personal subscription of £50. Several other gentlemen have signified their willingness to contribute to the object, and it is likely that a considerable sum will be raised.

King Milan has issued a decree formally abdicating the throne of Servia in favor of his son Alexander, who will reign under the title of Alexander I. The decree appointments M Iovan Ristitch and Generals Protitch and Belimarkovic regents during the minority of Alexander, who is thirteen years old. King Milan will remain commander-in-chief of the army during his son's minority. A rumor is current that ex-Queen Natalie will return to Servia and take up her residence at Kraguyevatz.

Andrew McNally, secretary of the Knights of Labor at Winnipeg and a well known citizen, while returning to his residence one evening attempted to crawl under railway train which was obstructing the street. Some portion of his garments is supposed to have caught on the track, and before be could extricate himself the train moved on. McNalley's body was mutilated in a most horrible manner. Portions of it were strewn along the track for a distance of 400 or 500 yards. His head was cut off and his arms and legs torn from the body, which was cut into fragments. McNally came to Winnipeg from Montreal several years ago, and has kept himself prominently before the public in connection with labor organizations.

Miscellaneous News Items.

Among the measures which died with the dying congress was the Oklahoma bill, which remained to the end upon the Senate Calendar. Some of its provisions were, however, incorporated into the Indian appropriation bill. No territorial government is established but an area of land embracing about 6,000,000 acres in the Indian territory, is thrown open to settlement. The land forfeiture bill reached the stage of being reported to the House by a conference report but was killed by filibustering.

The constitutional conventions to be held in North and South Dakota should bear in mind that the seventh standard parallel, where it crosses the Sisseton Indian reservation, needs their attention on the boundary line will have an unsightly jog in it. Ex-Surveyor General Beadle, of Yankton, who surveyed most of the seventh standard parallel, says that along the north end of the wedge-shaped Sisseton Indian reservation, a distance of fifty miles, the seventh standard parallel is located nearly two and a quarter miles south of the line of that parallel surveyed westward from the reservation to the Missouri river.

In the confusion attendant upon the closing hours of congress the exact nature and effect of the amendments made to the Indian appropriation bill have not been clearly understood. An impression has gained currency that all the provisions of the bill organizing the territory of Oklahoma in effect were embodied in the Indian appropriation bill. This is not the case. Senator Farwell moved to have them incorporated, but they were ruled out on a point of order. However, a long debate ensued in regard to the Oklahoma and Cherokee strip subjects, which probably accounts for the idea that the bill was made to include them. The amendments made to the bill by the Senate and agreed to inconference relates to the Seminole and Cherokee lands.

News From Stanley.

A private letter from Bongalo, on the Congo, gives, under date of Nov. 5, 1888, some information about Henry M. Stanley which has not yet appeared in any of the published accounts of his movements: Stanley arrived at Urenia on Aug. 17, with the carriers furnished by Emin Pasha. The next day the four white men who had accompanied him also reached that point. Stanley wrote a letter to Tippoo Tib, telling him, in effect, that he came from Albert Nyanza, where he joined Emin Pasha. He found everything in good condition there—Emin Pasha and Casati in good health, and all their people well. They were well provided with supplies, including wines, etc., and more than a thousand head of cattle, as sheep, goats and chickens in abundance. His return voyage had been effected in eighty-two days. His company was in good health, and his losses were limited to three negroes. He did not say how long the journey to the lake had taken. He entreated Tippoo Tip to accompany him back to Emin, saying that he would wait for him at Urenia for ten days, and would start on the eleventh day with the goods he left there with Bonny, the last of the five Europeans left with him (Barthelot having been killed at Urifa, Jamison having died at Bongalo on Aug. 20, and Ward and Root having returned to Europe.) To decide Tippo Tib to accompany him, he dwelt on the great quantity of ivory he could bring back—all that in Emin Pasha's possession. I do not really think Emin Pasha would have given Tippoo his ivory, for Tippo had nothing with which to pay for it. It was probably an artifice on Stanley's point, who had one or two objects in view for which he had need of Tippo's aid, and he thus tried to persuade him. Tippoo Tib must have understood this, for he did not accompany Stanley, but, like a practical man and one who wished to make something out of Stanley's journey, he caused the explorer to be followed at a distance by one of his devoted lieutenants, Said Ben Mohomed, who will reconnoiter the route and make raids for slaves in the new country. Stanley has broken the contract made by Barthelot for the 400 carriers furnished by the Arabs, and has taken only 100 of them with him. These, with the men of Emin Pasha, must suffice. On Sept. 1 Stanley started on his journey to rejoin Emin Pasha. What will he do afterwards? He has not told his plans, except that he will not return by way of the Congo. Maj. Barthelot would have come back along the Monten'Zige. Will Stanley taken that route.

Minnesota Legislature.

SATURDAY MARCH, 2.

COUNCIL.—The council has appropriated for the Yankton insane asylum $118,325; for Vermillion university, $71,600; Madison normal school, $24,400; Grand Forks university, $50,800, and the Jamestown insane asylum, $132,650. The Sheets bill, allowing persons to build grain warehouses on the right of way of railroads passed. It takes ground for this purpose without compensation, and therefore cannot be said to be very effective legislation. The council passed the appropriation for the School of Mines.

HOUSE.—The railroad bill excited a little more war in the house, but it was short lived on account of the pressing necessities of the appropriation bills. It was evident that the so called Morris-Minnesota bill was killed, and it was in the order of the unfinished business. The old Farmers' alliance that was killed a few days ago was introduced as a new bill, with the section creating and investing a board of railroad commissioners with unconstitutional powers stricken out. An attempt to suspend the rules and pass this bill failed and it was referred to a special committee consisting of Swanston, Fletcher and Jones. The council bill to abolish the railroad commission was called from the committee and passed by an overwhelming vote. It looks now as if anti-railroad legislation has been practically done for at this session. The North Dakota members do not want anything that will cripple railroad building, and the farmers from the south are hopelessly divided. The real business of the day was appropriations in both houses. The house did not get very far. During one of the numerous discussions Van Etter exclaimed, "We will go home and be damned by the whole people if we don't do something."

MONDAY, MARCH, 4.

COUNCIL.—The council passed the bill locating a blind asylum at Pierre and a bill locating an insane asylum at Deadwood. North Dakota members, with one exception, reported favorably to the house the bill refunding the $53,000 of capital warrants outstanding.

The governor vetoed the bill repealing the law creating the board of railroad commissioners, and gave the good work of the present board as his reason in general. The Valley City and Fargo representatives had a hearing to-day before the governor on the bill locating the agricultural college at Valley City. There is an impression ahead that the governor will veto the bill and leave the locating constructively at Fargo.

HOUSE.—The house got down to business this morning and agreed upon a compromise upon the appropriations between the majority and minority reports. The result was an omnibus bill that passed and went to the council. There is great haste to get this bill to the governor to-morrow so that he will have to veto or approve it. If he vetoes it there will be a chance to form a combination and pass the bill over his head. The house passed the Dollard bill that provides that all terms of all offices shall expire ten days after the new governor is appointed. Welcome voted no; ayes 42. This will beat Church's tactics. The committee of the whole recommended the passage of the prohibition bill with the amendments that it go into effect at once and the exception "sacramental" be stricken out.

TUESDAY, MARCH 5.

COUNCIL.—The council held three long sessions to-day. Another hard fight in the council lasted all the forenoon on the Walsh gross earnings bill. Glaspell tried hard to tack on an amendment taxing railroads lying outside their rights of way granted by the United States, and not used in their ordinary business. Lost on a tie vote.

Bills passed—Relating to the adoption of children; providing for incorporating towns into cities when they have 500 people; authorizing the auditor to audit and pay the accounts of G. T. Ingham and John Lundback for arresting criminals; granting criminals; granting one thousand dollars each to widows of men killed when the walls of the Yankton asylum fell; allowing stockholders to change the names of their corporation: omnibus bill for the maintenance of the public institutions of the territory as follows: Vermillion university, $70,5000; Grand Forks university, $57,000; Spearfish normal, $30,100; reform school, $11,000; school of mines, $33,500; deaf mute school, Sioux Falls, $33,800; Sioux Falls penitentiary, $72,300; Bismarck penitentiary, $57,600; Yankton asylum, $111,075; Jamestown asylum, $114,500; commissioner of immigration office, $14,000. This omnibus bill passed the house ten minutes later and only awaits the governor's signature

HOUSE.—The new railroad bill, which is the alliance law without the seventeenth section, which empowers commissioners to fix tariffs, was being considered. The speaker left the chair and on the floor spoke highly of this bill, declaring it to be a good one. He would support it. Aikens opposed this bill, and characterized Keith as a railroad lawyer, who had only left the chair during the entire session to champion some railroad bill or some local thing in which he (Keith) was interested. He spoke with a good deal of feeling, and had the closest attention of a very large crowd. Keith was very deliberate in replying. He said that he had met Aikens before, and knew him at his home. He had watched his course here. He kept up this sort of tirade for some time. Aikens made no reply, and the fight is an acknowledged draw.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6.

COUNCIL.—The council passed the bill amending the law creating the board of railroad committee to report to-morrow. All veto messages were made a special order for Friday. The opinion of the attorney general will be asked as to whether Council Bill No. 177 was in the nature of class legislation. It refers to exemption from taxation the tools of those persons who actually earn their living with them.

HOUSE.—The house passed the following council bills: Aid in the enforcement of local option; the Australian system of voting; authorizing the refunding capital warrants at 5 per cent, payable entirely by North Dakota to preserve the waters of Tongue river and tributaries in Pembina and Cavalier counties for domestic and drinking purposes; providing for the collection and compilation of statistics; authorizing county commissioners to transfer unexpended balances from the road and bridge fund to the general fund; making appropriations to cover deficiences in the funds of the University of the Dakota School of Mines and hospital for the insane at Yankton. Price's bill regulating the business of building and loan corporations was passed over veto—ayes 35, nays 8. The veto of the bill defining the class of newspapers entitled to publish legal notices were sustained—17 to 21. The bill providing equal suffrage at municipal elections was lost—10 to 11. It is reliably reported to-night that the governor will veto the omnibus app ropriation bill on the ground that there will not be money enough in the treasury to pay them. They aggregate nearly $700,000.

THURSDAY, MARCH 7.

COUNCIL.—The governor sent in the nomination of Lawler for Territorial treasurer to succeed himself. A caucus of the council Republicans was held to-night to consider the nominations; also as to what will be done about the governors veto of the omnibus appropriation bill. No decision was reached and another caucus will be held to-morrow. There is very little prospect of any confirmations being made by the council. The tenure of office bill has become a law. The governor gives as a reason for vetoing the omnibus appropriation bill that as the total is about $750,000, there will be $100,000 short, according to the best estimates, even though all is received from the gross-earnings law that is expected. The session closes some time to-morrow or early next morning. There is a great deal of anxiety as to whether he will sign the prohibition bill, the school bill and the bill strengthening the local option law.

HOUSE.—The house passed a bill yesterday appropriating unused balance to the Vermillion university, Yankton Asylum and School of Mines was reconsidered. The gross earnings bill passed—30 to 11. It re-enacts the the railroad commission and gives it authority to prevent discrimination. It requires 3 percent of all earnings to be paid into the territorial treasury in lieu of all taxes on all property for the first five years and 2 per cent after five years, one-third to be paid into the territorial treasury and two-thirds to be distributed to the counties through which the lines pass, except in counties where there are lands unsold which have been granted to aid in the construction of railroads. In that case 30 per cent. shall be paid into the territorial treasury, 40 per cent. to the counties through which the line passes and 30 per cent. to the counties where the lands are situated, to be apportioned according to the amount of land situated in said counties. It requires the full amount of taxes due on interstate and local traffic to be paid within thirty days. The territorial treasurer says the amount to be realized to the territory, if this bill is passed, would be about $414,000, of which $127,000 in addition prior to Aug. 15. Of this sum $83,000 goes to the countries of North Dakota, $196,000 for South Dakota counties, and $135,000 for the territorial treasury.

FRIDAY, MARCH 8.

COUNCIL.—An executive session was held at 10:30, lasting half an hour. The nominations were discussed and it was decided by a vote of 21 to 2—McDonald voting with the Republicans—not to confirm any of them. Wallace, chief clerk of the council, is the nominee for public examiner of the Second district, but even he was not confirmed. When the doors opened a committee of three, headed by Washabaugh, was appointed by the council to wait on the governor and inform him that it had voted to adjourn sine die at 11:30. They did so, when the governor told them he was glad to hear it, and wished it had adjourned six days ago. The governor's veto of the bill establishing an agricultural college at Valley City was sustained. Dollard offered a resolution censuring the governor obstructing legislation and for wrong doings while governor and asking the president to immediately remove him. On Lowry's motion the resolution was tabled. A pleasant feature of the evening was a parting love feast, when the council went to the hall of the house and heard some fairly good speeches from Mayor Bently, Col. Lowry, President Stimmel, Speaker Leith and Col. Rice. At midnight the council adjourned after George Walsh, on behalf of the body, had been presented with the gavel used during the session.

HOUSE.—The house passed these bills over the veto: In relation to abstracts; appropriating $23,000 in bonds for repairing damage done by the cyclone at Grand Forks university; authorizing county treasures to pay out school district funds where there is no school district treasurer taking a range of townships from McPherson county and adding the same to Campbell county; declaring all elevators where gain is being stored or shipped public warehouses, and requiring them to take out a license; providing for liens for the service of breeding animals, requiring pedigee to be filed for record; amending the law in regard to the incorporation of cities, the same bill introduced by Mr. Glaspell in the council, and provides for a police force regulating the tolls of grist mills and the exchange of grain products for grain; providing for a tax on dogs; providing for the adoption of children; appropriating $3,000 for the traveling expenses of the railroad and warehouse commissioners.

Keith was presented with the speaker's gavel, and complimentary resolutions to the speaker and president were passed in each house. Most of the members left for home to-night.

Tackled the Wrong man.

From the Boston Journal.

He had a mouth like a carpet bag. His hair looked as if it had been cut by a crosseyed barber afflicted with the shaking palsy, and more over he appeared to be a redolent hayseed. All day long he had hung about the place, occasionally "asking the boys," and between times "doing the lone act."

Along in the afternoon two young men meandered in, like Judge Finn and Colonel Blood, looking for whiskey and trouble. While they were being served the gentleman with the rural air stepped up and asked "for the same."

"You're not drinking with us," remarked the young man who had "called on."

"Oh, yes, I will," replied the other, meaning as he afterwards explained, that he would drink at the same time.

The young man gave him a light open back hand tap on the cheek, called him "Old Hayseed," and warned him to keep away.

"Don't do that again, young man!" said the other. "I don't like to be cuffed."

"You don't eh?" and followed a harder one on the other cheek, and the young man who up to that time had quite a fancy for himself as an amateur sparrer, "put up his hands" in the most approved style.

The next instant that misguided youth resembled nothing so much as a Manx penny with the St. Vitus dance. In sixty seconds he was humped up in a corner.

"Want any more?" queried "Old Hayseed."

The victim spit out a mouthful of blood, teeth and bad language, and was understood to reply that he had enough, but that he would like to know who it was that "did him up."

"Never you mind who I am. I've fought in public five times with small gloves and once with kids, and I won five times and got a draw the other Good morning."

Milk from the Cocoanut.

The cocoanut palm is a native of the East. The thick, fibrous padding around the nut protects it from the action of the water, so that as soon as a coral reef appears above the surface of the sea it is taken possession of by these trees. The home of the palm is by the sea. It grows quite down to the edge of the water, and is in many instances constantly washed by the waves.

On the other hand it has been domesticated inland, and may be found growing at a height of several thousand feet above the level of the sea. In India they produce fruit in abundance at an elevation of three thousand feet.

There are numerous varieties of this tree, as many as thirty being found in one province of India. A dwarf variety bears fruit when it is only two feet in height. The products of the tree include sugar, starch, oil, wax, wine, resin, as ringent principles, and edible fruits. An alluvial soil is best suited to the growth of the tree, and not more than eighty trees should be planted to the acre. The kernel of the nut is frequently made into ornaments for the hair, or into necklaces.

Occasionally one meets with deformed nuts, consisting of the husk with small, misshapen nuts having no kernel inside. The natives attribute this blighting of the fruit to the tree-frog which, by smelling the flower, can prevent the fruit from coming to maturity.

"Cocoanut day" is a holiday. It is observed as such in most parts of India during the full moon in August. On that day numbers of nuts are thrown into the sea as an offering to the Hindoo divinities.

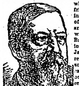
ALL ABOUT THEM.

Sketches of the Gentlemen Whom President Harrison Has Selected as His Constitutional Advisers.



Jas G Blaine

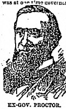
James Gillespie Blaine, secretary of state, is the second son of Ephriam L. Blaine and Marie Gillespie, and a grandson of Ephraim Blaine, who was the trusted friend of Gen. Washington and an officer of the Continental army. Mr. Blaine was born in West Brownsville, Washington county, Pa., Jan. 31, 1830. He received his first schooling in Lancaster, Ohio, where he went in 1841 to reside with a near relative, Thomas Ewing, then secretary of the treasury. He was prepared for Washington college by Thomas Lyons, a brother of Lord Lyons, and was graduated from that institution in 1847. While teaching in a military school in Blue Lick Springs, Ky., which was his first venture after graduating from college, Mr. Blaine met Miss Harriot Stanwood of Maine, and after a brief courtship they were married. Blaine soon removed to Augusta, where he purchased a half interest in the Kennebec Journal and became its editor. Mr. Blaine's debut in the political arena dates back to 1856, when he was chosen a delegate to the first Republican convention, which nominated Gen. Fremont for the presidency. Politics suited Mr. Blaine's tastes even better than journalism, and after a short experience as editor of the Portland Advertiser he bade goodby to the editorial sanctum and launched into his parliamentary career. In 1858 he was elected a member of the legislature and served three terms of two years each, and the last two terms as speaker. In 1862 Mr. Blaine took his seat in congress, where he served for eighteen years. In the brief months of Mr. Garfield's presidency Blaine was secretary of state. His memorable fight for supremacy as a leader of the Republican party with the late Roscoe Conkling is also too well known to need rehearsing. So, too, is his defeat when he ran for the presidency against Grover Cleveland. After this Mr. Blaine turned his attention towards completing his book recounting his experience while in congress.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

William Windom

William Windom was born in Belmont county, Ohio, May 10, 1827. After graduating at an academy he studied law at Mount Vernon, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar in 1850. Being of a genial disposition and possessing some legal ability, he was made prosecuting attorney for Knox county in 1852. He held the position until 1855, when he removed to Minnesota. Soon after his arrival in this state he decided to mix politics with his law business, and very soon became a prominent figure in the Republican ranks, and in 1859 his party sent him to congress. He served from 1859 to 1869, two terms as chairman of the committee on Indian affairs. In 1870 he was appointed to the United States senate to fill the unpired term of Daniel S. Norton, deceased, and subsequently was chosen for the term that ended in 1877. He was again elected for the term that closed in 1883, but resigned in 1881 to enter the cabinet of President Garfield as secretary of the treasury. Upon the accession of President Arthur in the same year Secretary Windom retired from the cabinet. He was a candidate for the senate in 1883, but was defeated by D. M. Sabin. Within the past few years ex-Senator Windom has made New York city his headquarters, being engaged in the promotion of railway and financial schemes.

SECRETARY OF WAR.



EX-GOV. PROCTOR.

Redfield Procter is a a native of Vermont, and was at one time governor of the state. Among the reasons given for the recognition by the new president of the Green Mountain State in cabinet counsels, are, first, the eminence of ex-Gov. Proctor in his party, it being stated that he virtually controls the party in his own state, and second, the fact that he, as chairman of the Vermont delegation to the Chicago convention last year, was head of the only delegation in the whole body which voted solidly for Harrison first, last and all the time. Ex-Gov. Proctor has all his life been engaged in "trade," being in every sense a self-made man, who has managed to get together a respectable fortune in a state that is not noted for being burdened with wealth. He lives at Proctor, a town founded by him, and which is situated a few miles from Rutland. He is in practical control of the whole output of the Vermont marble quarries, and is one of the largest dealers in that commodity in the United States. At his home at Proctor he is a farmer on a large scale, where he owns one of the finest flocks of Winkley merino rams and ewes in the world.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

BENJAMIN F. TRACY.

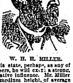
Gen. Benjamin F. Tracey is fifty-nine years old. He was born in Oswego, N. Y., and secured his education in the common school of his native town. After leaving the Oswego academy he entered the law office of Nathaniel W. Davis, where he remained engaged in the study of law until 1851, when he was admitted to the bar and soon made a mark in his profession. In 1853 he became the Republican candidate for district attorney of Tioga county, and though it was a Democratic stronghold, he was elected. Two years later he was again elected to the same office. He was elected to the assembly in 1861 and a year later recruited the One Hundred and Ninth and One Hundred and Thirty-seventh regiments and received his commission as colonel of the former regiment from Gov. Morgan. In the Battle of the Wilderness, May 6, Col. Tracey led in the thick of the fight. He was carried from the field exhausted, but refused to go to a hospital, but led his command through the three days' fight at Spottsylvania, when, being completely broken down, he was forced to turn over his command to his junior officer. He subsequently was tendered and accepted the command of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh United States colored troops. After the war Gen. Tracey settled in New York and resumed his practice of the law as one of the firm of Benedict, Tracey & Benedict. In 1866 Gen. Tracey was made United States district attorney for the Eastern District of New York, which position he held until 1873, when he was forced to resign because of the growth of his private practice. In 1881 he was appointed judge of the court of appeals and served one year. He was counsel for Henry Ward Beecher in the Tilton suit.

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

JOHN W. NOBLE.

Gen. John W. Noble is a St. Louis lawyer. He was a general in the army, and was honored on several occasions for bravery. Mr. Noble has done a great deal of traveling during the past ten years of his life, and has a wonderful knowledge of people and things. Mrs. Noble was a Miss Halstead, from Rochester, N. Y., and was married to the general at Northampton, Mass. The home of Gen. Noble is enriched by works of art, the collections of many trips abroad. The broad hall is hung with engravings, the parlors with oils. The library and study are made attractive by bric-a-brac and large rows of well-filled books, disclosing refined literary tastes and culture in art studies.

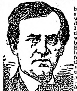
ATTORNEY GENERAL.



W. H. H. MILLER.

William Henry Harrison Miller is a typical Indiana lawyer of high standing. He has been a valuable member of Gen. Harrison's law firm in Indianapolis for about ten years, having left a large practice at Fort Wayne, Ind., to join it. He is a man on whom the president has been accustomed to rely. Mr. Miller has never held a prominent public office and will enter upon an entirely new experience in Washington, but he is a worker and will soon become master of the business before him. Though he is as little known outside of his state, perhaps, as any of the president's advisers, he will exert a strong, if quiet, and conservative influence. Mr. Miller is rather under the medium height, of average build and about fifty years of age. He is in the full vigor of his mental powers. He is a Western man by birth and education and American in every fiber. Though he is named after the first President Harrison, the grandfather of his chief, it is nowhere stated that there is any family connection between them.

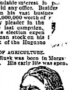
POSTMASTER GENERAL.



John Wanamaker

John Wanamaker has had a singularly successful career. He was born in Philadelphia July 11, 1837. He was not of the fortunate class to whom wealth comes by inheritance. He was, nevertheless, of the lucky few towards whom the tide of fortune seems to flow continuously and who prosper almost without effort. He was fashioned for a business career by that inexorable law of circumstances. His education was, therefore, not elaborate. He began work early, and from his meager earnings managed always to save something each week, till at the age of twenty-three he had $100 to his credit. A lucky investment in real estate increased this amount to $2,000, thus enabling him to start a clothing store on his own account. He soon rose to be one of the leading clothiers in this country, and afterwards gradually converted the business into the dry goods line. His appearance in business was almost simultaneous with his advent into public life. He became identified with every popular movement, and when the centennial celebration commission was created his was one of the first names mentioned. He was also prominently identi[illegible] with the movement for the correction of abuses in the municipal government of Phila[illegible] phia. Mr. Wanamaker is a man of very ch[illegible] ble instincts and dispenses his bounty [illegible] free and unstinted hand. He has estab[illegible] several institutions for the benefit of th[illegible] Philadelphia. Although Mr. Wanamaker h[illegible] ways taken a commendable interest in p[illegible] affairs he has never held any office. Besides interest derived from his vast business Wanamaker owns $3,000,000 worth of r[illegible] tate. He was an early pleader in the protection during the last campaign, [illegible] tributed largely to the election expen[illegible] Wanamaker is of German stock on his f[illegible] side, and a descendant of the Huguenot mother's line.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.



JERRY RUSK.

Jeremiah McLain Rusk was born in Morgan county, Ohio, in 1830. His early life was spent in farm work, and upon attaining his majority, in 1853 he moved to Wisconsin and engaged in agriculture in Vernon county. In 1862 he entered the Union army and was commissioned major of the Twenty-fifth Wisconsin regiment, rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel and served with Gen. Sherman from the siege of Vicksburg till the close of the war. In 1865 he received the brevet of brigadier general of volunteers for meritorious service at the battle of Salkehatchie. Mr. Rusk was elected bank controller of Wisconsin in 1866, which post he held till 1870, in which year he was elected a member of congress by the Republicans. He served three terms, and as chairman of pensions performed important services in readjusting the pension rates. President Garfield offered him the post of charge d'affaires in Paraguay and Uraguay, also chief of the bureau of engraving and printing, both of which offers he declined. In 1882 he was elected governor of Wisconsin and served three terms.

The "Glare" of our White Skins.

Nothing is more common than for Europeans to complain of the difficulty they have in individualizing men of dark races, who to the eye of the white man seem all more or less alike. The natives of India have apparently exactly the same difficulty with white men. Some men of the Lancashire Regiment stationed at Benares recently broke loose and raided a liquor shop in a neighboring village. Some of the culprits were so drunk that the authorities easily discovered them, but in order to spot the remainder the regiment was paraded, and the villagers were asked to point out the guilty men. They absolutely failed to do so in a single case, whereupon a native paper, commenting on the incident, says: "Not a doubt of it. One of the most difficult feats under the sun is to identify Europeans, they are so much alike, with their loud, glaring, white color. We wonder whether their friends and relations are at a loss as to who's who?"—London Globe.

A Surfeit of Beauty.

It is doubtful if there is any one state in America containing so many pretty women as California and any one containing so few as New York. As one walks down Kearney or Montgomery streets in San Francisco, one becomes almost surfeited by the unrelieved ranks of pretty girls, with their round, plump figures, their vivid coloring, and delicate, regular features. They are frequently painted, but they are triumphs of nature over art for all that, and could well afford to discard the rouge pots. They do not dress as well as they might, but their figures are so delightful; they look such thorough women, instead of suggesting a stuffed fashion plate, that one is willing to forgive San Francisco her lack of good dressmakers.—Gertrude Franklin Atherton in San Francisco Argonaut.

Lincoln on Jefferson.

George N. Strout, of Nebraska City, has an autograph letter written by Abraham Lincoln in 1859. It is an answer to an invitation to attend a banquet in Boston on the anniversary of the birth of Thomas J[illegible]. The letter concludes with th[illegible] ing tribute to the author o[illegible] mortal Declaration of Indepe[illegible]

"All honor to Jefferson, to [illegible] who, in the concrete press[illegible] of a struggle for independence by a single people, had the coolness, forecast and capacity to introduce into a merely revolutionary document an abstract truth, applicable to all men and all times, and so to embalm it there that today and in all coming days it shall be a rebuke and a stumbling block to the harbingers of reappearing tyranny and oppression.

Miss Higgins, a school teacher near Gladstone, Manitoba, committed suicide by hanging; while her friends were at church. She came from Nova Scotia last spring, and had been in poor health.

Proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners.

The Board met on March 4th and proceeded to business by ordering the reports of county officers returned for proper verification. The tender of Woodbury & Moulton, of Portland, Me., $20,019 for the new bonds was accepted and the bonds ordered issued. Liquor bond of J. H. Peterson, of Fosston, was approved and license granted. The committee on East Grand Forks bridge recommended that an abutment be built at the east end; also an ice breaker. Commissioner Rhinehart was authorized to attend to said repairs. The petition of C. Kretzschmar for bridge repair at Thief River was referred to Mr. Hunt with power to take all needed action. The tax application of A. W. Mott was referred back, being out of the province of the board. That of A. Nelson was rejected and those of C. B Hafterson and Marder, Bushnell & Co., granted. A refunding of certificate No. 1713, tax sale of 1884, with costs, was ordered. The correction of taxes asked for by Joseph Rose as to certain real estate in Gervais was allowed and the auditor directed to make the pro-entry on the tax duplicates. The application of O. Sakrison and August Stromberg for appropriations out of the county poor fund were disallowed. A hearing was set at the next session of the board in the matter of the school petition of Olof Wisley, for changing the boundaries of certain school districts in Roome and Tynsid Tps. The auditor and treasurer were directed to apportion any poor funds on hand on the 1st day of April next proportionately (after all county poor orders issued prior to said date have been redeemed) to the several townships, cities and villages in the county, and whenever application is made to said officers between April 1st and June 1st next, from any town for payment to town treasurer of any poor funds collected in such township, said auditor and treasurer shall ascertain the amount so collected and payment of said funds shall be made immediately. The official reports of Register of Deeds, Clerk of District Court, Sheriff and Superintendent of Schools were ordered published. The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, Charges have been made by a certain newspaper relative to alleged overcharges paid for publishing the delinquent tax list for the year 1887, therefore be it

Resolved, That the chair appoint a committee to investigate the same, and be it further

Resolved, That the chair appoint a special committee to examine reports of county officers.

The chair appointed Messrs. Hunt, Kirsch and Rinehart of the board, together with the auditor and county attorney, as an investigating committee, and Messrs. Johnson, Kirsch and Hunt a committee on officers reports.

The following amounts were appropriated out of the county poor fund:

County Auditor.

Death of Wm. J. Arnold.

The Wabasha Herald.

Hon. William J. Arnold died at his home in Wilson, Wis., on Saturday morning last of heart disease, aged 78 years, after an illness of five weeks.

Mr. Arnold was born at Smithfield, Rhode Island, Aug. 14th, 1810, and his ancestors were of those that landed from the May Flower at Plymouth Rock. When a young man he came west as far as Corning, Steuben County, N. Y. and remained there in business, occupying several public positions until 1856, when he removed to Minnesota, settling at Wabasha, where he took general charge of the large general merchandise and lumber business of H. D. Allen & Co. until they were wiped out by the financial crash in 1858 and manipulation of the company's secretary. He represented the county in the first State Legislature of 59.'60, and was appointed postmaster here by President Lincoln, and held the office for eight years, and during the war was sent South twice by the goveror of the state as a republican to poll the vote of some of the Minnesota regiments in the field. After his retirement from the government service he held many public election positions until his removal to Wilson, Wis. Oct. 26th, 1841 Mr. Arnold married Miss Harriet N. Kress, of Covington, Tioga County, Penn., who with three sons, John K., Ralph E., and William F., survive him. Mr. Arnold was a man always among the formost looking to the advancement of our city. During the war, was active in all measures relating to recruiting and did herculean work in raising means to support destitute soldier's families and look after the sick. Many a fond remembrance is held of him for acts of this kind in his public and private life.

His remains arrived here for burial Monday evening, accompanied by his two sons, Ralph and William. The members of Wapahasa Lodge A. F. & A. M., of which organization Mr. Arnold was a charter member escorted the remains to Riverview cemetery, and his old friends turned out en masse and paid their last tribute of respect. At the grave there was prayer by Rev. L. C. Birch, after which the usual Masonic burial took place.

Binding Twine Trust.

The Farmer's Alliance at Prosper Roasts The Combine.

Minneapolis Journal.

Prosper, Minn., March 9—The farmer's Alliance met here to consider the question of trust. President Thomas Bursell said the binding twine trust proposed to levy tribute to the extent of $10,000,000. The farmers should combine and either break the trust and secure twine at a fair price or find some substitute or stack their grain without binding it.

Daniel Bowerman thought the hopes of the syndicate controlling the factories were based on the belief that no substitute could be found for the sisal and manilla twine. He has used a cotton twine last year that gave good satisfaction.

G. W. Sprague said the total amount of twine used last year was about 100,000,000, pounds, which sold at the factories for about 9 cents per pound. The trust had contracted the entire product of all the factories at last year's prices. They had doubled the price to farmers and expected to clean up $9,000,000, from the farmers of the Northwest. The representatives of seven state alliances would meet in Des Moines next Tuesday. They expected to break the combination. The members of the alliance saved 25 per cent, on their twine last year.

C. L. Smith told what had been gained by the farmers where they had organized and held together. The saving to Dakota farmers last year was greater than the expense of the alliance for 10 years

A RAILROAD'S THE THING

And the Only Thing to Develop the Northern Portion of the State.

A County Rich in Promise That Awaits the Coming of the Settler.

Land and Timber That are Practically Worthless Without the "Great Civilizer."

Pioneer Press.

A gentleman of the northern portion of the state, who is not in St. Paul as a lobbyist and who will probably say or do little relative to the grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg, was speaking of the matter among a few friends yesterday, and took quite decided grounds in advocating the passage of the bill by the senate as it came from the house. He said:

"I have lived in the Red River Valley a number of years, and among the people of that section there is no desire to withhold this grant. They know that the lands between Red Lake and Duluth are practically worthless until a road is built through them. Even if the rail road does get every other section of the land, does it not leave half of the lands open for the benefit of settlers? Without the road how are settlers to get the lands, and what would they do with them after they did get them? There is no denying the fact that most of these lands are worthless. There are in places good pine lands, but who will be benefited the most by the opening up of these pine lands? Cannot the people of the far western prairies use this lumber to good advantage? Will not there be hundreds of saw mills started along the line of this road where the pine exists? Of course; and the whole of the state will reap the benefit, for no enterprise can be carried on without some good coming to every section of the commonwealth. Now it is said that these lands belong to the state, and if kept by the state would be of vast benefit to future generations. Would it not be better to legislate for the present generation and give the people of the present day a chance, especially the people of the Red River Valley, who would be brought into close communication with the great lakes?

Of course it is natural that the people of St. Paul and Minneapolis should be apprehensive of the Zenith City, but if they would look at this matter unselfishly I think they would see that the great benefits accruing to the northern part of the state would in time redound to the prosperity of the cities and to the people of every section of the state. These lands will remain undeveloped and unsettled until the road is built. They will be worthless, but now the Duluth & Winnipeg offers to build through to the Red River, and within two years, and in that time we may expect that not only will that section of the state be settled, but there will be developed great mining interests, which will not only contribute to the prosperity of the city of Duluth, but will make the State of Minnesota famous throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Now, as a matter of justice to the people of that section of the state already partially settled by the roads that have already been built there, would it not seem right to give them all the roads that can be built? Has the building of any of the roads into that section of the state been detrimental to any other road in the same section? The building of the Manitoba has not injured the Northern Pacific, nor has any of the lines of the latter injured the former. This new road will open up a country of its own. It will not only do that, but it will develop the country which is already practically settled, and the other roads will grow with the country. It may be the means of giving the people of the Red River Valley cheaper transportation, but that is no argument against it. The people of the southern part of the state who have been blest by numerous roads and competing lines would be the last to object to giving the same people something of the same kind.

Then there has been raised the cry that this bill means robbery of the state in taking away something like $5,000,000 in school lands, but it may also be remembered that these lands have lain idle for more than ten years now since the grant was made, and there has been no development of them where roads have not been built, and that they will remain uncultivated and undeveloped for at least ten years and perhaps twenty years more if this road is not built. If there are $5,000,000 worth of lands in the northern part of the state within ten miles of the proposed road, it will be found that the state will have a very serious time in collecting that money. As property, without any means of getting to them, there is no value in these lands and the state is not to be wronged or hurt in granting them to a road which will develop the remainder of the country.

For the past ten years we have been looking with longing eyes toward Duluth, and waiting for a road that shall give us a direct line from our wheat fields. We want a road that will depend upon us, and which we can depend upon to give us the best and most direct route through to the lakes. If other lines, which were originally built without considering Duluth as a grain market or a distributing point, are affected by this road they will have to stand it. We want the road, and we believe that the legislature will look at the matter from an unselfish standpoint, and pass the bill which has been agreed to by the house."

Unjust Criticism.

St. Paul Daily News.

Some of the daily papers in St. Paul and Minneapolis have been indulging in sharp criticisms of the legislature, alleging both extravagance and dilatoriness. Just what the motive for these attacks may be it is difficult to say, but that they are grossly unjust is a positive fact.

It is a common thing to slur a legislature for alleged sins of commission and omission. If they do not pass a great many bills they are accused of wasting their time, and if they do pass a good many they are accused of wasting the public money. So the members of the legislature might as well calculate on just so much criticism from papers which keep a standard stock on hand, and run it in to occupy space according to what the demand may be on their columns for other matters.

Aside from the fact that this legislature may have been more liberal than its predecessors in making committee clerkships, there is nothing to be criticised on the score of economy. This is the first legislature which has assembled under the ninety-day limit. The act under which the session was extended from sixty to ninety days also provides that no bills can be introduced during the last twenty days except upon request of the governor. There is, consquently, ample time to pass important measures with deliberation, and it is really better that many of them should be delayed, as better information can be secured at a later period.

Gov. Merriam's message to the House last evening is a case in point. He calls attention to the importance of economy in the appropration for State institutions and suggests plans for doing what is absolutely necessary with the least possible burden to taxpayers. Supposing the legislature had rushed through bills relative to these institutions as their carping critics seem to desire, then they would have been censured for haste.

Another mistaken idea of public is that the only work done is when the legislature is in session and that if the legislature sits but three or four hours the rest of the time is a holiday. The fact is all important legislature is shaped in the committee and the respective houses must largely rely upon and act according to the report of their committees. The committees are in session every afternoon and evening, session often being prolonged to midnight, and it is no exaggeration to say that no more industrious legislature has ever convened in the State. It is a very twopenny policy to cripple a committee by cutting off a petty clerkship and is only saving at the spigot.

As usual pending a senatorial contest, other business was subordinated, but that was part of the business for which the legislature was chosen. The adjournments, which have allowed members to visit their homes during the early part of the session have been wise, for if a member is to represent his people he should have frequent conference with them.

The people, too, should appreciate the fact that biennial sessions cause large appropriations because two years must be provided for. There is also two year's accumulation of local measures to be cared for. This legislature may yet become the proper subject of sharp criticism, but, if so, it will be for future and not for past acts.

How to Grow a Large Crop of Oats.

American Agriculturist.

One of our neighbors thinks of competing for the American Agriculturist prize of $500 for the largest yield of oats per acre. He has a piece of sandy loam near the barn that has had for years more than its proper proportion of manure. It was in potatoes last year. He thinks of putting on a ton of hill and drill phosphate per acre. He will sow it broadcast very early in the spring, and as soon as the land is dry enough to work, plow it in about five inches deep, and harrow until the land is in fine condition; then drill in one and one-half bushels of oats per acre and afterward sow broadcast on the surface one and one-half bushels more, and harrow and roll until they are slightly covered. His idea is that the shallow covered oats will start earlier than those drilled in deeper, and that the roots will occupy different layers of soil. This seems somewhat fanciful; but the object of offering these prizes is to bring out every known method of increasing the yield.

Were we going to compete, we should adopt the following method. We have a thirty-acre field that we intend to sow to oats this spring. It has been in grass and clover three years. It was plowed with a three-horse plow last spring, and planted to corn and potatoes without manure of any kind. It was well cultivated, and the land is clean, and as you walk over it you can (or could last fall when we were husking corn) feel the land give way and spring back at every step, showing that the sod keeps it loose and porous underneath. In the ordinary course, this land, the first moment it is dry enough in the spring, will be plowed about five inches deep with a gang-plow and three horses and harrowed and drilled in with oats just as fast as it is plowed. If this is not done, a heavy rain on the plowed land might delay sowing for several days. In fact, we have known it delayed two weeks. Sow two and one-half bushels of oats by measure per acre, being careful to blow and sift out all the small and light kernels. As our oats weigh forty pounds per bushel, this would be one hundred pounds per acre, or a little over three legal bushels. We never sow less than this, and frequently sow more. The English and Scotch farmers sow four or five bushels per acre, and before drills were used six bushel per acre were sown broad cast.

What Can be Done by an Average Farmer.

H. C. Adams in Hoard's Dairyman.

It is possible for any farmer who has common sense, industry, the best knowledge of dairying obtainable in this meeting and 80 acres of good land to keep 60 cows on his farm. He can pasture 20 acres, use 20 for soiling, 20 for hay and 20 for ensilage. He can hire all labor needed for $500 and buy 60 tons of feed for $720. Good cows, well fed, will average 250 pounds of butter each or 15,000 for the sixty. He can sell his butter at 25c per pound or $3,750. He will have 300,000 pounds of skim milk worth 20c per 100, or $600. The calf product, if the herd consists of grades will be worth $300—a total revenue of $4,650 with an outlay of $1200 and an immense amount of hard work and thinking on the part of the manager. While the result given may seem extravagant and unattainable, they are clearly within reach There are hundreds of men in Wisconsin who get 25 cents per pound for butter, scores of men who get more than 250 pounds of butter per cow, any number whose calves average them more than five dollars each, and thousands who get 20 cents per hundred for skim milk. Very few keep a cow on less than one and one-half acre of ground. If I did not belive these and better things were possible, I would not be in this convention.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk,—ss. In Probate Court. Special term, March 11th, 1889.

In the matter of the estate of Isak Shefloe deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Peter O. Onstad, administrator of the estate of Isak Shefloe, deceased, representing among other things that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining and allowing his account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to heirs.

It is ordered, that said account be examined and petition heard, by the Judge of this Court, on Tuesday, the 9th day of April, A. D. 1889, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in Crookston, in said county.

And it is further ordered, that notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper, printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 11th day of March, A. D. 1889.

By the Court,
C. O. Christianson,
Judge of Probate.

FOUR NEW STATES:

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

South Dakota.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

North Dakota.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

Montana, the Golden.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

Washington.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

Wide Awake for March has several features appropriate to the Inaugural month: a charming adventure story, "How Nat Saw the Inauguration," relating to what befell a little fellow who walked into town from Alexandria to see President Cleveland take the oath of office four years ago; a reminiscence of the Harrison campaign of 1840, and a pretty little tale about Mrs. Harrison when she was a school girl—these last two are in the department of "Men and Things." Daudet's Pathetic Alsace-Lorraine story, "The Last Day at School," has been translated for this number by Mary Ferguson. There is an amusing western story, "How Bess was Kidnapped," by Theodora Jenness, and a good outdoor story, "The Coon Hunt in Wheeler's Woods," by Rowland E. Robinson. Margaret Sidney's little Peppers are having a jolly time back at the "little brown house," while Mrs. Sallie Joy White, in another part of the magazine, tells "How the Blind Kindergarteners Read Five Little Peppers," the Pepper serial published several years ago. Mr. Trowbridge's "two Davids" are getting tastes of country and city life, each in a way hardly counted upon. Mrs. White, in her cooking paper, tells how the Boston public school children are taught to boil cabbage "without smell" in the school-kitchens. Professor Starr writes about "Some Odd Fish" in his geological talks, and Prof. Mason describes the flying proa Queen Kapiolani sent to President Cleveland. There is a delightful article on "The Skylark," by Mrs. F. A. Humphrey; also a richly illustrated paper about "Pets in Literary Life," by Eleanor Lewis. The poems of the number are charming: "Schnontz and I," by Graham R. Tomson; "March Bugles," by Mrs. Whiton-Stone; Capt. Carnes' Profitable Pepper," by John Albee, and others by M. E. B. and Clinton Scollard.

The department of "Men and Things" is very full and rich in anecdotes and pithy talks. Wide Awake is $2.40 per year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MARCH 14, 1889.

Farmers Combine.

To Manage Their Business and Promote Their Special Interests.

The following extracts from a report in the Sleep Eye Herald of the past week are of interest, as showing what some of the farmers out of the organizations are trying to accomplish in their localities:

Two o' clock Saturday afternoon was the time, and the Commercial hotel was the place where some fifty representative farmers gathered to discuss matters in which the producers of the community are interested. The meeting was called to order by J. N. Montgomery, who read the published call, after which Samuel Sherman, of the town of Leavenworth, was selected as chairman, and Mr. Sanders, of Prairieville, was elected secretary. The meeting then listened to some remarks from Mr. Montgomery, who orated on the subject of trusts and monopolies, and he deftly whacked over the head everything in the shape of trusts, combines or monopolies which have raised their hydra head for the past few months, in his own inimitable and original way. His belief is that the farmers should also combine and fight this devil with it own fire. He wanted something done to reduce taxes, and exclaimed against justice as meted out in our courts where a man convicted of manslaughter at a cost of $2,000 should be set free by a payment of $500 fine: He alluded to the fact that his cow, assessed at $15, was only worth $10 in the market. Mr. Ingram thought that to build a cold storage warehouse was a small thing; that what we wanted was a grain wharehouse, built and run on a regular plan, to take care of our own produce. Van Dusen & Co quoted prices right along, which were 10 cents lower than regular markets; less cost of handling and freight, and what he wanted to do was to save this 10 cents.

Mr. Kolbe stated while a butter and egg depot was all right, that the great interest here was in a grain and warehouse, for the handling of that product, was most desirable; he believed in combining against combinations. If a man was sick and could not help himself with mild medicine he should take a strong dose and help himself; the farmer had been pinched on one side and then on the other and has been about it, but now they wanted to quit that foolishness and help themselves. Mr. Ingram thought the greatest trouble would be in getting farmers to hang to gether. There were a great many foreigners who were farmers who seemed to be afraid to go in with the rest. Mr. Sanders took the view that the farmers lacked cohesion; that while it was all right for them to differ in politics, religion and morals, they would have to unite against monopolies or their cause would fail. Should we make this combination we could only hope to save those profits made by dealers; if there was money enough in grain to keep six or seven buyers here, there was certainly enough money in it to pay the farmers to establish themselves; he had some experience in these things and thought they could earn 40 per cent on their investment, and more if everything worked satisfactory; he argued that the business should be run by farmers as if they put the thing in the hands of the people in town they were liable to got left any way. Mr. Montgomery here rose and polished off a few more combinations to the queen's taste, and said he had lots more papers home on the same subject. Mr. Montgomery was and the way he emphasized extracts which he read was very realistic; he incidentally expressed himself as of the opinion that the value of the egg and butter productions was greater than that of any other one thing. Good and bad butter was discussed after which the motion was stated and carried unanimously.

Mr. Addy wanted a mill built, so we could mill our own wheat and ship the product, and a gentleman suggested a railway and a canal. Mr. Addy also suggested that the transactions of the meeting be kept a secret, as well as the meetings to be held in the future. Mr. Kolbe objected to this, because, he said, that our wives would want to know all about this thing, and they were interested as much as we were, and to have it known that this was a secret organization would prejudice them at once. A farmer moved that the chair appoint a committee of five to draw up a constitution and by-laws for the association, which was amended to make the committee elective rather than appointive, whereupon the suggestion was approved of, and the meeting proceeded to elect members of the committee.

Verndale Journal: At the session of the public lands committee of the house Tuesday, it was decided to report the bill forfeiting the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg back to the house with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. General J. H. Baker is the leader of the forces favoring the forfeiture of the grant, and he claims to be actuated by the highest motives and that he appears simply as a private citizen. Mr. Baker will find it difficult to convince the public of his disinterestedness, for his well known characteristics can not be thus easily forgotten by the people of Minnesota. The Manitoba company's opposition to the Duluth & Winnipeg is a patent fact to all who have given this subject any attention, for Jim Hill wishes to build a similar road himself. The result to be a accomplished by the Duluth & Winnipeg can not be acomplished by the Manitoba, for it would in no wise be a competing line, and the interests of the producers of the Northwest demand that an independent outlet to Minnesota's lake port be constructed. Undoubtedly the spirit of the times is against land grants to railroads, but this is not a sufficient reason in the present controversy. The substantial benefits which will result in opening up the vast tract of territory through which the Duluth & Winnipeg will run will greatly surpass the proposed aid in its behalf. Mr. Baker has sought to awaken the popular prejudice by an appeal to sentiment in favor of the educational and charitable funds of our state, which the people are led to suppose are to be greatly despoiled by the consummation of what he has denominated a gigantic steal. It must be borne in mind that the value placed on these lands is mostly fictitious, until a railroad shall pass through this region now largely unexplored, and the indirect benefit which the northern protions of our state would reap from the opening up of this vast region would equal if not surpass the benefits which are glowingly described by General Baker as flowing into the coffers of our state institutions should the Duluth & Winnipeg be deprived of this grant conferred upon it.

Selecting County Officials.

St. Paul Dispatch.

There is a bill now before the legislature—introduced, we believe, by Representative Crossfield—relating to the terms of all county officers, which ought to commend itself to all who desire the promotion of good local government. It provides in brief for the extension of the terms of office of county treasurers, superintendents of schools, coroners, surveyors, auditors, sheriffs, registers of deeds and county attorneys, from two to four years, and also provides that the election of the last three officials named shall take place hereafter two years after election of the first three.

The advantages of such a uniform system would be manifold. Each successive election brings the people closer to the conviction that local public officials should be elected without reference to party allegiance, and mainly, if not entirely, with a direct regard to the personal qualifications of the candidates for the offices which they respectively seek. The people of a given county should, for instance, take as great, if not greater care in the selection of their treasurer or other financial officers, as would a bank or other business institution. His choice should be made with reference chiefly to his personal qualification, and he should if possible be a man of experience in the duties which would select its chief officer without any reference to his personal qualifications and after he had qualified himself, become familiar with his duties and capable in their performance, would then cast him out and appoint his successor at haphazard, would not survive many repititions of the experiment

Yet such, in effect, is the system pursued by our several counties in the selection of their principal officials. Public officers should, of course, be made answerable to public judgment of their character and conduct; but to insist that this principle involves the turning out every two years of capable men and the imposition on the people of the expense and danger of an election to choose their successors, is not one whit better than an absurdity. This bill reduces the dimensions of the absurdity just one-half.

Another valuable end which is certain to be accomplished by the passage of this bill, is the alteration in office of county treasurer and the county auditor. An auditor and a county treasurer coming into office together, without perhaps even a rudimentary knowledge possessed by either, of single or double-entry book-keeping, are public characters of vast possibilities—in the direction of harm. Without aid from some quarter, they usually are about as well qualified to administer local finances as they are to teach Sanscrit, and they necessarily continue in that condition for many weary months after their installation. They will have just reached the point where they have learned something of each others functions and methods, and of their respective obligations and duties, when the day of judgment dawns, and they are called upon to yield up a trust which in the great majority of cases they have been diligent and faithful in the administration of. The election of one of these two officials each alternate two years, as provided by this law, would remedy this additional absurdity. The extension of their terms respectively for four years, represents the only other additional precaution practicable in the public interest and consistently with periodical accountability to the people.

In other and older states a law with like provisions is in satisfactory operation. The officers who hold over become thoroughly acquainted with their several duties and are enabled to incoming officials which aids and improves the public service.

We believe that the intelligent public sentiment of the several counties of the state favors the enactment of Mr. Crossfield's measure.

ARTICLES OF INORPO RATION

Of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company.

We, the undersigned, do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of incorporation under title one (1), of chapter thirty-four (34), of the general laws of the State of Minnesota, and the several acts of the legislature of said State, amendatory thereto, and for that purpose have adopted and signed the following articles of incorporation.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this corporation shall be

"The Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company."

The general nature of its business shall be to construct, maintain and operate for the transportation of persons and property for hire, a main line of railroad with one or more side-tracks, or lines of rails, and branch lines. The main line to commence at some point on Lake Superior at or near the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, extending thence in a westerly and northwesterly direction through the city of Crookston, to the international boundary line, at some point on the northern boundary line of Kittson County, in the State of Minnesota, with a branch line extending from said main line, at the city of Crookston, in a westerly direction through Polk County to the Red River. And also a branch line extending from the city of Crookston, in a southeasterly direction to the city of Brainerd, in Crow Wing County, Minnesota.

ART. 2. The principal place of business of said Railroad Company, shall be at Crookston, Minnesota.

ART. 3. The time of commencement of the said corporation shall be on the first day of March, 1889, and the same shall continue for a period of fifty years.

ART. 4. The amount of the capital stock of the said corporation shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000), and the same shall be divided into fifty thousand (50 000) shares of one hundred dollars ($100) each, and all capital stock subscribed for shall be paid in at the times and in the amounts required by resolution of the Board of Directors.

ART. 5. The highest amount of indebtedness or liability to which said corporation shall at any time be subject shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000).

ART. 6. The names and places of residence of the persons forming this association for incorporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague,	Edmund M. Walsh,
Nathan P. Stone.	William Anglim,
John R. McKinnon,	John McLean,
John Locken.

all of whom reside at the City of Crookston, in Polk County, Minnesota.

ART. 7. The names of the first Board of Directors of said corporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague.	Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone.	William Anglim.
John R. McKinnon.	John McLean
John Locken.

The government of said corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of seven (7) directors, to be elected by and from the stockholders annually, as hereafter provided. The annual meeting for such election shall be held at the office of the company at the City of Crookston, on the first Monday of February of each year, and until their successors are elected and qualified the said directors above named shall respectively continue to be such directors. The directors shall at their annual meeting to be held immediately after the annual meeting of the stockholders, elect a President, a Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Until the annual meeting as aforesaid:

Robert J. Montague shall be President,
John McLean, Vice-President.
Edmund M. Walsh, Secretary.
William Anglim, Treasurer.

In case of the resignation of any of said officers or directors, or their inability or refusal to act, their places shall be filled by the remainder of said Board of Directors, at any meeting called and held for that purpose. If for any cause the annual meeting for the election of the officers and directors shall not be held at the time above specified, it may be held at any other time that the directors may appoint for that purpose.

In witness whereof, the said incorporators have hereunto set their hands and seals this 16th day of February, A. D. 1889.

ROBERT J. MONTAGUE, (Seal.)
JOHN McLEAN, (Seal.)
EDMUND M. WALSH, (Seal.)

THE LAMPLIGHTER COUPON.

Our Book Coupon No. 2 presents another remarkable result of Alden's Literary Revolution. A copy of the book to be seen at this office, which Mr. Alden sells for 50 cents, is printed in large type on good paper, excellent printing and tasteful cloth binding, and is every way superior to the edition formerly published at the price of $1.50.

Few readers of books have not heard of The Lamplighter, which with two or three exceptions, is the most popular and widely circulated novel ever published by an American author.

Wholly free from any attempt at sensationalism it is intensely interesting, and though not a theological novel it is thoroughly Christian in its tone. We congratulate our readers on our ability to offer them a book so every way excellent, on such surprisingly easy terms. Please notice carefully the simple and reasonable conditions on which it is offered:

1st. Paid in advance subscribers to The Journal.
2d. To be presented within a specified date.
3d. 25 cents cash with the coupon, and 12 cents postage, if by mail.

The first condition is our requirement. If you have paid us—thank you; it is a pleasure to acknowledge it with the above privilege. If you have not yet paid, the above is an inducement for you to do so at once. If you have a neighbor who "borrows" your paper, or who is not a subscriber, will you kindly tempt him, for us, to subscribe by showing him this notice.

To favor our subscribers as much as practicable we have arranged with Mr. Alden (and this is where the importance of the date comes in) that if subscribers so request all books shall be shipped together in our care, and we will deliver them at our office; the cost of freight will not be over 3 cents a copy, instead of 12 cents postage, by mail.

CORNER ON TWINE.

How the Minneapolis End of it Was Engineered.

PLANS OF THE TRUST.

How it Means to Squeeze Big Money Out of Wheat Raisers---Farmers Talk of Boycotting Twine.

Minneapolis Journal.

Slowly but surely the binding twine trust is tightening the coils about the farmer. The soulless monopoly having cornered the indispensable sisal grass, from which binding twine is made, propose to have a pretty slice off the value of every sheaf of wheat bound this summer in the country. The first step in the trust's plan was to buy up the sisal crop in the Phillippine Islands, the next was to have it manufactured into twine for the trust by the helpless manufacturers, and the last was to quietly buy up all the twine possible left over from last year. Having accomplished these things the trust triples the price of twine and sits down to wait for the days to roll by until the wheat is ripe. It is a very pretty plan. Already the effect of it is seen here in Minneapolis where most of the twine in stock has been bought up for the trust and now lies in a Minneapolis warehouse, and where the price has already advanced materially.

C. L. Smith, the well known farmer's institute lecturer and small fruit culturist, gives the following interesting history of the trust:

"Experience has proved that the best binding twine is made of about 60 per cent of sisal and the balance tow or cotton; in fact no satisfactory substitute for sisal has yet been found. The greater part of the sisal imported to this country comes from the Phillippine Islands. Last winter a syndicate was formed of Boston and London capitalists, which bought up the whole of last year's sisal crop, thus "cornering" the market. There are three principal binding twine manufacturers in this country. When the manufacturers sought to procure their season's supply of sisal, they were informed that there was none on the market. Then they were approached by the agents of the syndicate, who made this proposition to them: The syndicate would furnish sisal to the manufacturs at last year's prices, provided that the latter in turn would sell to the syndicate their whole manufactured output at last year's prices. Two courses were open to the manufacturers. To accept the offer or shut down their factories. They accepted the offer. Then the syndicate sent agents all over the country buying up binding twine. Every pound in the country was thus secured, the agents in some instances paying a large advance over last year's prices.

The corner was now in good working trim. The intention of the syndicate was to keep their plans quiet until next summer when it would be too late to take measures to break the trust. The scheme was discovered by accident. The Dakota Farmers' alliance had planned to buy its twine direct this year, the same as last year, and an agent was sent east to contract for it. To his astonishment he found that the factories had disposed of their whole output. Further inquiry developed the fact that the twine could be procured for 25 cents a pound, while last year the ruling price was but 9 cents. Thus the trust was exposed.

To say that the farmers were indignant upon learning the situation is to express it very mildly. Many declared that they would stack their grain without binding before submitting to such an outrage. Out of the storm of protests the Des Moines convention grew. It is not easy to say just what action will be taken by the convention. The proposition has been made to utilize rope factories for binding twine manufactories and skirmish the tropics for sisal; but it is probably too late to carry such a plan into effect. The most acceptable substitute for sisal twine has been found to be a tow or cotton sized with glue but this twine becomes comparatively worthless in wet weather. The only remaining plan is to boycott the twine and the farmers seem inclined to do this. They say that if they submit to extortion this year they will have to next year and the year after; and that it is better to stand the loss on unbound grain for one season than to patronize the trust. It is very probable that a large proportion of this year's grain crop will be stacked without binding."

Minneapolis twine dealers are in much the same fix that the farmers of the northwest are, but they will not acknowledge it. About two months ago a young man dressed after the style of a frontier farmer appeared in town. He lost no time in making his way to the office of the different twine dealers. He wanted some twine and when he learned the amount on hand and the price of the same he quietly said he would take it and give his check for the amount. The banks on which the checks were drawn consulted, and when the dealers found that the checks were good they began to suspect something. When they learned that the "young farmer" was none other than the agent of the gigantic twine trust they felt like kicking themselves. The story goes that the "young farmer" was none other than Frank H. Warden, manufacturers' agent for dry goods and cordage in the Boston block; that acting under instructions from the National Cordage company he purchased all the twine in Minneapolis. It is said that when D. M. Osborne & Co., learned that they had sold their stock on hand to the trust they offered some $2,000 over and above the purchase price for the time, but they could not get it back. The trust had it, and they proposed to hold it. The Moline, Milburn, Stoddard company was taken in the same way.

Deere & Co., are said to have been cleaned out of twine also, but they deny it. They say there is no more of a twine trust than there is a flour trust. But from the following list of prices which they furnished to-day it is evident that there is but very little twine in sight that does not belong to the trust: American hemp, 15 cents; sisal, 16 cents; mixed twine, 17 cents; manilla, 18 cents. From these prices it is evident that there is a corner on twine of no small dimensions, when the same quality of twine was purchased last year for about half there prices. This, Deere & Co., affirm, is due to other causes, but they do not explain satisfactorily what these causes are.

When the Journal inquired of the Moline, Milburn, Stoddard company this morning about the reported purchase of all their twine by the trust, they said they had no time to answer such questions. There was no one at D. M. Osborn & Co.'s office who could give any information on the subject.

The twine about the sale of which the local dealers are kicking themselves is carefully packed away on the second floor of the Minneapolis Central Warehouse company's building at 700 1st at N. There are some 500,000 bales of it there.

"Peterson" for April is a superb number. It opens with a fine portrait of Mrs. President Harrison. The steel-engraving is lovely, and the numerous other illustrations are all good. "Bessie's Interference" is an excellent story and admirably illustrated. Mrs. Hooper's new serial, "Beyond These Voices," opens in an intensely dramatic fashion; and Mrs. Wilson's novelet, "A Modern Petruchio," grows better with every number. The short stories are exceptionally good; and Minna Irving's poem, "The Robin's Rain Song," is one of her sweetest lyrics. Ladies want the spring styles, and "Peterson's" double colored fashion plate and numerous wood illustrations offer examples of all the latest varieties of costumes for home and street wear. Terms: Two dollars a year. Address Peterson's Magazine, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Red River Valley.

O. C. Gregg Considers it the Garden of The Lord.

Minneapolis Journal.

Moorhead, March 13.—O. C. Gregg, in Moorhead News, speaking of the Red River Valley, says it "stands in the same relative position to the country east and west of it that the valley of the Nile in olden times did to Egypt. There is not another body of land to equal the Red River valley it productiveness, perhaps in the world. It started out on agricultural lines and will pursue them. I expect, of course, that radical changes in the system of its agriculture will be made, and the condition to produce changes are now being shaped. A large population is flowing west into Dakota, Montana, Washington and Oregon. Those regions are incapable of producing many of the necessities of life. These necessities or products must be shipped in there. That country is eventually to be the market for the Red River Valley. They can raise cattle, horses and sheep in a wild state, but they can't fatten them because they haven't the conditions necessary or the food. The fact that animals are grown up there in a wild state renders their nature such that when they are rounded up and confined they are restless and wild and fret to such an extent that no matter how well fed they may be, they do not improve. Then again they cannot produce the feed necessary to fatten if this other difficulty were removed, which is impossible. Now the Red River Valley is adapted to the production of all feed necessary for fattening beef, mutton and pork, and for feeding to dairy animals. The soil here is adapted to the growing of illimitable quantities of green food which can be preserved in silos at a cost not to exseen $1 per ton, so that cattle and hogs and sheep can be winter fed as cheaply nearly as summer. Farmers here will, therefore, soon see this great market for their products building up in the West, and will provide for it. Many will take up dairying, beef fattening, sheep raising, etc. This will give employment the year round for your farmers."

The relationship existing between the architect and the builder, says Carpentry and Building for March, was thus described by O. P. Hatfield, in a paper read before the recent National Builders' convention at Philadelphia: "The architect and the builder come to be looked upon as indispensable in their vocations, and altogether very useful persons in their way. To be sure, as the architect's labors imply a little more active exercise of his brains, and the builder's a little more close handling of heavy materials, the business of one is called a profession and that of the other a trade; but both are regarded as equally honorable and alike deserving to reap the rewards of honest industry. A worthy ambition impels both the architect and the builder to excel in their respective spheres of action, and the fortunate result is that the community profits by their emulation."

IN RE MR. BAKER.

W. P. Warner Undertakes to Correct J. H. Baker's Statements Regarding the Duluth Road.

St. Paul, March 12.

Editor Dispatch:—It is singular that a man of the character and standing of J. H. Baker should sign and cause to be published a letter containing so many misstatements as are set out in his letter of March 11th, published in the Pioneer Press of this date.

The originally located line of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad appears upon the map filed in the office of the secretary of state in November, 1882, and when Mr. Baker says that line reached the north boundary of the state more than 100 miles northeast of Crookston, he is not supported by the truth. The writer has been familiar with the enterprise of building the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad since the fall of 1882, and he never heard of the line first described in Mr. Baker's letter. Mr. Baker is simply mistaken in all he says in that regard.

Mr. Baker says: "The original Boston people who contemplated this first great line have wholly disappeared." This statement is likewise untrue. The parties originally concerned in building this road were citizens of Duluth. Certain Boston parties afterwards became associated with them, and expended on the enterprise over $300,000 in 1881. The line then contemplated and partially graded is the line appearing on the map on file in the office of the secretary of State, as before stated. These Boston parties are still interested in the enterprise.

Mr. Baker says: "A new lot of fellows have come upon the scene with wholly new purposes and schemes." It is true that other parties have become associated with the Duluth and Boston parties, but not with new purposes and schemes. The plan remains the same now that it was in 1878, and as delineated upon the map above mentioned, with the exception that it is now proposed to build the line from Cloquet to its western terminus with a maximum grade of 15 feet to the mile, a purpose which compels construction of one line more closely following the St. Louis River, in that vicinity, and hence it is that the portion constructed last year extends a little farther south than in the original line referred to on the map above mentionrd. I think the map showing this slight deviation was filed with the secretary of state not long since. The map of the whole line as now contemplated has been for several weeks on file with the board of railway and warehouse commissioners, and it shows substantially the line delineated on the map filed in 1882, as before stated.

Mr. Baker states it is now contemplated to build a line wholly different from the line originally contemplated and south of Leech Lake. Mr. Baker not only has no foundation for making that statement, but, furthermore, he ought to know that it is untrue. The plans and purposes of the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad company have been fully and repeatedly explained in his presence at various hearings before the house committee on public lands, where reference was made to the map on file with the board of railway and warehouse commissioners and to the only change contemplated, being the one above mentioned. The line originally contemplated is substantially the one now proposed, and none other. The writer some years ago advocated building the line south of Leech Lake instead of north of it, but he was overruled on that point, and in order to leave ample territory for the building of an independent road from Crookston to the lake by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba people, should they ever be able or inclined to build such a line. Mr. Baker knows this to be true, and in all fairness he should have framed his letters in harmony with the facts.

The proposed route of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad parallels nothing now in existence or in contemplation by anybody. The tissue of misrepresentations contained in Mr. Baker's letter could only have been made for a predicate of the concluding misstatement of that letter: "So that we have already in progress a line of road exactly where the Duluth & Winnipeg are asking an immense grant of school lands to aid in constructing a parallel line." Mr. Baker's premises are false, and so are his conclusions. Such a statement could not have been made to influence members of the legislature, because they understand the facts as they are. It must have been made to mislead people in various parts of the state in hope and expectation that they would, through false impressions as to the facts, enter some protest.

The fact that parties opposing the construction of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad, cause to be prepared and published gross misrepresentations of that enterprise, affords strong evidence that there can be no legitimate opposition.

Yours, etc., W. P. Warner.

Rumored Competition.

Duluth Herald: The rumor comes from Chicago that J. J. Hill, president of the Manitoba road, being unable to stop the construction of the Duluth & Winnipeg by defeating the land grant, has decided to push the construction of his own line from Crookston to Duluth direct. It has long been an open secret that Mr. Hill must, and therefore would at no distant date, build a direct connective between Duluth and his system of lines in the northwest. When competition comes, and he sees it is coming now in the Duluth & Winnipeg, he cannot afford to haul from the northern lines around to Duluth by the St. Cloud route. He will be forced to change the Manitoba system from a half Duluth, half St. Paul road, to a system ending definitely and for all time at Duluth and Superior. But the time may not have come yet. It is well to remember in connection with rumors of Mr. Hill's plans that he is a good deal of a bulldozer and often starts in schemes which he has no present intention of carrying out, simply to head off opposition or to make it hard for the opposition to secure funds. This, in fact, has been seen twice already in connection with a direct line from the West to Duluth. Happily, however, the Duluth & Winnipeg can neither be scared or hurt financially.

Crops and Prices.

The Prairie Farmer.

Prices for all kinds of farm produce, as well as stock, fluctuate from year to year. Whenever prices are low, there is always a considerable class that will sell out or discontinue growing to bring it back to a paying price, and as soon as prices begin to advance to any considerable extent, they are ready to start in again and do their part towards lowering prices. Such a course is not profitable, at least to the one that is changing, and it is too often the case, that the farmer who is trying to raise the most profitable crop each year, succeeds in doing exactly the reverse and strikes the market on the down grade. There are many conditions that will often render it necessary to change crops, and to dispose of one kind of stock and keep some other. At the same time, as a rule, changes should not be made entirely upon the market prices, as to attempt to judge or guess the market sufficiently in advance to raise a crop, or feed and prepare stock for market will in a majority of cases, result in failure.

One of the principal objections to risking the farm profits upon any one single crop, or kind of stock, is the increased resk in failure, first, in raising or growing any-thing to sell, and, second in being able to secure good prices, or rather prices that will return a fair per cent profit. There is always some risk of this at all times, and with all classes of products and stock, but with a variety of crops raised and fed to stock, this risk is reduced very materially. If the same general line of farming, however, is carried on, what we fail to receive with one we can make up with another, so that the average will be a fair per cent of profit. It is hardly to be expected that any one particular crop will return the largest per cent of profit each year. It is possible to cull out the worst and select the best, but not so fully but that there will be a considerable variation each year, in this respect. At least, in a series of years the farmer who carries out a system of farming based upon this plan will be able to show much the best per cents of profit,

Holsteins at Texas State Fair.

Farm and Ranch.

For many years the Holstein-Friesians have been attracting attention as a desirable combination animal for dairy and beef—and they certainly possess strong merits. But since the famous milk performance of Clothilde, beating the world's record, and since the butter test at the New York dairy show, where the Holsteins carried off the honors, they have become more popular than ever. They were well represented at the fair, mainly by Texas breeders, who have collected and bred some of the most famous stock on the continent.

Col. W. E. Hughes, of Dallas, exhibited a long line of Holsteins, which were liberally decorated with ribbons. Col. Hughes' thoroughbreds are nearly all late importations, and they have been undergoing a severe seige of acclimation which has been successfully passed. They have the pedigree and the basis for making the finest herd in the southwest, and Col. Hughes has the determination to do nothing less. He has also a fine lot of Holstein grades.

Among other prominent exhibitors of Holsteins were Messrs. Greerson Bros., of Fort Davis, Tex., who carried off the blue for the best bull three years and over, besides other premiums, and who have some superior cattle; S. B. Howard of Bonham, Tex., who received first and second premiums on two-year-old bulls, and who has built up a splendid herd; N. J. Doty, of Ferris, who carried off first premium for cows three years and over, besides other awards, and who has several extraordinary milk performers, and Messrs. Henson & Rathbone, of Kansas, who were not lacking in ribbon decoration.

Tom Green County Frank Lerch, cast his eye over the Holstein cattle on exhibit and said, "I'll buy some, and next year Tom Green County shall exhibit the best ever seen because our county produces everything to greater perfection than other places." After knowing Tom Green County Frank Lerch, we are ready to believe many things of the county which formerly appeared incredible.

How Shall the House be Warmed?

The question of how to warm arises with every new house, and very frequently also with houses already occupied. The choice is between open fires, stoves, furnaces, steam and hot water, including also certain combinations of these different elements. In every community will be found establishments devoted to the heating business and making a specialty of one or more of these systems, and for the most part the local householder is dependent upon these concerns not only for advice as to the best plan, but also for the practical execution of that plan. Some houses are satisfactorily warmed, others are not, and what seems to please in one instance under one set of conditions does not answer at all in another case. How shall the various systems be compared, not only as to their efficiency, but also as to their cost? is a question that often arises. This is being very satisfactorily answered, from one point of view, at least, by a house-heating competition instituted a short time since by The Metal Worker, of New York, the leading journal of its class, and one always noted for its enterprise. The elevations and plans of a modern dwelling of average size and appointments were put up as the foundation of the competition, and then $350 in cash prizes was ofered for the best schemes of heating the building by three different systems—namely: 1, Hot Air Furnace; 2, Steam Circulation, and 3, Hot Water Circulation. The entries in this contest were numerous, and included competitors in almost every state in the union (except the south,) also Canada and a small number from Europe. Plans were received in not only the classes specified, but also for heating building by combination systems, and to the latter complimentary prizes have been awarded. In the issue of The Metal Worker, March 2d, the editor announces (in part) the names of the successful competitors in this contest, and also presents one of the studies fully illustrated. Other studies, we are informed, are to follow, and it is fair to presume, therefore, that for some months to come, considering the number of valuable essays in hand, this journal will ring various changes on the heating of the dwelling in question. As estimates accompany the studies, their value to mechanics, builders and house owners is not to be gainsaid, while the general results will be to point out the very best in each of the systems considered.

In the First ward I. U. Jennings is the out-going alderman and is by no means anxious to succeed himself. Mr. Jennings has been a pains-taking faithful worker and would make a very good successor to himself.

Henry Nolan exhibits some matches that he brought from Tacoma, which, he says, are the best in existence though they don't look it. Henry says they have to be to stand that climate which is too damp wet for any use.

Brown, the cigar man shipped a large order of cigars to the new Columbia hotel at Fargo this week. The fame of his cigars is not confined to our city but extends throughout the length and breadth of the valley.

Senator Sampson's attitude upon the Duluth & Winnipeg extension is a very unfortunate one for this country. The interests of his constituents demand the building of the road and every pressure possible should be brought to bear upon him to induce him to change his position.

Mrs. R. Reynolds and her granddaughter departed for Pennsylvania last Thursday evening, where they will visit some time with Mrs. Reynold's daughter, Mrs. Dagget, before going on to California, where Mrs. R. will reside with her daughter, Mrs. Ellis. Miss Sang remains in St. Cloud for a week or so, while Mrs. R. goes to Duluth for a visit with her son Fred.

Good smoke for a nick? Try Herb.

Mrs. Dreeland an old lady living on the hill, fell in a fit on Monday afternoon while walking on the sidewalk in front of Ben. Clements' store. Dr. Dampier arrived on the spot about ten minutes after the occurrence but she had so far recovered as not to require his services. She was taken into Mr. Clements' store and was soon able to proceed on her way home.

Sweet Florida oranges cost no more than inferior grades at Herb's.

Tom Morrissey returned from Tacoma last week, where he has secured a good position, to get his family ready to go back with him. He says that he likes that country very well, so far; thinks a man is all right out there if he has a good steady job, which all who go have not got. Is of the impression that business will be largely overdone out there this summer from the way people are flocking in. Thinks that a man could make big money for a time if he had enough capital. Says he would not advise any one who has a fair business here to leave it to go out there.

Ed. Love, of the Kittson County Enterprise, was elected village recorder at their last election, but takes it modestly. His opponent was P. H. Konzen, editor of the Hallock News, and while many newspaper men would make the welkin ring over the "great victory" over a competitor, Ed. very sensibly says but little about it, for which he is deserving of great credit.

"Wait for the wagon;" the little baby wagon, the Whitney baby wagon at Herb's about April 1st.

Dr. M. Watts returned from Canada last week, tickled to death to get back to the land of good chewing gum once more. The doctor's visit evidently did him lots of good, as he is actually getting to be good looking. The other benedicts among the fraternity begin to look green with envy but, they say, "beauty is only skin deep, anyhow!" "It's blood that tells!" &c. Meanwhile the doctor pursues the even tenor of his way without even a tremor. He says he has had a good time, but is glad to be home again.

The brethren met at Masonic Hall on Thursday evening to tender a farewell reception to their W. M., Bro. S. F. Markham, who was about to leave for the Pacific coast. A jolly good time was had, during which Mr. Markham was presented with a beautiful gold watch and chain by the brotherhood. It was so complete a surprise that he could find no words to express his feelings, but his silence, and a suspicious moisture of the eyelids spoke volumes, and was the most eloquent answer that could have been given. A very enjoyable time was had, which nothing but the early departure of Mr. M. could mar.

W. H. Wells, of Fon du Lac, Wis., was in the city last week, making arrangements for the auction sale that occurs to-morrow on the Reis farm, at Edna. Mr. W. is administrator for the estate of his brother who died suddenly not long since, leaving, among other property, the Geo. C. Reis farm. Mr. W. intends to carry on the farm on a smaller scale, and will dispose of all surplus stock and machinery not needed on the place. This will afford a fine opportunity for those needing such things to obtain them at bed-rock prices on time. This is Mr. Wells' first visit to our city and he expresses much surprise to find so large and enterprising a place as Crookston is. He thinks we have a grand future before us if we will all take hold and improve the opportunities we now have.

The Whitney baby carriage is the best. At Herb's.

T. A. Harris returned on Tuesday morning from his visit to the far west. He has been to Spokane Falls, Seattle, Tacoma and all the principal points and is pretty well posted. He says in all his travels he has seen no better city than Crookston, that while many have made money there on the rise of property so many are pouring in that the business is liable to be over-done. He says that already many are unable to find employment and are out of money and hundreds more coming every week. He reports that our friends out there are doing as well as the average and making some money. He would not advise anybody to go there to make money farming as the conditions are all against it. Some make money raising hops and that is about the extent of it. Tom says he is now perfectly satisfied with Polk County.

T. B. Merrill was up from Faber on Tuesday to procure an auctioneer's license. He says his boys commenced seeding on Tuesday.

OBSERVATIONS.

This week THE JOURNAL observes that there is great uneasiness because Sampson does not pass the bonding bill. A physician should be sent down at once.

That there is not much excitement over the approaching city election. They say that if the bonding bill is not passed we shall not need any—nor a city.

That Mr. Sampson's ears must be getting red-hot if there is anything in the old saying that your "ears always burn when you are talked about."

That Ed. Wile's "Spring Idyl" draws great crowds at the C. O. D. to see the Manitoba road leading the world around by the nose.

That Herb got out his peanut roaster on Monday; a sure harbinger of spring.

That the farmers are hustling the seeders to the field.

That among the names mentioned for mayor are A. A. Miller, Herrick, Watts, Montague, Steenerson, Ed. George, Van Dyke, Anglim and John Cromb.

That Herb's sweet Florida oranges take the—bakerie.

That Senator Sampson's action in voting against the Duluth & Winnipeg road is regretted and condemned by all with whom we have talked.

That Ed. George remarks that the effort to shelve him by making him a justice of the peace is decidedly too thin.

That sometimes the biggest kind of a storm is brewing when everything appears serene and peaceful.

That Saake's new ad is a daysie. Read it.

That Mr. Sampson will not find it judicious to neglect to pass the bonding bill or to amend it to death after giving his promise to the citizens of Crookston to pass it as it was.

That the new style in spring Hats has a very forward expression—in fact it is all forward, the afterward being as conspicuous by its absence as are the steps to those funny little bob-tail street cars in St. Paul. They make the wearer look like a spasm of economy had struck the country cutting off half the expenses—and the hat, like 1st of January good resolutions—half gone by this time, the only half left being way ahead of time. The ladies tell us they are "dux" but they look more like peacocks with their parasols misplaced in front. We live in hopes that it will not be considered the proper caper to wear them at public entertainments, if so we offer as an amendment that the front part be served like unto the afterwards.

Geo. Buckman is very sick at his residence on Houston Avenue. His case is considered critical.

E. O. Flanders has a very sick Star Bashaw colt but has hopes to bring him out all right with care.

Judge Spendley is rapidly recovering from his carbuncle seige and is hopping about as lively as a cricket. He has had a serious time but is all O. K. now.

Louis Barrette, who was sent to state's prison several years ago for shooting at a man named Asselin through a window returned on Wednesday morning.

The Bulletin gives an account of the death of a son of L. C. McKnight, aged 14 years and 4 months, which sad event occurred in St. Paul one day last week. The boy was brought to Fisher for burial.

The Workingman's Building and Loan Association of Crookston has been doing a very fine business for the past six months. Assets at the present time $20,000. Issue new series of stock on April 6th. In our next issue we shall present a comparison of the benefits of our own home company with a foreign concern.

A report was circulated on Tuesday that Mr. Sampson had introduced the bonding bill. There was nothing else he could do after that petition representing nearly all of the taxable property in the city and after he had given his word that he would pass the bill.

W. C. Spottswood has purchased Mr. Laurence' interest in the hardware firm of Stewart & Laurence, the new firm now being Stewart & Spottswood. Mr. Spottswood is a traveling man and has an interest in the house for which he travels. Arthur Stewart will manage the business here while Mr. S. will still continue on the road.

Dan. O'Conner returned from St. Paul on Wednesday morning. He reports that Senator Buckman introduced the bonding bill; that Sampson refuses to give up the petition that was handed him in the case. We are of the opinion that Senator Sampson will find that he has made a serious mistake in following out the wishes of the Manitaba road so closely by opposing our bonding bill and the D. & W. road.

The Polk County Bar Association met on Saturday evening and adopted the following:

"WHEREAS, It being probable that a successor will soon be selected to succeed the present incumbent to the office of United States District Attorney for the district of Minnesota, and

WHEREAS, Recognizing in our esteemed brother, Hon. H. Steenerson, those qualities which have so deservedly elevated him to the high position he occupies in the confidence and esteem of all who know him; and further recognizing his particular fitness to direct the administration of said office by reason of his known ability as a jurist and lawyer, be it

RESOLVED, That we, the Bar of Polk County, Minnesota, respectfully recommend and urge his appointment as District Attorney for the District of Minnesota. And it is further

RESOLVED, That copies of these resolutions be sent to his Excellency, the President of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Minnesota."

So says the Polk County Bar and all the people say "amen."

THE FARM.

Agriculturist.

The worldly comforts are cash, confidence, cheerfulness and constancy.

"A 'tried and trusted friend' is usually all right till he is tried and trusted."

The trouble is, details are too much neglected, and there come in the losses.—Country Gentleman.

The dignity of labor is not what it fetches in the market, but what it develops in the man.

There is more comfort in a good, strong harness than there is an accident insurance policy sometimes.

The cost of raising potatoes in the southwestern part of Minnesota is estimated at from 12 to 15 cents per bushel.

Among the points of a good dairy cow mentioned by Dr. Law in a recent paper were, development of abdomen, depth and breath of body posteriorly, evidences of large blood vessels, fineness of the bony structure, looseness, pliancy and elasticity of the skin, abundance of sebacious secretions.

A speaker at the late meeting of the Pennsylvania state dairymen's association said: "A milch cow can eat almost anything she likes without injury to the milk. What she requires is good food, in variety, regularly, and enough of it. Feed succulent food for milk and dry food for beef."

The farmer, as a producer of necessary articles of consumption, should take the same interest in his business, and be as anxious for its success as he who is engaged in manufacturing or commerce, and should study the ways and means carefully and intelligently, being ready to adopt any or all methods that promise success.

The agricultural professors tell us that the raising of 30 bushels of wheat to the acre will remove from the land 71 pounds of nitrogen, 24 pounds of phosphoric acid and 37 pounds of potash. This could be replaced by 60 pounds of sulphate of ammonia, 171 pounds of superphosphate of lime and 76 pounds of chloride of potash.

Whole Flax Seed as Feed.

Flax is extensively grown at the West for its seed. It is sold generally so cheap that Eastern farmers can better afford to buy it than to grow it. The crop is very exhaustive, both of ammonia and mineral elements; but Western farmers do not mind this so much as do those of the East, or as they themselves should. Whole flax seed well boiled is very laxative, keeping the digestion good, and it may be fed with straw, thus taking the place of hay. It is probably cheaper nutrition fed thus than stock can be supplied with otherwise. Farmers who use none of it make a mistake. Oil meal has less fattening properties than the whole seed, but is safer unless the seed is well boiled before feeding.

Profits of Farming.

There is a good deal of talk among farmers and others that farming does not pay as a buisness. This is doubtless a fact, some seasons, and sometimes a succession of seasons are poor and that makes a long hard pull, but those who depreciate farming forget that all other kinds of business has its ups and downs, and that only about five per cent, of the business men of towns and cities succeed permanently. In the large cities of Minnesota, many men who are now the richest have failed at least once in business careers. The fact is that while farming does not make quick or large fortunes, it pays better on the average than any other occupation. The wages of mechanics seem high in proportion to those of the laborer on a farm, and yet, at the end of the year, a prudent farm laborer will have saved more money than the mechanic whose idle days have consumed all the wages earned when employed, while on the farm every day counts, and expenses are trifling. It is not what a man earns, but what he saves that measures his success. The cities are full of men who left farms because the business did not pay, only to find that other callings pay even less, and are subject to more worry and perplexity. The farmer who owns his farm and improves it year by year, while making a living for himself and family, is laying up a little fortune in the best of saving banks. Increased fertility gives year by year better crops and better profits, and then a better barn is possible. A better barn means more stock and more fertility, and more crops again, a constant increase in comfort and wealth.

Chinch-Bug Diseases.

Mr. C. P. Gillett treats this subject in an interesting manner in Bulletin No. 3, of the Iowa Agricultural College Experiment Station. After referring to the comparatively recent dote at which it became known that chinch-bugs were subject to disease, Mr. Gillette refers briefly to Dr. Shimer's observations on an epidemic in 1867 which carried off the bugs so completely that it was impossible to find specimens for his collection the following year. Then came the observations of Prof. Forbes on a similar epidemic in Illinois, in 1883. This was a truly contagious disease, and is conducted from bug to bug by microscopic germs, as small-pox or yellow fever is conducted from man to man. These are probably the only reports on chinch-bug diseases before the present season.

In his observations in Iowa the present season, Mr. Gillette details the manner in which the disease works, and the deadly effect which it has upon the bugs. His observation began August 3, when the bugs were quite abundant, and by the middle of October almost no bugs were to be found. Experiments were made to determine the possibility of making a practical use of the disease-germs by exposing apparently healthy bugs to them, and, as was expected, the disease soon appeared and destroyed most of them.

"No one who knows the nature of the disease, says Mr. Gillette, will doubt the possibility of introducing it into localities where it has not previously occurred, but, as it has probably been in most places where the bugs have long been present, it is extremely doubtful whether the promiscuous scattering of the germs would be of any use. If the germs of the disease are already present, it would be of no use, and if the proper atmospheric conditions are not present the germs will not grow, no matter how numerous they are. If, however, the bugs have continued free from the disease in any locality in the State where they have been numerous the past season, and where the necessary atmospheric conditions have been present, these places may be greatly benefited by the introduction of the disease when the bugs are again numerous."

Mr. Lincoln and a Reporter.

Washington Post.

An old newspaper man was reminiscencing a bit the other night, and said some interesting things, as such a reminiscence is apt to do. He said: "My only experience with Abe Lincoln was just after his election to the presidency. I was sent down to Springfield by the New York Tribune with the mission to find out all I could of his cabinet and policy. In those days a president-elect was not besieged as Harrison has been, and such a mission as mine was a streak of newspaper enterprise. I felt my importance tremendously, and being young and fresh was immediately sized up by Mr. Lincoln, as I can see now, though I didn't see it then.

"He received me kindly in his office and said pleasant things about the paper and so on. He sat facing me, with legs crossed and nursing his knees, rocked his body slightly and slowly forward and backward. Finally, after speaking of several slight matters, he asked:

" 'Now, my young friend, what can I do for you?'

" 'I drew forth a note book with much display, produced a pencil, and said:

" 'Mr. Lincoln, I would be obliged to you to give me the names of such members of the cabinet as you have decided upon, if any, and what policy you will pursue, if you have settled upon anything definite.'

"Mr. Lincoln gave me a look which filled my heart with pride. for I thought it was full of admiration and respect. It makes me groan when I think of it now.

"He said; 'I shall be glad to do anything I can to assist you.'

" 'Have you settled upon your cabinet and your policy?"

" 'Oh, yes,' he replied. 'My policy is all written out and is in that trunk over there, with an entire list of the cabinet.'

" 'I would like to have them,' I said, 'if you have no objections.'

"Again he gave me that look of admiration, and if there was any twinkle in his eye I did not catch it.

" 'Not the least in the world. You are welcome to the whole matter. Nothing would give me more pleasure that to let you have it. I would give it to you now, but the fact is I have lost the key to the trunk.'

" 'Mr. Lincoln went on feeling in his pocket, regretting the loss of the peskey key, and condemning his own carelessness, and emphasizing his sorrow at the situation and his ability to accomodate me, and fairly talked me out of the office, leaving me at the threshold with a hearty handshake and cordial invitation to come and seek him again. I can imagine how he must have doubled up with laughter after he got the door closed and rejoined the other people who were in the office.

"It took me several years, while I was growing a moustache, to come to a full appreciation of the performance, and then I determined that the way to freshen the Atlantic ocean was to drop me in it."

Got Mixed as to the Funeral.

Chicago Herald.

Two young ladies residing on the North Side started out the other day to attend the funeral of one of the prominent men pillars of their church. The two young ladies were sisters. One was very devout, and sat every Sunday in the family pew. The other went semi-occasionally to witness the new bonnets. The devout sister called upon the indifferent one and asked her to go with her to the funeral of the deacon. At first she refused, but it was urged that he had been a pillar of the church, and that it was really her duty to pay her best respects, and finally she consented to go, but with an ill grace. They started out together, and when they reached the deacon's late residence they were surprised to see no crape upon the door and no signs of hearse or carriages anywhere about. The indifferent sister asked the devout one if she was sure he was dead, and she replied that she was quite positive, as she had read the funeral notice in the paper. It was suggested that they walk up to the house of a lady member of the church, who lived near by, and find out about it. They did so. "Isn't deacon —— dead?" asked the devout sister, as the lady entered the parlor. "Yes, poor man, he is dead, and he was buried yesterday," was the reply. The devout sister said she did not see how she could have made such a mistake in reading the notice. When they got outside the indifferent sister turned and said: "Well, I've done my duty to the pillar of the church, I hope. Next time one dies I hope you'll get the date right."

The Double Doors at Tipton.

Going into Tipton, Ind., by rail, I shared my seat with a man who exhibited a spirit of friendliness, and we soon engaged in conversation. Noticing that he was very nervous, I finally made bold to ask if he was skipping out with the funds of a bank or had lately chopped up his family, and he at once relieved his mind in a measure by replying:

"Bless you, boy, I am as harmless as a kitten! I own up to being nervous, and you could never guess the cause. I will tell you that I am on my way to Tipton to pull off a funeral.

"What do you mean?"

"I've been learning the undertaker business in Indianapolis. Served two years at it. Have helped the old man out on thirty or forty scrub funerals and three or four first-class affairs, but this will be my first job all alone. It's my starter. Rich old brewer died yesterday and his wife telegraphed for us to come down and pull off the business?"

"But why are you nervoust"

"There's half a dozen chances for a bad break. The parlor may be a small, tucked-up room, the minister may be late at the house, there may be a miscount as to the number of chairs and carriages. I'll be held for any plunder, you know. If the widow is rich, and I know she is she'll be watching me like a cat. She'll shed tears with one eye and watch out of the other. There'll be flowers to arrange, pall bearers to coach, the driver of the hearse to instruct, and a dozen other things to look out for. Ever in Tipton?"

"No."

"Wish you had been. Wish you knew the house. I'm dreadfully worried about the front door or doors."

"How?"

"Why, if there's only one door, I can't guarantee the job. Sure to be trouble before we get out. If there are double doors, I'm all right, and will show those Tipton undertakers, who'll be on hand to watch and criticise, something to be remembered forever. I'm in a sweat over those doors, and you'll excuse me for any lack of interest in the Samoan question or Harrison's policy."

"I hope there are double doors."

"Thanks. You exhibit the right spirit, and I can assure you that I appreciate your words. There ought to be a law that every house should have double front doors. If there was, the undertaking business would become a work of art inside of five years."

Two weeks later I met him in Indianapolis, and as he gripped my hand, I asked him how he found things at Tipton.

"El-egant, beau-tiful!" he exclaimed. "Largest double doors in the State of Indiana, and I pulled off the job so satisfactorily that the widow sent me an extra $50 as a present."

A Century.

New York Herald: One hundred years is not much in the history of a nation. But three generations have passed away since King George concurred in our declaration of independence, and we are therefore at the very beginning of our career as a people.

As the direction which the bullet takes when first it leaves the gun, however, determines its course toward or away from the target, so the benign or evil influences—political, social, commercial —which control our country to-day are a kind of prophecy of our future.

If we may judge by the longevity of other governments we are still in the halcyon days of our national youth; are indulging in the visions, and perhaps the follies, which are incident to that period.

We have simply begun to make preparations for a work to be finished a thousand years hence. We have millions of acres waiting for the hardy courage which will ultimately subdue them. Our magnificent streams are growing impatient to turn the mill wheels of factories yet unbuilt. The western and southern hills and valley hold unmeasured treasures which our children's skill will force from their hiding places. Sixty millions of people are but a handful in comparison with the population which will crowd into these large areas of waste and wilderness when we shall have been silently laid to rest with our forefathers.

The statesman's dream of the future republic goes even further than this. To his mind our manifest destiny will not reach its glorious consummation till with our right hand we grasp the frozen north and with our left the torrid territory of Mexico and Central America.

Conscience Money.

One phase in business life which is not an uncommon one, and which shows that the world wags not as badly as it is said to do, is the returning to the merchants of "conscience money." It very often comes under our notice. The last occasion I observed was the other day at Barr's when a known Catholic clergyman came up to Mr. Franklin, by whom I was standing, and handed him $30, which a penitent of his had asked him to restore to Barr's. Whether the amount the repentant creature returned had been taken in money or goods of course no one knew, and equally so of course only the priest knew the name of the person making restitution. Not very long ago a widow who had been very wealthy, but had been robbed of everything, was surprised by a visit of a gentleman who had formerly known her husband. He handed her $200, which he said had just come to him directed to his care to be delivered to her, simply labeled "Conscience money."

You have heard the story of the man who sent $20 anonymously to a shop keeper, with this laconic note: "Here is $20 of money which I stole from you. I send it because my conscience 'naws;' when it 'naws' again I will send the other $20." This philosophic if illiterate, penitent is a fair sample of the kind we run across. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Name "America."

The bulletin of the Paris Geographical Society, which has just been issued, contains an account by M. Juelee Marcon of certain further researches which he has made into the origin of the home "America." As far back as 1875 he published a paper on the same topic which attracted much attention at the time, and he has since devoted much labor to investigation of early historical documents in which the New World is named.

The popular notion that America was so called from the Christian name of Amerigo Vespucci is, he says, wholly unfounded; and he sums up his conclusions in this way: 1. Amerique is the Indian name of the mountains between Juigapa and Libertad, in the Province of Chontales, which seperate Lake Nicaragua from the Mosquito coast. The word in the Maya language signifies "the windy country," or "the country where the wind blows always." 2. The Christian name Vespucci was Alberico in Italian and Spanish, Albericus in Latin. 3. This particular name is subject to an enormous number of variations, as the nomenclatures and calenders of Italian and Spanish Saints of the period show; but nowhere is there any such variation Americus, Amerigo, Amerigo, etc., and none of these is either a diminutive or a variation in use in Italy, Spain or France for Alberico or Albert. 4. Before 1507, when Jean Basin of Saint-Die published the name, it is not to be found in any printed document, nor even in any manuscript of recognized and incontestable authority.

M. Marcon claims that his theory of a native origin the name America has been accepted in Spain, Spanish America, and, with some exceptions, in the United States; in France, Germany and Italy it has excited doubt and surpise, but in the last named he has the support of the eminent Turin geographer, M. Guido Cora. There is no doubt that Columbus and Vespucci went along the Mosquito coast at the feet of Sierra Amerique, and that the men of these expeditions, and Schoner, the geographer, declared in 1515 that the name was already popular in Europe.

It is beyond question that one edition of Vespucci's letter on his third voyage has the name Amerigo in the place of the Christian name; nineteen editions had Albesicus, and subseqent Italian editions had Alberico, but rather the adaptation of Amerrque, a name already known and applied to the new world, to Vespucci's name to distinguish him, as we say now "Chinese Gordon," to distinguish the particular Gordon by suggesting one of his great feats. The paper, which is very learned concerning the geography and geographical publications of the sixteenth century, is not yet concluded.—London Times.

A People of the Caucasus.

Each community is made up of several villages, originally consisting each of members of the same family or gens, but now including several families. Members of the same family can not intermarry. Women and pasturage rights have been occasions of many feuds and vendettas. When a woman changed hands, or husbands, the parties concerned could not always agree on the value in cattle—the Suanetians had no money —of the lady exchanged. Hence arose assaults of persons and batteries of towers. The affairs of the hamlet, so far as they were not settlated by appeals to arms, were regulated by and assembly of adult males, in which unanimity was required for a valid decision. The foreign relations of the Suanetians consisted, for the most part, in predatory excursions into their neighbors' pastures. They were arrant sheep stealers and cattle lifters. Strangers met with no hospitality. On the contray, it was the custom to exact a payment from them for passage, and the custom still survives in petty demands made for halting in a remote village. The Suanetians may fairly be described as reverted pagans. Some Christian rites—fasting in Lent, and the use of the sign of the cross—they have doubtless preserved. But these survivals seem to me no more to entitle them to the name of Christains than our own mid-summer night fires constitute us sun worshipers.—D. W. Freshfield in Popular Science Monthly.

How Boys Should Treat Girls.

Boys should always be kind to the girls, however vexing they may be. When anybody is giving anything away always let girls have their turn first. They like it. Girls are not so strong as boys, their hair is long their faces are prettier; so you should be gentle with them. If a girl scratches your cheek or spits in your face don't punch her, and don't tell her mother. That would be mean. Just hold her tight behind by the arms for a minute or two, till she feels you could do it to her if you had a mind to. Then say to her, kindly: "Don't you do it again, for it is wrong," give her a shake or two and let her go. This is far better than being unkind to her, and she will thank you for your politeness if she's anything of a girl.—"School-Boy" in Youth's Companion.

How to Keep Lent.

The true forte of the emancipated mind is to self denial and self-sacrifice for others. The man who goes without what he wants and denies himself of needed comforts to meet his obligations and help the poor keeps the true Lent. The woman who turns her back on some great temptation and sacrfices her pride and time and cares for the sick and destitute is the true Lent keeper. Long faces are no longer in order. People have no liking for the piety that makes one look as though he had the colic and talk as though there was a grave stone in his lungs. Sadness is no part of sanctity, and the Lenten season should be as cheerful as great hopes can render it, and filled wich overflowing joy.

MAY TO BELL.

Dear Bell: I'll write you a short letter
To say I'm wonderfully better;
How much that means you ought to know,
Who saw me just one month ago—
Thin, nervous, fretful, white as chalk,
Almost too weak to breathe or talk;
Head throbbing, as if fit for breaking,
A weary, ever-present aching.

But now life seems a different thing:
I feel as glad as bird on wing!
I say, and fear no contradiction,
That Pierce's Favorite Prescription
Is grand! Why, I'd have died without it!
Ma thinks there's no mistake about it.
It's driven all my ills away:
Just come and see! Yours ever, MAY.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, it is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years.

HOUSEHOLD.

Hints for the Home.

For constipation in infants Prof. Parvin suggests rubbing the abdomen with a little sweet oil.

A French physician recommends tar-water in cases of hemorrhage. Administer forty to sixty grammes daily.

To remove ink stains from boards, use strong muriatic acid or spirits of salt. Apply with a piece of cloth, and then wash throughly with water.

Melted alum makes a good cement to fasten on lamp tops. Use soon as melted, and the lamp is ready to use as soon as the cement is cold.

If the face seems constantly dry, rub it with a trifle of olive oil every night for a time; if too oily, put a little borax in the water used for bathing.

Fever may be propagated among persons sleeping in a room in the windows of which had been placed a box of earth from malasious soil. House plants cultivated in pots filled with marlarious earth are a constant danger. The germs grow luxurantly in the moisture and warm air of closed rooms.

Shirt bosoms never blister if starched on the right side, but if they are wrong side out when starched they are apt to do so. Pour mixed starch into boiling water, instead of pouring boiling water on the starch, in that way never using more starch than is necessary, as the simple starch and water can be saved.

There is nothing better for a cut than powdered resin. Pound it until fine, and put it in an empty clean pepper-box with perforated top; than you can easily sift it out on the cut, and put a soft cloth around the injured member, and wet it with cold water once in a while. It will prevent inflammation and soreness.

Roast a lemon slowly until it is thoroughly done—soft, but not broken. Cut a hole in the top while hot, fill it with granulated sugar, and eat just before going to bed, for hoarseness or sore throat. The effect is to induce prespiration and to "cut" the tough mucus that alters the voice.

The cleanest and most perfectly polished hard-wood floors have no water used on them. They are simply rubbed off every morning with a large flannel cloth which is occasionally dipped in kerosene. The floor is rubbed with the grain of the wood, not across it. This is better than waxing.

Many disease germs enter through an open mouth. The mouth was not made for breathing, but for eating and speaking. The nose was made for breathing, and air, passing through the long, moist, nasal passage, is purified, and leaves behind dust, disease germs and various impurities, while the air is warmed and tempered for the lungs. But when the mouth is left open, dust, dirt, and disease rush down into the lungs, and fastening there, develop and destroy the whole system.

Whole Wheat.

Whole wheat, or pearl wheat, is one of the most delicious forms of cereal food. It requires long cooking in a steamer, at least three hours the day before. A porcelain steamer is the best because the wheat stands on it at the back of the range over night, being simply pulled forward in the morning, the tin outside kettle filled and the wheat cooked till breakfast is ready. It is excellent with a half cup of milk added a few moments before removing from the fire.—N. Y. Tribune.

Rats, Mice and Matches.

There have been two houses burnt in this vicinity (one recently) by wood rats carrying matches to their nests and, in scratching or nibbling, setting fire to the building. This is known by fire breaking out in some remote corner of the garret or cornice, where no fire could have got except as above stated. I have no doubt that many fires in the country thus originate. It is easy, where a house is left unfinished, for rats or mice to carry off matches that are left where they can get them. They should be kept in a safe, or in something that will be rat or mouse proof. —Rural Spirit.

Value of Celery.

Celery is a sedative, and is good for rheumatism and so-called neuralgia, which is often only another name for it. Cucumbers cool the system—when fresh cut, of course. Lettuce is not only cooling, but produces sleep, especially if the stalk is eaten. Asparagus purifies the blood, and especially acts on the kidneys. Peas, broad beans and haricots are positively strenghtening, and contain for a human being the properties specified by farmers when they say that peas "harden" pig's flesh, and that "oats may take a horse out, but beans will bring him home again." Potatoes should not be eaten by those who are disposed to get too stout, and many who suffer from derangement of the liver eschew them all together.

Care of the Teeth.

Brush your teeth and teach your children to brush their teeth after every meal, with tepid water, and always just before retiring at night with a dentifrice. If you could brush your teeth but once a day, you should do it the last thing before going to bed, for the constant movement of the tongue and saliva against the teeth during the day keep them partially cleansed, but at night the muscles and tongue are at rest, and the small particles of food that are floating about in the mouth or lodged between the teeth unite with the stagnant saliva, producing an acid that attacks the tooth either at the neck or in one of the irregular convolutions of the crown. While too vigorous brushing is to be depreciated, yet it is better to err in overdoing than not brushing thoroughly enough. Every accessible surface of the teeth should be thoroughly brushed to remove any food that may be lodged there. Do not rest content to brush only the fronts of the teeth, but also the inner surface and crowns; the upper teeth upward in order that the bristles may pass between the teeth and force out any particles of food there; it also presses the gums against the necks of the teeth. Always use a soft wooden toothpick after meals, never a pin or any metal one.—Chicago Ledger.

Railroad Etiquette.

A correspondent of Our Dumb Animals tells the following good stories of railroad etiquette:

We have just read an amusing story of a nervous little man entering a car with a parcel, around which was a rubber strap. He began snapping the strap to the great discomfort of all his neighbors, regardless of the annoyance they clearly manifested. The man in the seat in front of him left the car. Then he turned over the back and put his feet on the seat and kept on snapping. Presently a big German on the other side got up, walked over, poked the little man in the ribs with his finger and said: "Mamma's little baby shall have a plaything. It shall have a little rattle and a little doll." The passengers cheered, and the snapper got out of the car as quickly as he could.

This story reminds us of what we saw on the Boston and Albany railroad some time since. The car was full. Two dudes turned the back of a seat and sat facing each other, occupying four seats. Two young ladies came in. The dudes looked at each other and laughed, intending to make the ladies take a seat beside them. The ladies, mortified and blushing, stood in the aisle. In a moment a large, stern looking man, weighing apparently 200 pounds or more, who was seated a little ways back on the other side, strode across the car, seized the dude facing him by the collar, and sent him like a rocket to the side of his companion. Then turning the back of the front seat he bowed and said: Ladies, there's a seat for you. The cheering of the passengers was something worth going ten miles to hear, and the two dudes were, for the rest of the trip, as quiet a couple as one would wish to see.

Science of Degestion.

The fallacy of "plain living" is shown by good authority, which proves that the stomach never performs its duty so effectually as when called to act upon a variety of food, provided, of course, that the food is well cooked. The popular opinion now is that a dinner consisting of three or four varieties of solid food is more easily digested than the meal which is confined to one sort only. The old fashioned notion of a single joint and simply made pudding is pronounced to be a fruitful source of indegestion. Upon this subject Dr. George H. Taylor says in The Sanitary Era: "Ready digested and easily digested foods are the abominationot dietetics; they prevent normal incitation of the digestive organs, necessary for normal secretions; they encourage a false notion that nutritive material, and thus are liable to cause unnatural, irregular, unmanagable increase of the unstable ingredients of the organism, which react injuriously upon the digestive secretions, especially those of the liver. The prevalent recourse to these presumably enforced methods of nutrition are, in short a violent and abnormal reaction against the former prevalent reign of physic, depletents and so called alteratives. These old methods actually provide modes of disposing of unused nutritive supplies, although they be morbid modes."—Frank Leslie's Newspaper.

Amphibian of the Coal Period.

Professor Bickmore, in a lecture on "The Period of Reptiles and Mammals," in the Museum of Natura History, New York city, presented on a screen illustrations of the footprints one of the amphibians of the coal period. The illustration was a drawing from the great slab of bluestone which belongs to the museum, and was taken from the stone quarry at Turner's Falls, Mass. The animal itself, Mr. Bickmore explained, was one of those which roamed in great numbers along the Connecticut valley during the carboniferous period. This one had left its footprints in the mud, and the impression having been subsequently filled with sand, the cast was preserved when the clay became hardened into stone.

From fossils of the animal, which have been obtained in other portions of the valley, it appears to have had an elongated body about fourteen feet long, on four legs. It moved mainly on the hind legs the fore legs being shorter, and lived partly in water and partly on the banks of the stream.—Scientific American.

Quite too Evasive.

Boston Advertiser.

An English nobleman a short time since was on a wedding tour in this country. His bride was much younger than himself and very accomplished and attractive, and hence surrounded with a crowd of admirers at every place where they stopped. The nobleman cautioned his valet to give evasive answers to any questions that might be put to him and his wife. Having stopped over night at one of the leading hotels, the next morning he asked his valet if he had been asked any questions. He replied:

"Yes, lots of them; among others they asked if you were married."

"What answer did you give?" inquired the nobleman.

"I told them you were not married, but were going to be in two weeks," was the reply.

What then transpired has not been recorded.

GOD KNOWS.

It droops and dies in morning light—
 The rose that yesterday was whole;
"Ah, whither, on the wind of night,
 Is borne the fragrance of my soul?"

It sinks upon the ocean zone—
 The wind that smote tender rose;
"Ah, whither has the fragrance flown,
 And what shall give my soul repose?"

It breaks upon the rocky shore—
 The vast, tumultuous, grieving sea;
"Ah, never, never, never more
 Can love and peace come back to me!"

It sobs far up the lonely sky,
 It faints in regions of the blest—
The endless, bitter human cry—
 And only God can tell the rest.
 —William Winter.

"MAN OR DEMON."

It is nearly forty years, since all Paris was flocking to see Frederic Lematre in a certain grisly melodrama hearing the above title. Parisian dramatists have always had a leaning to the ghastly in melodrama, and Parisian audiences have encouraged that inclination, as witness "La Tour de Nesle," "L'Hotel de la Tete Noire" and a good many other plays of the grisly order; but this psychological mystery "Man or Demon" was a new departure in the morbid and the ghastly, and the auditorium of the Ambign Comique thrilled and shuddered as one man at the performance of the great Frederic. There was a touch of the supernatural in the play. The dramatist and the actor had adapted the old machinery of "Les Pilule du Diable" to tragical uses.

The story of the play was simple; the plot turned upon one ghastly pivot—demoniac possession. A physician, a man of science and enlightenment, refined, intellectual, of blameless life and gracious bearing, beloved and respected by the world he adorned, was possessed by devils. In the broad light of day, in the exercise of his profession, in society, he was his own man, all went well with him; but with night and solitude the demon came and took possession of his victim, and impelled him to deeds of blood.

Through the darkened theatre there thrilled a silent horror that held the crowded audience spellbound, as the man of science flung a handful of powder into his crucible, and, in the lurid light that rose around him, was seen the awful change from man to minister. The tall, slim figure of the physician, graceful and elegant in his neat evening dress, swelled to gigantic dimensions, brawny, muscular, the form of a savage Hercules, while the fashionable modern dress changed to the blue blouse and blood-red cap of the sansculotte. The face changed, too; the pale, refined features thickened, the brows grew penthouse-like above the lurid gleam of the malignant eyes; while with a cry that had nothing in it of humanity, the transformed creature rushed forth to revel in rapine and murder.

Needless to expatiate upon the action of the play. The later scenes reeked with blood, the whole scheme of the drama was baseless and wild; but the glamor of Lemaitre's genius held the audience in a state of breathless interest, which flagged not till the fall of the curtain. The play was the greatest success the Ambigu had known for many years.

One fact gave an additional and extraneous interest to the performance. Those who knew the celebrities of the city were able to recognize the curious and startling likeness which Lemaitre, in his make-up as the physician, had contrived to present to one of the princes of modern science, Marc Avalon, the celebrated chemist —a man who, at something less than 40 years of age, had reached the very pinacle of professional success, who had given laws to science, and had made discoveries which had advanced the progress of chemical experiment farther in his twenty years of labor than his predecessors had done within a century. So striking was the resemblance as to be at once perceived and remarked upon, both at the first performance of the play and in the public press. It was even thought that Marc Avalon would take offense at this appropriation of his outward semblance, and possibly make it the subject of a lawsuit; but the great chemist seemed amused, and even flattered, when he read the comments of the critics upon this particular feature of Lemaitre's characterization. He went to see the play—was interested; went again—saw Lemaitre in his dressing room, and made various suggestions which intensified the grim realism of the scene in the laboratory.

It was observed by and by that Avalon was present nearly every night during some period of the performance. He generally occupied one particular avant-scene and kept himself perou, but those few persons who were able to see his face, as he sat in the shadow of the curtain, remarked upon its intent expression and the keen delight he seemed to derive from the actor's perfect embodiment of a most unreal character.

It was during the run of this play that Paris was startled by a series of murders more hideous than any crime that had shocked society during the reign of the Citizen-King; murders which being to all appearance motiveless, and the work of a monster whose sole desire was to steep himself in the blood of an unoffending victim. Once, twice, thrice, within a space of less than three months was the city horrified by a revolting act of butchery; once in the Rue Ste. Marguerite, where a wretched inhabitant of that human shambles was found stretched in the gutter, weltering in her blood; another in the Ruedela Vieillie Lantern; a third in the Rue des Feves.

Paris and the police of Paris were on the alert, looking for the Chourineur. It was by that grim name the murderer was talked of in those circles where slang is the only language. Day after day the journalists of the gutter announced that the Chourineur had been heard of and conversed with here or there; had eaten or drunk in this or that restaurant, from the Bocher de Cancule to the Chat Noir. The whole flight of canards were on the wing, and every morning and evening there was a new one let fly upon Paris; but those who knew anything at all about the matter knew that, so far, the police were at fault. No trace, no clew, no hint of the Chourineur had yet been obtained. Cauler, the chief of the secret guardians of the public safety, had worked till he was weary of his own false lights and failures; wearier of other people's futile and sometimes idiotic suggestions. He was sitting in the April twilight before a cafe on the Boulevard des Italiens, not many doors from the Ambigu Theatre, sitting alone at one of the little marble tables, taking his demitasse after a temperate dinner, and listening idly to the conversations around and about him. He was off duty, resting a jaded brain, yet the old habit of listening and putting two and two together at all times and in all places was so strong upon him that his ear was on the alert unconsciously, and his brain soon awakened to interest in the talk of two men at a table near his own.

They were of the flaneur species both, one young, one middle aged—men who knew their Paris, evidently.

"Here he comes," said the elder man, looking down the boulevard toward the Grand Opera. "I felt sure he would pass us before 8 o'clock; he is there every night."

"Not every night, surely?" said the other.

"I have seen the place at least half a dozen times, and he was in the theatre every time. Men have told me the same thing. It is a kind of mania—a deceased vanity—I suppose. He likes to see himself on the stage—the central figure, the cynosure of every eye."

The man they spoke of approached and passed toward the theatre. Tall, slim, well-dressed, with a light overcoat over his evening suit; pale with a fixed look about the eyes, a curious mobility about the mouth.

He looks harassed and ill," said the young man.

"Overwork, brain pressure," said the elder. "I should not be surprised if I were to hear within the next few months that Marc Avalon had gone off his head."

Cauler rose and followed the great chemist into the theatre, followed him to the door of his avant-scene, and then went round the other side of the house, and got a stall from which he could observe the face in the shadow of the curtain as well as the lowered lights would allow.

The idea of this prince of science being on the verge of lunacy had started a curious train of thought in the brain of the skilled detective. He had some time since made up his mind that the murders of the Rue Ste. Marguerite, the Rue de la Vielle Lanterne, and the Rue des Feves were the work of the same hand, and that the hand of a homicidal maniac; but it had never occurred to him that these ghastly, motionless, insane murders might be the reproduction of something shown upon the stage of a Parisan theater. To-night, whose hours were gold, saw the grisly play which all the idlers of Paris had been gloating upon for the last four or five months, and he also saw or believed that he saw, the germ and suggestion of those strange and bloody assassinations which had convulsed the city.

Such a play, acting upon the prepared mind of an unrevealed lunatic; might inspire a sudden sanguinary impulse, an itching eagerness to taste those sensations and emotions depicted in all their hideousnes by the actor. That which was appalling and revolting to sane minds might exercise a morbid fascination upon the insane. The higher the education and the greater the refinement, the deeper might be the descent into crime.

The detective hung about the vestibule till he saw Marc Avalon leave the theater, and was able to keep him in sight without appearing to follow him. An elderly man, who looked like a doctor, accosted the savant as he went out, and the two men walked along the boulevard together in the clear, mild nights as far as Tortom's, where they went in. Cauler had followed close enough to be able to overhear their conversation, which, was upon indifferent subjects. The chemist's friend remarked upon his looking ill and wearied, and remonstrated with him for over eagerness in his scientific experiments.

"You are trying to get a quart of water into a pint bottle," he said: "nobody ever succeeded in doing that yet. Take care you don't burst the bottle. There are a few men of your age who have made as great a mark upon the century as you have. Can't you be content to rest upon your laurels?"

"I am not overworking my brain," Avalon answered doggedly. "You talk to me as if I were an incipient lunatic. Do you see any signs of overwork about me?"

"Yes, several—hurry, pallor, dry lips, and a tendency to laugh at things that other men deem serious. I am talking to you as your old friend, and with perfect frankness."

"My dear Pignon, this is the common cry when a man devotes himself to his profession and succeeds a little better that his fellow workers. Overstrain, brain work, incipient madness! That is what his friends say about him. Kindly meant, no doubt, but arrant twaddle!"

They went into the café, came out again in a quarter of an hour, when Avalon hailed a cab.

The detective followed him in another. The fly deposited him at his own house in the Rue St. Guillaume. Cauler drove to the end of the street dismissed his cab and went back to Marc Avalon's doorway on foot. The house in which the chemist lived was a fine old mansion in a quadrangular court, dull, dignified, respectable. It was a moonless night, and the courtyard was black as Erebus at this hour, save for one lamp which burned dimly over the porte-cochere. There was plenty of cover for the detective.

He saw the light of a lamp travel slowly through two rooms upon the second floor and finally settle in a third room.

The external Venetian shutters were closed, but there were no curtains drawn within, and the lamplight shone betwixt the wooden bars.

M. Cauler took up his position in the embrasure of a doorway in a corner of the great, grave house, as if he meant to stay there half the night. A curious waste of power, one might suppose, this night watch in the Rue St. Guillaume, but of late Cauler had been wasting much power in hunting will-o'-the-wisps across the morass of Paris, and one ignis fatnus is as good as another. To-night it was Cauler's whim to watch the windows of Marc Avalon.

The lamplight continued undisturbed for an hour and a half. The third quarter after one tolled heavily from the tower of Notre Dame yonder, and other church chimes repeated the solemn measure. Suddenly those windows on the second floor grew dark. This time the light did not travel from room to room; it was extinguished on the spot.

"The man of science had gone to bed," said Cauler, with a touch of disappointment. "I may go home and get my supper."

He waited some minutes notwithstanding, and, looking up, presently he gave a cry of triumphant surprise.

"Dieu de Dieu! I have hit it this time," he muttered.

There was a light shinning through the shutters of those three upper windows—a light more vivid than the shine of the domestic lamp, a fiery crimson glow, such as he had seen in the theater three hours ago, in the famous laboratory scene. It lasted three or four minutes and then came darkness again.

This time Caules had no idea of going home to supper. He waited for the expected opening of the door or window.

It came presently; a window on the ground floor was cautiously lifted and a man stepped out into the courtyard—a man wearing a blue blouse and a red cap, a ruffianly-looking brute, with big projecting teeth, like the fangs of a wild beast, and long, coarse black hair, like the hair of a wild beast.

This brutal figure crept stealthily across the yard and out of the porte cochere, Cauler following more stealthily; for in the walk of the blouse there was the over-acted caution of the novice, in the walk of the detective there was the sublety of the man accustomed to hunt his fellow men.

"This is Blueblouse, whom we have heard of from one lot; this is Redcap, who has been seen by another lot this is the man."

He followed that creeping figure, slouching across the road, doubling, winding, his hand clutching something in his breast. Cauler followed him from the Rue St. Guillaume to the Quai des Grands Augustins, across one of the bridges to the Cite, from the Cite by another bridge to the regions of the markets never lost sight of him, yet on the way contrived to call in at a station of night police and to enlist a couple of policemen in the chase. The three contrived to keep Blueblouse in sight, wind and double as he might; watched him as he accosted a night wanderer in a dark alley, and saw her fly from him, scared at that grim face and panther teeth under the red cap. They followed him through the intricacies of a labyrinth of squalid streets which has long disappeared, saw him stop to speak to a woman, more wretched than perhaps she who had fled from him half an hour before—saw him bend to speak to her as if in friendliness, then with a sudden clutch fasten one livid hand on her throat, while the other hand was thrust into his breast.

Quick as they were to spring upon him, they were not an instant too soon. Another second and that long knife would have done its deadly work, as it had done thrice before in the streets of Paris. The Chourineur, the murderer of the Rue Ste. Marguerite, the Rue de la Vieille Lanterne, and the Rue des Feves, was found. Yes, this was the solution of the mystery. Homicidal mania, the fatal outcome of a brain wrecked by overwork, day labor and night labor —the too ardent thirst for knowledge, the two keen ambition to achieve. It had needed but a spark to fire the brain, and the spark had been found in the suggestion of the dramma at the Ambigu. Mars Avalon had watched and brooded over the play till it had become a reality to him, and he had yielded to the irresistable impulse that drove him to act out the idea in his own person.

He died before the end of the year in a State lunatic asylum. In searching his laboratory the police found more than one set of fangs, carved in ivory, which the chemist had laboriously fashioned in imitation of the actor's hideous make-up. It was discovered, too, that he had carried his experiments with the magnesium light, then little known, far beyond the mechanista of the theater; but confessions made by him later to the doctors of the asylum revealed that he had firmly believed in his possession of occult knowledge by which he could assume diabolical attributes and diabolical power.

Indiana's New Boy Preacher.

John Schmidt, a 14-year-old boy living near Jeffersonville has entered the gospel field, and is looked upon by the people who have heard him expound the Scriptures as a kind of biblical wonder. His eloquence, considering the fact that he has had little or no opportunity of acquiring an education and thorough knowledge of the teachings of the good book, is said to be truly remarkable. He is now conducting a revival meeting at a school house in Ohio Falls, a suburb of Jeffersonville, and every night the building is packed with people attracted there by the eloquence of the youthful divine.

Women and Doctors.

She was very sick and her husband sent for the doctor. I think that ladies have so little to do nowadays that it is a kind of way they have of amusing themselves-getting sick and sending for the doctor. I don't believe we will ever have female doctors to any extent. If we do it will be mainly for children. Men will never take kindly to female doctors. I suppose it is an unjust opinion, but I can't fancy a man being very spoony with a doctor. There is a distinct prejudice in mankind against a woman who has anything of a practical nature, except about the house. He doesn't mind it if she can hang pictures and nail down carpets and sew on buttons, but a scientific woman is always viewed with suspicion. A male doctor for instance, always says it is the liver or stomach, a female doctor would probably say it was the heart, and she would very often be right. The ladies don't want a female doctor. It is in some cases the only chance they have to see a man, when they are sick. However, the doctor was called in, and he, of course, immediately wrote out a prescription. It was for some pills, to be taken every third day. He came next morning.

"Well, did you take the pills?"

"No, doctor. The three days are not up until Wednesday,"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Purify Your Blood

When spring approaches, it is very important that the blood should be purified, as at this season impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect the health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint, drives out scrofulous humors, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

"My daughter suffered terribly with sore eyes, caused by scrofula humor. We were obliged to keep her out of school for two years. We had medical attendance, but she failed to gain relief. At last, knowing that Hood's Sarsaparilla had cured my mother of rheumatism, and believing it must be good for the blood, I concluded to have my daughter try it, and it has entirely cured her." Cornelius Yeager, 412 East Main Street, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Five French Tourists Massacred.

This doubtful story comes from Cheyenne, Wyoming. Five wealthy tourists from France have met death in the Yellowstone Park as a result of defying the government regulation and venturing through the land of geysers, cataracts and natures weirdest wonders in the winter when the National Park is officially closed. There were three men and two women in the party, besides Henry Ferry an old hunter and scout, who acts as a professional, was guide. Ferry was wintering in Montana and picked the tourists up there. They came from the Pacific coast had plenty of money and wanted to see the park in winter. Knowing they could not gain entrance in the ordinary way Terry was appealed to. They made him a big offer and he began to outfit them at once. The French people said they came from Lyons and gave their names as M. Le Claire, a silk merchant, and wife; M. J. Vincent, a broker, and his wife, and Paul Gerot, a man of nearly sixty, who was an uncle of Mrs. Vincent and a retired wine merchant. All were willing to rough it, and they started in two emigrant wagons, with four mule teams and an abundance of provisions and liquors. Ferry shot considerable game for them and they journeyed by slow stages for three weeks, camping every night and drinking around a big fire until pretty late. When the party reached Rattlesnake canyon they camped alongside a little creek and tied the mules a half mile away, where the creek widened into a shallow lake. The six people drank unusually late and deeply that night, and the two married men and Ferry fell asleep alongside the fire about midnight. Ferry awoke at daylight and went to look after the mules. Before he reached them he heard a succession of yells, a bullet ploughed through the calf of his leg and a couple of horsemen dashed by him, one of whom nearly brained him with a gun as he passed. Ferry sank into unconsciousness at once and never recovered his senses until evening. Then he was so weak that after crawling to the creek he fainted again. It was the morning of the second day when the guide came to his senses, and after binding up his leg found he had strength enough to crawl to the camp. It was silent as death, and he guessed the truth before his eyes rested on five bloody and mangled corpses. The tourists had been murdered in their sleep and their bodies thrown together in a heap after being mutilated. The two women had been scalped, but the savage murders had been unable to lift the hair of the men. Gashes about the head showed where the sculping knife, perhaps in amateurs' hands, had refused to do its work. The wagons were overturned, the liquors and most of the provisions gone, and everything of value in the outfit had been taken, including a considerable sum of gold coin. Ferry was two weeks on his journey to Canyon City, whence this story come. He was nearly crazy when he arrived at the mining town, and for several days was in a delirious fever. When he recovered he told the story of the massacre, but was so incoherent that it took several repetitions to get at the complete narrative. Ferry said that wolves were already in sight of the bodies when he left. He believed that Indians were the murderers, because he heard their yells and saw the bodies, which were mutilated in indian fashion. He stuck to his story, however, that only the two women had been scalped. The miners believe that the murderers were Montana outlaws who followed the party through the park, knowing that they carried several thousand dollars in gold with them and that their mules and outfit would be a rich prize in themselves. When Ferry heard this he became frightened apparently, and twice tried to escape from the miners. The latter kept a close watch on him, but Ferry at last eluded them and has disappeared. He was to accompany a party who were going through the park to bury the bodies, and if possible to get some trace of the murderers. His disappearance has led to a suspicion that he was in league with the attacking party and led the tourists into a trap. It is not probable that any one will venture into Rattlesnake canyon before spring now. There will be only the wagons and the bones that the wolves left to tell the tale then.

President Harrison's Policy.

President Harrison beginning with next week will close the doors to all but senators and representatives, in order that he may be uninterrupted in the consideration of applications for the higher positions now vacant or likely to become vacant. The first-class appointments to be taken are the assistant secretaries of the executive departments and the heads of bureau, after which he will proceed to fill the vacancies that already exist. These are quite numerous and include the controller of the currency, the superintendent of Indian schools, civil service commissioner and other offices for which Mr. Cleveland made nominations that the senate refused to confirm. The next class of offices to be taken up will be those of the diplomatic corps, in order that the senate may act upon the nominees before they leave the country. The president has passed the word around that he will not act as arbitrator or in any factional quarrels, and that he will not lend himself to either side in such quarrels. He tells all the senators and representatives who call upon him that it will be greatly to their advantage and facilitate his labors if they will settle their dissensions among themselves and not present more than one candidate from the same state for any office. If the various delegations will make up slates for the offices within their states and give them a unanimous endorsement, he will act promptly, but all appointments over which there is a dispute will be deferred. Most of the state are doing this and are endeavoring to relieve the president as much as possible. The Post says: "The president has indicted in an unmistakable manner that it is his intention to recognize the senators and representatives and accept their recommendations in the distribution of patronage regardless of personal friends. He looks upon the members of congress as the representatives of the states chosen by the people, and considers that they should be more familiar with the qualifications of candidates and public preferences in their districts than any unauthorized persons may be, and that he will also save himself from a great deal of annoyance by receiving the views of the members of congress through the heads of departments in his cabinet whose recommendations for appointments will be final. During the last administration President Cleveland very often overruled the recommendations of his cabinet officers. Gen. Harrison does not propose to attempt to attend to the details of the government as President Cleveland did, but will leave this to the heads of departments."

Massacred by Scores.

The steamer Coban arrived in New York recently, bringing the news of a bloody battle between Legitime's and Hippolyte's forces and a massacre by the victors. Commanded by Capt. Frazer, the Coban left Port de Paix March 8. Capt. Frazer brought a copy of La Pitrie, a Hippolyte organ, published Feb. 23 at Gonaives, containing an account of a battle and massacre at Grand Saline. "The Hippolyte forces in this city were commanded by Gens. Mompoint and Jean Mescrau. Legitime's army began the attack on the outposts early in February. They were repulsed several times, but finally succeeded in carrying them, and a few days later were masters of the city and Gen. Meserau's sword. Legitime's men were so elated over their success that they immediately commenced to pillage the town. One drunken soldier shot one of the prisoners for some trifling matter. This was the signal for a general outbreak on the part of the soldiers. They rushed at the prisoners, shooting and stabbing them right and left. The prisoners begged hard and piteously for mercy, but their cries were laughed at, and the killing went on, quarter being allowed to none. Never before has such a pitiable sight been presented. The murdered men lay about huddled in scores. Some were frightfully hacked and mutilated, many of the blood-frenzied soldiers having run amuck even among the corpses, plunging their swords again and again into the bodies of the slain. Gen. Meserau tried to stay the butchery, but was laughed at; and warned not to interfere if he wished to live. When lack of victims stayed the butchers they robbed the dead and looted and burned the town. Nearly the whole place is in ruins."

Capt. Frazer thinks the city must have been burned between Feb. 18 and March 1.

Minnesota Legislature.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9

SENATE.—O. S. Blake was reinstated assistant postmaster of the senate. The good work of retrenchment and reform goes bravely on. All the suspended employes are now back in their places, and so are a few of the clerks. The others are "knocking at the door," which will probably be opened unto them in time if they are patient.

The occurrence that most pleased Senator Marcus Johnson was the passage of that body of his bill providing for the sale of the capitol lands in Kandiyohi county and appropriating $5,000 to drain them. Of course it will not be advisible to further press the bill designating these lands as a 'possum preserve.

Mr. Halvorson's bill making the amount named in a fire insurance policy prima facie evidence of the value of the property destroyed had its final passage in the senate. Most of the legislation affecting the penal institutions of the state including the bill establishing a board of pardons, also passed the upper house.

The president of the senate announced that the governor had appointed the senate members of the joint committee to attend the anti beef trust convention to be held at St. Louis this week. The delegation is as follows:

E. N. Dodge, A. K. Finseth, E. M. Pope, F. W. Sumner, J. M. Diment, H. C. Hanke, J. B. Hompe and A. C. Forbes.

The reapportionment committee has simmered down into such a peaceful and harmonious state that all doubts as to the passage of a reapportionment bill this session are practically removed. At yesterday's session the members appeared to be all of one mind, and, therefore, the session was brief.

HOUSE.—The bill fixing the name of Elk lake instead of Glazier lake has been recommended by the house committee to pass.

Speaker Mills, of the Wisconsin legislature, visited the house yesterday, and on motion of Mr. Benson was accorded the privileges of the floor. He was introduced by speaker Graves and made a brief speech, expressing pleasure at the Minnesota legislature and returning thanks for the honor conferred on him.

Forbes' bill regarding the inspection of cattle before slaughtering is likely to create somewhat of a fight. It is said the Armour and Swift packing companies will send representatives here to lobby against its passage.

Mr. Hanson introduced a resolution to fix the compensation of the doorkeepers, the gallery keepers and the keepers of the cloak rooms at $5 per day, to date from their appointment. Mr. Underwood moved that the keepers of committee rooms be included, but the question went over on notice of debate being given.

MONDAY MARCH, 11.

Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—There was a very slim attendance of members. The only thing that varied the monotony was a motion by Mr Crossfield to lay on the table a joint resolution emanating from the senate requesting congress to conclude a treaty with Great Britain on the questions now in dispute with this country and urging the appointment of a court of arbitration to settle all difficulties instead of resorting to the barbarous practic of war. "I don't believe," said Mr. Crossfield, "in our catering to England or anybody else. The United States can take care of itself. We have our government and officers to conduct these matters, and there is no need for this resolution whatever." Mr. Lane heartily agreed with Mr. Crossfield's sentiments and the resolution was unanimously squelched.

Mr. Keyes introduced a bill to regulate the employment of convicts in the state prison.

Speaker Graves has introduced a bill to carve a new county, to be called Sheridan, out of that part of Cass county south of the north line of township 138. Another bill proposes to detach Cass county from Crow Wing and attach it to the new county of Sheridan for judicial purposes, while Mr. Fleming is the author of a measure to take part of Cass county and attach it to Crow Wing county.

TUESDAY, MARCH 12.

SENATE.—James M. Morse, chief of the board of boiler inspectors, sent to the president of the senate yesterday a report in reference to Mr Keller's resolution of inquiry as to the fees of the inspectors. The figures presented, covering the period from March 1, 1888, to Jan. 1, 1889, were as follows: Number of boilers inspected, 1,653. Amount of fees, $7,265.00. Received from engineers' licenses and renewals, $1,060.50. Total receipts, $9,325.50.

Mr. Smith put in a bill to prevent the adulteration of vinegar. Stuff sold as cider vinegar must be manufactured of the pure apple juice and kept free from all foreign substances. Otherwise the person selling it will be guilty of misdemeanor and fined not less than $50 nor more than $100.

The house bill authorizing the Hennepin county commissioners to issue liquor licenses for the summer months to the proprietors of the Hotel St. Louis and Lake Park hotel at Excelsior, Lake Minnetonka, passed committee of the whole of the senate.

HOUSE.—The house refused to appeal the law relating to capital punishment in this state. The question came up on a bill introduced by Mr. C. R. Davis which was the special order of the day.

Mr. Barr introduced a temperance bill, its object being to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in other than public manner. The bill declares it unlawful to sell liquor in any cellar or basement, or on any floor other than the first or main floor of any building, or in any room on the first floor except it is so situated that an unobstructed view of all parts of its interior may be had from a public street or roadway. No obstruction from the public view of any part of such room shall be allowed, nor can any curtain, blind, screen, ground or painted glass, partition or device be used.

Mr. A. Davis brought in a bill "to promote temperance and to prohibit the practice of treating." It provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to treat or entertain gratuitously any other person to any spirituous or malt liquor, wine or cider, or any other beverage which shall be obtained gratuitously in any public bar room, saloon, beer hall or grocery, or in any other public place of resort or amusement.

WEDNESDAY MARCH, 13.

SENATE.—The measure that received the greatest amount of attention in the senate was Mr. Halvorson's bill providing for the election by the people, at the regular elections, of the superintendent of public instruction, public examiner, dairy commissioner and oil inspector. The bill came up in a committee of the whole, and after debate was recommended for damage.

Mr. Edwards introduced in the senate a bill to amend the law regulating the practice of medicine, passed at the last session. The law requires that applicants for license to practice medicine shall present to the board of medical examiners evidence that they have attended three courses of lectures of at least six months each. The amendment proposes that the courses need be only five months in length.

A bill introduced by Mr. Truax provides that when a married man gets his name changed it shall have the effect of changing the name of his wife and minor children.

Among the bills introduced, was one put in by Senator Keller, declaring all grain elevators in which the grain of different persons is stored in the same bins and thus mixed beyond identification, to be public warehouses.

The act which passed the senate consolidating and amending the reform school laws provides among other things for the transfer of troublesome inmates of that institution to the state reformatory at St. Cloud.

HOUSE.—The bill amending the Laws of 1887 relating to the bureau of labor statistics had a narrow escape from being killed when it came up for the third reading in the house, but after explanation it passed—yeas 66, nays 17.

When the long-expected report of the house temperance committee was presented yesterday it was found there was a minority report attached, the committee having divided 6 to 3. The majority reported a substitute for the county local option bill, while the minority recommended that both be indefinitely postponed. The subject was made the special order for the morning of March 20.

A bill was introduced by Mr. C. H. Davis requiring that all telegraph companies shall annually pay into the state treasury 4 per cent on their gross earnings in this state.

The house had a very busy session yesterday, putting fifty-three bills on their final passage.

THURSDAY, MARCH. 14.

SENATE.—The senate passed the bill relating to the state park at Minnehaha falls after considerable discussion. Senator Durant offered an amendment providing that taxes paid by the owners of the land appropriated for the past four years, during which time they have not enjoyed its use, be refunded. Mr. Bowen opposed this amendment as unconstitutional, but it was adopted.

The senate adopted the house bill making Washington's birthday, Memorial day, Christmas, the Fourth of July, and Thanksgiving day legal holidays. During the debate on the measure, Senator Crandall moved to add Emancipation day and St. Patrick's day to the list, but the proposition was voted down.

HOUSE.—The members of the re-apportionment committee have agreed upon a plan of apportionment.

Mr. Keyes introduced a bill which so amends the divorce laws that a divorce may be granted after a married couple have voluntarily lived separate for a space of five years.

FRIDAY, MARCH 15.

SENATE.—A rather heated debate occurred in the senate yesterday on the report of the public lands committee recommending that the bill to waive forfeiture of the Duluth & Winnipeg land grant is indefinitely postponed.

The senate killed the bill making the superintendent of public instruction an elective officer. When the bill came up for third reading, Mr. Daniels protested against the passage of such a measure. The man to fill the position should possess a thorough education. It is not a political office, and should be kept out of politics. On the passage of the bill there were, yeas 22, nays 10, so the bill was declared lost, not receiving the vote of a majority of the senate.

A petition signed by 500 residents of Washington county was presented by Senator Durant, protesting against the passage of the meat inspection bill.

Senator Swenson's bill to amend the penal code by prohibiting the clipping of horses between Oct. 1 and April 1 failed to pass, the vote standing 23 to 4.

Senator Chapman introduced a bill to punish persons commonly known as tramps. It provides that all persons except females, minors under seventeen years of age, blind persons asking charity within their own cities or towns, who rove about from place to place, begging or living without labor or visible means of support, shall be deemed tramps; and an act of begging or vagrancy of a person having no residence that such person is a tramp. Persons convicted of being tramps shall be imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than forty days. President Rice raised a smile by referring the bill to the committee on federal relations, of which Mr. Chapman is chairman.

HOUSE.—The oil inspection bill was passed, and hereafter Oil inspector Nichols will be given a salary of $2,400 a year in lieu of fees.

Mr. Shoemaker introduced a resolution, which was passed, to the effect that hereafter no member is to be recognized to speak or vote unless he be at the time in his proper place on the floor of the house.

Mr. Anderson was the author of a bill to prevent the killing of any deer or elk before Nov. 1, 1893. Mr. Stebbins sent in a bill to prevent unauthorized persons from wearing the badges of any secret society. Mr. Savage introduced a bill to give the council of Minneapolis control over the production and sale of all kinds of gaseous fuel, and the laying of pipes for conveying it.

Sentiment.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

But sentiment takes such queer turns in women folks. There are not many men who have the courage to display sentiment. I doubt if there's any man living who does not flush up when you come upon him suddenly and get within view of his paper, at which he knows you will not look, when he has just written "My dearest Jennie," or something like that on it. A girl does not know how to begin a letter almost if she can't write "Dearest." In California it is the proper thing to begin polite notes with "Dearest friend." Ladies are afraid that if they write "My dear Mr. Smith," Mr. Smith might think they meant the word "dear" affectionately, while in fact it is the most meaningless form of address and excessively polite. But that is a digression. I spoke of the queer turn sentiment will take in women. Mrs. Jones' husband had died and they were laying him in the coffin. The widow came in crying and sobbing just as some one said:

"We must fold his hands across his breast."

The widow stopped sobbing long enough to say:

"No, don't do that. Fold them across his stomach; he always was fond of that."

A Knife With a History.

From a Honey Grove (Tex.) Special.

There is a gentleman living in this city who has in his possession a knife once owned by Jim Bowie, which was given him by Juan Padillo, a man who left the Lafitte band of pirates to follow the fortunes of Bowie, and who is still living. The knife is of tempered steel the blade sixteen inches long, with a steel guard and buckhorn handle. The handle is dressed smooth where the hand clasps it, and on one side is a silver plate, one and one-half inches long, set into the handle, on which is scratched, in rude characters, "Jim Bowie." On the steel guard of the knife, on the upper side, two notches have been cut with a file, which old Juan Padillo said were cut to mark the number of men Bowie had killed with the knife. On the lower side of the guard are three notches, which are said to represent the number of Indians scalped with the same knife. The knife was given by Bowie to Padillo while Bowie was a resident of San Augustine, Tex., and was presented by Padillo to its present owner in 1862, when the latter succeeded in recovering from the Comanches ten head of horses, which they had stolen from Padillo's ranch, thirty-five miles west of San Antonio.

Youthful Transgressors.

I believe that theologians, generally speaking, fix the awakening of the juvenile conscience at the age of 7; and I think there is a holy man somewhere in Alban Butler's "Lives" — but I cannot remember his name now— who once in a vision (after a supper of pork chops, I dare say), saw "babes, a span long, crawling on the floor of hell." But for my part, in spite of these weighty authorities, I refuse to consider boys of 7 or 11 as rational creatures, and I suppose that even the holy man above referred to would have admitted that if his "babes" had not happened to die at an inopportune moment, they might by judicious treatment have been reclaimed and turned into decent citizens. I look upon criminal boys of 11 in precisely the same light as I look upon puppies that bite or kittens that scratch. I will not let them bite or scratch me if I can help it. But I do not regard the biting or scratching from a grave moral point of view.—London Truth.

THE USE OF MONEY.

Dr. Talmage Thrusts at Men Who Misappropriate the Funds of Individuals and Communities.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 10—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's subject was "Wrong Uses of Money," and his text, 1. Timothy, vi, 9: "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men into destruction and perdition."

That is the Niagara Falls over which rush a multitude of souls, namely the determination to have money anyhow, right or wrong. tell me how a man gets his money and what he does with it and I will tell you his character and what will be his destiny in this world and in the next. I propose to speak this morning about some of the ruinous modes of getting money.

We recently passed through a national election in which it has been estimated that $30,000,000 was expended. I think about $20,000,000 of it was spent in out-and-out bribery. Both parties raised all they could for this purpose. But that was only on a large scale what has been done on a smaller scale for fifty years in all departments.

Politics from being the science of good government has often been bedraggled into the synonym for truculency and turpitude. A monster sin, plausible, potent, pestiferous, has gone forth to do its dreadful work in all ages. Its two hands are rotten with leprosy. It keeps its right hand hidden in a deep pocket. The left hand is clinched, and with its ichorous knuckle it taps at the door of the court-room, the legislative hall, the congress, and the parliament. The door swings open and the monster enters and glides through the aisle of the council-chamber as softly as a slippered page, and then it takes its right hand from its deep pocket and offers it in salutation to judge or legislator. If that hand be taken, and the palm of the intruder cross the palm of the official, the leprosy crosses from palm to palm in a round blotch, round as a gold eagle, and the virus spreads, and the doom is fixed, and the victim perishes. Let bribery, accursed of God and man, stand up for trial.

The bible arraigns it again and again, Samuel says of his two sons who became judges: "They took bribes and perverted judgment." David says of his pursuers: "Their right hand is full of bribe." Amos says of some men in his day: "They take a bribe and turn aside the poor in the gate." Eliphaz fortells the crushing blows of God's indignation, declaring: "Fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery."

It is no light temptation. The mightiest have fallen under it. Sir Francis Bacon, lord chancellor of England, founder of our modern philosophy, author of "Novum Organum" and a whole library of books, the leading thinker of his century, so precocious that when a little child he was asked by Queen Elizabeth, "How old are you?" he responded, "I am two years younger than your majesty's happy reign;" of whose oratory Ben Jonson wrote, "The fear of every man that heard him was lest he should make an end;" having an income which you would suppose would have put him beyond the temptation of bribery—$36,000 a year, and Twickenham court a gift, and princely estates in Hertfordshire and Gorhambury—yet under this temptation to bribery falling flat into ruin, and on his confession of taking bribes giving the excuse that all his predecessors took them; he was fined $200,000, or what corresponds with our $200,000, and imprisoned in London tower. So also Lord Chancellor Macclesfield fell; so also Lord Chancellor Waterbury perished. The black chapter in English, Irish, French, and American politics is the chapter of bribery. Some of you remember the Pacific mail subsidies. Most of you remember the awful tragedy of the Credit Mobilier. Under the temptation to bribery Benedict Arnold sold the fort of the highlands for $31,575. For this sin Gorgey betrayed Hungary, Ahithophel forsook David, and Judas kissed Christ. When I see so many of the illustrious going down under this temptation it makes me think of the red dragon spoken of in the Revelation, with seven heads and ten horns and seven crowns, drawing a third part of the stars of heaven down after him. The lobbies of the legislatures of this country control the county. The land is drunk with bribery.

"Oh," says some one, "there's no need of talking against bribery by promise or by dollars, because every man has his price." I do not believe it. Even heathenism and the dark ages have furnished specimens of incorruptibility. A cadi of Smyrna had a case brought before him on trial. A man gave him 500 ducats in bribery. The case came on. The briber had many witnesses, he thinks. The poor man on the other side had no witnesses. At the close of the case the cadi said: "This poor man has no witnesses, he thinks; I shall produce in his behalf 500 witnesses against the other side." And then pulling out the bag of ducats from under the ottoman he dashed it down at the feet of the briber, saying: "I give my decision against you." Epaminondas, offered a bribe, said: "I will do this thing if it be right, and if it be wrong all your goods can not persuade me." Fabricius of the Roman senate was offered a bribe by Pyrrhus of Macedon, Fabricius answered: "What an example this would be to the Roman people; you keep your riches and I will keep my poverty and reputation."

The president of the American congress during the American revolution, Gen. Reed, was offered 10,000 guineas by foreign commissioners if he would betray his country. He replied: "Gentleman, I am a very poor man, but tell your king he is not rich enough to buy me." But why go so far when you and I, if we move in honorable society, know men and women who by all the concentrated force of earth and hell could not be bribed than you would think of tempting an angel of light to exchange heaven for the pit. To offer a bribe is villainy but it is a very poor compliment to the man to whom it is offered.

I have not much faith in these people who go about bragging how much they could get if they would only sell out. Those women who complain that they are very often insulted need to understand that there is something in their carriage to invite insult. There are men at Albany and at Harrisburg and at Washington who would no more be approached by a bribe than a pirate boat with a few cutlasses would dare to attack a British man-of-war with two banks of guns on each side loaded to the touch-hole. They are incorruptible men, and they are the few men who are to save the city and save the land. Meanwhile my advice is to all people to keep out of politics unless you are invulnerable to this style of temptation. Indeed, if you are naturally strong you need religious buttressing. Nothing but the grace of God can sustain our public men and make them what we wish. I wish that there might come an old-fashioned revival of religion, that it might break out in congress and in the legislatures and bring many of the leading republicans and democrats down on the anxious seats of repentance. That day will come, or something better, for the bible declares that kings and queens shall become nursing fathers and mothers to the church, and if the greater in authority, then certainly the less.

My charge also to parents is, remember that this evil of bribery often begins in the home circle and in the nursery. Do not bribe your children. Teach them to do that which is right, and not because of the 10 cents or the orange you will give them. There is a great difference between rewarding virtue and making the profits thereof the impelling motive. That man who is honest merely because "honesty is the best policy" is already a moral bankrupt.

My charge is to you, in all departments of life, steer clear of bribery, all of you. Every man and woman at some time will be tempted to do wrong for compensation. The bribe may not be offered in money. It may be offered in social position. Let us remember that there is a day coming when the most secret transaction of private life and of public life will come up for public reprehension. We can not bribe death, we can not bribe sickness we can not bribe the grave, we can not bribe the judgements of that God who thunders against this sin.

"Fie!" said Cardinal Beaufort, "fie! can't death be hired? is money nothing? must I die, and so rich? if the owning of the whole realm would save me I could get it by policy or by purchase—by money. No, death would not be hired now. Men of the world often regret that they have to leave their money here when they go away from the world. You can tell from what they say in their last hours that one of their chief sorrows is that they have to leave their money. I break that delusion. I tell that bribe-taker that he will take his money with him. God will wrap it up in your shroud or put it in the palm of your hand in resurrection, and there it will lie—not the cool, bright, shining gold as it was on the day you sold your vote and your moral principle, but there it will lie a hot metal, burning and consuming your hand forever. Or, if there be enough of it for a chain, then it will fall from the wrist clanking the fetters of an eternal captivity. The bribe is an everlasting possession. You take it for time; you take it for eternity. Some day in the next world, when you are longing for sympathy, you will feel on your cheek a kiss. Looking up you will find it to be Judas, who took thirty pieces of silver as a bribe and finished the bargain by putting an infamous kiss on the pure cheek of his divine master.

Another wrong use of money is seen in the abuse of trust funds. Every man during the course of his life, on a larger or smaller scale, has the property of the others committed to his keeping. He is so far a safety deposit; he is an administrator and holds in his hand the interest of the family of a deceased friend. Or he is an attorney, and through his custody goes the payment from debtor to creditor; or he is the collector for a business house which compensates him for the responsibility; or he is a treasurer for a charitable institution and he holds alms contributed for the suffering; or he is an official of the city or the state or the nation, and taxes, and subsides, and salaries, and supplies are in his keeping. It is as solemn a trust as God can make it. It is concentred and multiplied confidences. On that man depends the support of a bereft household, or the morals of dependents, or the right movement of a thousand wheels of social mechanism. A man may do what he will with his own, but he who abuses trust funds in that one act commits theft, falsehood, perjury, and becomes, in all the intensity of the word, a miscreant. How many widows and orphans there are with nothing between them and starvation but a sewing-machine, or held up out of the vortex of destruction simply by the thread of a needle, red with their own heart's blood, who a little while ago, had, by father and husband, left them a competency. What is the matter? The administrators or executors have sacrificed it—running risks with it that they would not have dared to encounter in theis own private affairs. How often it is that a man will earn a livelihood by the sweat of his brow and then die, and within a few months all the estate goes into the stock gambling rapids of Wall street. How often is it that you have known the man to whom trust funds were committed taking them out of the savings bank and from trust companies and administrators, turning old homesteads into hard cash, and then putting the entire estate into the vortex of speculation. Embezzlement is an easy word to pronounce, but it has 10,000 ramifications of horror.

There is not a city that has not suffered from the abuse of trust funds. Where is the court house or the city hall, or the jail, or the postoffice, or the hospital that in the building of it has not had a political job?

Long before the new court-house in New York city was completed it cost over $12,000,000. Five millions six hundred and sixty three thousand dollars for furniture. For plastering and repairs, $2,370,000. For plumbing and gas works, $1,231,817. For awnings, $23,553. The bills for three months coming to the nice little sum of $13,151,198.39. There was not an honest brick or stone or lath or foot of plumming or inch of plastering or ink-stand or door-knob in the whole establishment.

That bad example was followed in many of the cities, which did not steal quite so much because there was not so much to steal. There ought to be a closer inspection and there ought to be less opportunity for embezzlement. Lest a man shall take a 5-cent piece that does not belong to him the conductor on the city horse car must sound his bell at every payment and we are very cautious about small offenses, but give plenty of opportunity for sinners on a large scale to escape. For a boy who steals a loaf of bread from a corner grocery to keep his mother from starving to death, a prison; but for defrauders who abscond with $500,000 a castle on the Rhine, or waiting until the offense is forgotten, then a castle on the Hudson!

Another remark needs to be made, and that is that people ought not to go into places, into business, or into positions where the temptation is mightier than their character. If there be large sums of money to be handled and the man is not sure of his own integrity you have no right to run an unseaworthy craft into an euroclydon. A man can tell by the sense of weakness or strength in the presence of a bad opportunity whether he is in a safe place. How many parents make an awful mistake when they put their boys in banking-houses and stores and shops and factories and places of solemn trusts without once discussing whether they can endure the temptation. You give the boy plenty of money and have no account of it and make the way down become very easy, and you may put upon him a pressure that he can not stand. There are men who go into positions full of temptations considering only the one fact that they are lucrative positions. I say to the young people here this morning, dishonesty will not pay in this world or the world to come.

An Abbot wanted to buy a piece of ground and the owner would not sell it, but the owner finally consented to let it to him until he could raise one crop, and the abbot sowed acorns, a crop of 200 years! And I tell you, young man, the dishonesties which you plant in your heart and life will seem to be very insignificant, but they will grow up until they overshadow you with horrible darkness, overshadow all time and all eternity. It will not be a crop for 200 years, but a crop of everlasting ages.

I stand this morning before many who have trust funds. It is a compliment to you that you have been so entrusted, but I charge you, in the presence of God and the world, be careful; be as careful of the property of others as you are careful of your own. Above all keep your own private account at the bank separate from your account as trustee of an estate or trustee of an institution. That is the point at which thousands of people make shipwreck. They get the property of others mixed up with their own property, they put it into investment, and away it all goes, and they can not return that which they borrowed. Then comes the explosion and the money market is shaken and the press denounces and the church thunders expulsion. You have no right to use the property of others except for their advantge, nor without consent, unless they are minors. If with their consent you invest their property as well as you can and it is all lost you are not to blame, you did the best you could, but did not come into the delusion which has ruined so many men of thinking because a thing is in their possession therefore it is theirs. You have a solemn trust that God has given you. In this vast assemblage there may be some who have misappropriated trust funds. Put them back, or if you have so hopelesly involved them that you cannot put them back confess the whole thing to those whom you have wronged and you will sleep better nights and you will have the better chance for your soul. What a sad thing it would be if, after you are dead, your administrator should find out from the account-books or from the lack of vouchers that you were not only bankrupt in estate that you lost your soul. If all the trust funds that have been misappropriated should suddenly go back to their owners and all the property that has been purloined should suddenly go back to its owners it would crash into ruins every city in America.

A blustering young man arrived at a hotel in the west and saw a man on the sidewalk, and in a rough way, as no man has a right to address a laborer, said to him: "Carry this trunk upstairs." The man carried the trunk up-stairs and came down and then the young man gave him a quarter of a dollar which was marked, and instead of being 25 cents it was worth only 20 cents. Then the young man gave his card to the laborer, and said: "You take this up to Gov. Grimes: I want to see him." "Ah," said the laborer, "I am Gov. Grimes." "Oh," said the young man, "you—I—excuse me." Then the governor said: "I was much impressed by the letter you wrote me asking for a certain office in my gift and I had made up my mind you should have it, but a young man who would cheat a laborer out of 5 cents would swindle the government of the state if he got his hands on it. I don't want you. Good morning, sir." It never pays. Neither in this world nor in the world to come will it pay.

I do not suppose there ever was a better specimen of honesty than was found in the duke of Wellington. He marched with his army all over the French frontier and the army was suffering and he hardly knew how to get along. Plenty of plunder all about, but he commanded none of the plunder to be taken. He writes home these remarkable words: "We are overwhelmed with debts, and I can scarcely stir out of my house on account of public creditors waiting to demand what is due them." Yet at that very time the French peasantry were bringing their valuables to him to keep. A celebrated writer says of the transaction: "Nothing can be grander or more nobly original than this admission. The old soldier, after thirty years' service, this iron man and victorious general, established in an enemy's county at the head of an immense army, is afraid of his creditors! This is a kind of fear that has seldom troubled conquerers and invaders, and I doubt if the annals of war present anything comparable to its sublime simplicity."

Oh! is it not high time that we preached the morals of the gospel, right beside the faith of the gospel? Mr. Froude, the celebrated English historian, has written of his own country these remarkable words: "From the great house in the city of London to the village grocer, the commercial life of England has been saturated with fraud. So deep has it gone that a strictly honest tradesman can hardly hold his own against competition. You can no longer trust that any article you buy is the thing which it pretends to be. We have false weights, false measures cheating, and shoddy everywhere. And yet the clergy have seen all this grow up in absolute indifference. Many hundreds of sermons have I heard in England, many a dissertation on the mysteries of the faith, on the divine mission of the clergy, on bishops and justification, and the theory of good works, and verbal inspiration, and the efficacy of the sacraments; but, during all these thirty wonderful years, never one that I can recollect on common honesty."

Now, that may be an exaggerated statement of things in England, but I am very certain that in all parts of the earth we need to preach the moralities of the gospel along beside the faith of the gospel.

Ah, my friends, be honest before God, be honest before your fellow-men, be honest before your soul. If there be those here who have wandered away, come back, come home, come now, one and all, not the exception in all the assemblage, come into the kingdom of God. Come back on the right track. The door of mercy is open and the infinite heart of God is full of compassion. Come home! Come home! Oh, I would be well satisfied if I could save some young man this morning, some young man that has been going astray and would like to get back.

I am glad some one has set to music that scene in August of 1881 when a young girl saved from death a whole rail train of passengers. Some of you remember that out west in that year on a stormy night a hurricane blew down part of a railroad bridge. A freight train came along and crashed into the ruin and the engineer and conductor perished. There was a girl living in her father's cabin near the disaster, and she heard the crash of the freight train, and she knew that in a few moments an express train was due. She lighted a lantern and clambered up on the one beam of the wrecked bridge on to the main bridge, which was trestle-work, and started to cross amid the thundering and the lightning of the tempest and the raging of the torrent beneath. One misstep and it would have been death. Amid all that horror the lantern went out. Crawling sometimes and sometimes walking over the slippery rail and over the trestle-work she came to the other side of the river. She wanted to get to the telegraph station, where the express train did not stop, so that the danger might be telegraphed to the station where the train did stop. The train was due in five minutes. She was one mile off from the telegraph station, but fortunately the train was late. With cut and bruised feet she flew like the wind. Coming up to the telegraph station, panting with almost deathly exhaustion, she had only strength to shout: "The bridge is down!" when she dropped unconscious and could hardly be resuscitated. The message was sent from that station to the next station and the train halted and that night that brave girl saved the lives of hundreds of passengers and saved many homes from desolation.

But every street is a track, and every style of business is a track, and every night is a track, and multitudes under the power of temptation come sweeping down towards perils raging and terrific. God help us to go out and stop the train. Let us throw some signal. Let us give some warning. By the throne of God let us flash some influence to stop the downward progress. Beware! Beware! The bridge is down, the chasm is deep, and the lightnings of God set all the night of sin on fire with this warning: "He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."

Cured by an Accident.

From the Kingston Leader.

A Washington Avenue hotel keeper tells a curious story of how he got rid of an ailment by an accident. About five years ago he fell through a trap door in a Higginsville store, and, being a heavily built man, was quite badly hurt. When, after being confined to the house for several weeks, he got around again, he discovered that he could scarcely open his mouth, his jaws having become stiffened. Thinking that after a time his jaws would relax, he did not consult a doctor and said nothing about his trouble. They did not resume their natural condition, and as he became accustomed to eating soup and munching his food he concluded to let matters stand as they were. When the Sleight fire occurred, a few weeks ago, among those who came to witness the conflagration was this hotel keeper. He stood on Bernstein's corner, and, as the water from the hose came over that way he started to avoid it. He slipped and fell to the sidewalk, and as he struck there was a snapping of something in his jaw as if a bone had broken. He got up, and as he answerd an inquiry, from a bystander as to whether he was injured, was agreeably surprised to find that his jaws had relaxed and that his ailment of five years were gone.

How to Choose.

New Orleans Picayune.

A clever woman was recently asked who should be made president of a certain association of which great things was expected. "I cannot name her," she said, but choose someone with a big nose and a big mouth." There may be no suggestion worth a row of pins in this, but none the less it is true that many of the ruling men and women of power have large features. This is specially so in the literary world. At a literary gathering anywhere big noses or big mouths, or both, will be noticeable. The same traits are observable at a spiritual seance. At the council of women in Washington the noses of the women were in the aggregate monumental. It is the same at a meeting of Sorosis. Miss Frances Willard has a big nose and a good sized mouth. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe has a big mouth, but very fine and sympathetic. George Eliot's nose lacked nothing in size. It really looks as if the big-nosed, wide-mouthed people had the best of it in life, at least from the public point of view.

Seventy Years a Thief.

Mary Fitzgerald, now in prison in Philadelphia for picking the pocket of a well to do gentleman, is said to be the oldest sneak thief in the United States. She is 80 years old, and since she was 10 has been a thief. She was a convict before she was 12, and in recent years has not been out of jail more than five months at a time.—Chicago Tribune.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

A new creamery company has been incorporated at Wells with a capital of $10,000.

The Mankato Gas and Electric Light company has filed articles of incorporation. Its capital stock is $200,000.

The Rochester board of trade has been revived and is preparing for active work during the coming summer.

Ten farmers in Washington township, Goodhue county, have organized themselves in a company to erect a cheese factory.

A three-year old daughter of Peter O. Myhr of Holmes City was so badly burned by her clothes taking fire from the stove that she died.

John Schneider, of Sauk Centre who was sawing wood with a horse-power machine caught his foot in the machine and was so badly injured that he may die.

Frank Mudgett of Maplewood was killed while cleaning out a well. He was at the bottom, when the rope broke and the bucket dropped on him.

Mayor W. A. Hotchkiss, of Preston was prostrated by a paralytic stroke recently. It is thought that perfect rest from business cares will insure his recovery.

Two chandeliers containing thirty-six lighted lamps, in the Universalist church at Rochester, fell to the floor a few nights ago a short time before the services. The flames were not subdued until $500 damage had been done.

Harmon Huttke, a blacksmith of Sauk Center, has invented a small trip hammer which works by treadle power and strikes 120 blows per minute. He expects to further improve it so that it will attain a speed of 170 blows a minute.

D. W. Shook, grain dealer, money loaner, justice and farmer, who recently absconded from Stephen, Minn., with $16,000 of other people's money, has been heard from at Vancouver's Island, B. C. His family left Plymouth to join him.

Hon. Knut Nelson returned home and has resumed his seat at his legal desk, He states that he will practice law at Alexandria. and superintend the work on his farm adjoining town. He rejoices in freedom from political life, and is content with his experience therein.

George Hart sixteen years of age, was badly trampled by a horse which he was leading to water. After an absence of an hour he was found with his skull badly crushed in several places and badly injured about the shoulders and breast. He has not sufficiently recovered to tell how it happened, and will probably not recover.

A young man named Edward Fuller used abusive and insulting language to J. A. Du Bois, president of the Sauk Center council, and was fined $14.50. A crowd had gathered in front of a saloon and Mr. Du Bois told them to clear the walk so that some ladies might pass, upon which Fuller threatened him and used abusive language.

A large meeting of citizens was held at Worthington to protect against the passage of the bill now before the legislature for the removal of county seats. The bill in its present shape is evidently unfair and a breeder of county seat wars and ill feeling, and perhaps would lead to loss of life, besides certainly costing many thousands of dollars in any county where the question may hereafter be raised.

Frank Jarmer, a German residing about two miles from Huron Lake, Wis., was found dead in a slough near his home. He came to town and after drinking considerable started for home on foot, and it is supposed that he wandered into the slough while in a state of intoxication and was drowned. He leaves a wife and six children in poor circumstances.

A telegram from Gen. Noble, the new secretary of the interior, to B. Gordon and J. Greely, of the United States land office, at Redwood Falls, says: "You will suspend the actual transfer of the effects of your office to Marshall until further orders." The records and fixtures are all boxed and a car was hired to ship them in. Part of the fixtures are already sold.

W. A. Edwards, a Minneapolis real estate dealer, was arrested at St. Cloud on the complaint of Dr. W. A. Mitchell of Clear Lake for perjury. Bail was fixed at $500, and was not obtained. An officer will stay at the hotel with him. It is understood this is the result of a family scandal. Mitchell's wife has left him and wants a divorce. She has everything in her name, which amounts to $100,000. Mitchell claims that the prisoner has control of this money, his wife having given it to him to invest.

The appropriation of $100,000 to furnish seed grain to farmers in the northern part of the state, whose crops were ruined by frost last fall, was not enough to meet the demands of the farmers. The requests have been sent in to the state auditor from many of the counties in accordance with the provisions of the bill, and to supply the grain in quantities as large as is wanted, would require an extra appropriation of about $40,000. Norman county wants 23,000 bushels, Polk, 25,000; Marshall, 20,000; Kittson, 5,000; Clay, 5,600; Becker, 8,000; Otter Tail, 16,000; Brown, between 3,000 and 4,000 and Wabasha farmers, whose crops were destroyed by hail, have asked for 1,000. There are several counties yet to hear from.

In London the windows of private houses are washed by a limited liability company at the rate of 8 cents a window.

The Custer monument in Montana has been so greatly defaced by Indians shooting at it that it has been found necessary to recut the names on it.

There are about 11,000 remedies mentioned in the fifteenth edition of the "United States Dispensatory." Each ill that flesh is heir to must be more than well-drugged.

Gen. Tracy, the new secretary of navy, was to a large extent the creator of our internal revenue system, which has been copied by many foreign countries.

Up to the present time 80,000,000 rabbit skins have been exported from New Zealand alone; and yet the number of rabbits in that country has not perceptibly decreased.

An enterprising resident of Langres, France, who had been arrested for shooting at his sweetheart made love to the jailer's daughter. She assisted him to escape, and the pair then eloped.

A Hay Springs (Neb.) broncho jumped backward into a sixty-five foot well the other day, and was pulled out by means of ropes in as good condition as when it made the leap.

A domestic in Bangor, Me., who was given a physician's prescription to have filled, misunderstood her instructions and mailed the paper, and in due time it reached the doctor who wrote it.

A correspondent writing from Arizona says that at the time the law was passed making it an offense for Indians to appear in a city minus their trousers, the red men accepted the decree with their usual stoicism. They would carry their pantaloons on their arms until they reached the city limits, where-upon they would don them, removing the obnoxious garments when they left the city.

An Ohio poultry raiser has made a curious discovery. He says that if you go out to feed a flock of chickens and will cause them to wait, they will invariably, as they crowd about you, begin a circuit around you from right to left, in front, and continue this revolution as long as you stand there. No amount of interruption or maneuvering can confuse them or compel them to take the contrary direction at any time.

The following are the latest statistics concerning Niagara Falls: The outline of the American Falls is about 1,000 feet, and the height about 165 feet. The descent in the rapids above the American Fall is about 40 feet to the half mile. The outline of the Horseshoe Fall is about 2,600 feet, the height about 158 feet, and the descent in the rapid above about 55 feet to the three-quarters of a mile. The volume of water passing over both falls is about 15,000,000 cubic feet per minute, or about one cubic mile per week, or 54 cubic miles per year.

The way to get acquainted with a dog, says Our Dumb Animals, is this: "Put out your hand easily and confidently to the dog, so that he may smell it. Put it to his nose. If he sniffs at it and wags his tail or otherwise shows friendliness then you may speak to him and pat him on the head if you like, and perhaps use other familiarities; but if, when you offer your hand, the dog remains sullen and passive, the sooner you take away your hand the better. Never approach a strange dog with either timidity or menace; but, as we have said, the best way is to let all strange dogs alone, and get any desired information about them from those who have the honor of their personal friendship."

A strange man, a few days ago, on leaving a north-bound train on the Hudson River Railroad, at Tarrytown, N. Y., inquired of the station agent where he could find a Miss Helen Van Duzen, and on being informed that she was a pupil in Miss Buckley's school, at once went there. In response to his ring Miss Buckley opened the door, when the officer, as he proved to be, said that he wished to see Miss Van Duzen for the purpose of serving some papers upon her personally. Miss Buckley expressed objections to complying with his request unless he showed his authority in the matter, when he produced papers, signed by the Governor of New Jersey, requesting the young woman's presence in Trenton, on March 23, for the purpose of identification, in order that she might obtain a legacy of $28,000. The anxiety caused by the officer's visit was soon dispelled.

NEWS NUNCIATURE.

A General Review of the News of the Day Condensed from Associated Press Dispatches.

Doings at Washington.

The president sent the following nominations to the senate: Eugene Schuyler of New York to be assistant secretary of state, vice George L. Rives, resigned; Walker Blaine of Maine to be examiner of claims for the department of state, vice Francis Wharton, deceased; Cyrus Bussey of New York city to be assistant secretary of the interior, vice David L. Hawkins, resigned.

The president nominated J. S. Clarkson of Iowa first assistant postmaster general, vice E. A. Stevenson, resigned. The nomination was immediately confirmed. It is understood that if Mr. Wanamaker retires any time before the expiration of his term Clarkson will succeed him. Mr. Clarkson's friends were very anxious that he should accept the position of assistant postmaster general, but he was reluctant to do so.

The secretary of the navy has under consideration numerous appeals from prominent citizens of this country to furnish a naval vessel to convey the remains of the late John Ericsson to his native land in recognition of his distinguished services in producing the Monitor, which rendered such valuable aid to the government in a critical moment. One the other hand, a request has also been received at the department that this be not done, on the ground that his native country failed to recognize his inventive genius and that his adopted country should care for his remains.

The senators find the secret sessions a shelter from the demand of the more importune office seekers. Senators who heretofore could usually be found in their committee rooms before noon now make it a point to get to the capitol not earlier than the hour of meeting, and then business is rushed so that an executive session can be moved for as soon as possible. When once the doors are closed, even if there is no business to transact, they can take long recesses, thus maintaining the barrier between themselves and the outside.

The president sent the following nominations to the senate: Lewis Wolfley of Tucson, Ariz., to be governor of Arizona: Postmasters: Joseph C. Bartlett at Lake City, Minn.; James V. Campbell at Ada, Minn.; William Wallace at Indianapolis, Ind.; James M. Kellogg at Wickes, Mont.: John J. Cutler at Parker, Dak.; William S. Chase at Sturgis, Dak.; Jittiel O. Walders at Minot, Dak.: Jeremiah Sullivan of Montana, collector of customs for the district of Montana and Idaho; John A. Kasson of Iowa, William Walter Phelps of New Jersey and George H. Bates of Delaware, commissioners to represent the United States at the Samoan conference to be held in Berlin; Albert B. Weed of Montana, United States attorney for Montana.

Minor Casualties.

Patrick Dooley, shot by Milroy in a neighborhood quarrel near New Chicago, Montana, died from the effects of his wound.

H. B. Shamp, superintendent of the Chippewa Falls, Wis., Water Works company, and Thomas Orthman were burned at the company's pump-house in a horrible manner, and the former may not survive. While repairing one of the large boilers, a large oil can standing near exploded, setting both men on fire. The engineer saved them both from burning to death by turning a hose on them and extinguishing the flames. Mr. Shamp's face is burned in such a manner that the skin and flesh hang down in shreds. The too near proximity of a torch to the oil can caused the explosion.

A battery of boilers at the West Point boiler works of R. Monroe & Sons exploded at Pittsburg, completely wrecking the plant and burying a number of men in the ruins. The explosion occurred just after the noon whistle had sounded, and many of the workmen had left the works to get their dinners. The concussion shook buildings for several squares. In a few minutes a large crowd had gathered about the wreck, and the scene was most agonizing. Wives, mothers and children ran about, wringing their hands and crying, eagerly searching for their loved ones. Of the sixty-five workmen, five were killed and eleven injured, a number of them quite seriously.

In Montana, the new and latest erected smelter and calcining house of the Anaconda company at Anaconda took fire at the northern part of the immense structure. The origin of the fire is a mystery, and it is stated the water supply in connection with the fire hydrants, which were conveniently situated all around the building, was cut off at the time. The fire was noticed by the employes of the adjoining concentrator. The smelter was not connected with the large concentrator, which is about one hundred yards west, and the wind was not blowing its way. It was soon observed that the fire was beyond control, and the employes and fire department devoted their energies to protecting the adjacent buildings, which they acomplished effectually by manning the high trestle which runs between the two buildings, and is used as a tram railway for the conveyance of the copper matte of the to the loading shutes. Instructions no doubt will be issued for the erection of a new building, and as the company always carries very large supplies of lumber and timber the work can be completed in six weeks. Several railroad cars of the Union and Northern Pacific were also destroyed. The company carries its own insurance.

Personal Gossip.

Gov. Larrabee, of Iowa, by appointment promoted Gen. Josiah Given, from the district of the supreme bench, the appointment being made to succeed Judge J. R. Reid, of Council Bluffs, who resigned February 28, to become a member of congress. The appointment was accompanied with the request that Judge Given qualify as soon as possible, and he accordingly resigned his office at once. The appointment is for the term ending January 1, 1890, and the full term of six years will be filled by election in November next.

The Ways of the Wicked.

A saloonkeeper named Cronk at Greene, Iowa, claims to have been set upon by a gang of men supposed to be White Caps while crossing a bridge. He says they threw him down and beat him until three of his ribs were broken and then threw him over a bridge onto the ice, where he lay for an hour before he could crawl home. He is in a precarious condition.

Near Hurley, Wis., Deputy Sheriff Peterson and Special Officer May and Wood captured Heslop and Richards, two of the prisoners who escaped from the Ashland jail. They were caught in the woods and taken to Hurley on a train. They attempted to escape from the train, but were foiled. These men are the short term ones, and are as important prisoners as those still at large.

Robert Sigel at New York pleaded guilty of forging a blind pensioner's name to two checks. The penalty of each offense is ten years imprisonment. Sentence was deferred. Sigel had pleaded not guilty, but the evidence was so overwhelming against him that a trial could have had but one result, and by pleading guilty he will doubtless escape punishment for the other offenses with which he is charged. The young man seems completely broken down.

A special from Flint Creek, Mont., says that T. C. Milroy, a ranchman, fatally shot Pat Dooley, a large cattle owner, with a 45-caballer rifle, the ball having entered his left side above the region of the heart, passing through the body and coming out under the arm. Some time ago Dooley's son shot the Milroys with bird shot, wounding them while in a quarrel over a fence put in on disputed ground. Pat Dooley's brother was then killed in the melee. Bad blood was then engaged which culminated in the killing of Pat Dooley. Milroy gave himself up to the authorities and was lodged in jail at Deer Lodge.

The particulars of a bloody quarrel between father and son have just reached Dubuque from the little village of Dickeysville, Wis. John Daniels and his son residing near Dickeysville, both married and living in the same house, got into a dispute which ended in blows. The father who is seventy-three years old, rushed at his son and stabbed him in the abdomen with a pocket knife, inflicting several ghastly wounds. The son had a death grip on his father's beard, and the women were hardly able to separate hem. Physicians say the son cannot recover. At last report the old man had not been arrested. It appears that the father had recently married a comparatively young widow with several children, which was the primary cause of the affray.

The negro Magraduer Fletcher, who criminally assaulted Mrs. Obediah Macready several days ago, was lynched at Tasley, Va., by a party of about 75 men. Jailer Samuel Metson was aroused at about 1 o'clock by a party of masked men who demanded the keys of the jail. Mr. Metson refused to give them up. Deputy Sheriff Benj. T. Metson, who had been awakened by the commotion, came to the scene and told the jailer that he had better hand over the keys, which he did. The lynchers went to the cell of Fletcher and carried him out. He made no demur whatever. The doors of the jail were fastened by the lynchers and the keys turned over to the jailer. A coroner's inquest was held and a verdict was rendered that Fletcher came to his death by being strangled and shot by persons unknown to the jury. He was shockingly mutilated. It is supposed that this was done prior to the hanging.

From Foreign Shores.

The London Post commenting on the recent game of base ball between the American visiting teams, says the general verdict of an Englishman will be that if he were not a cricketer there is no game he would rather play than base ball. The Telegraph says the general opinion will be that the Americans are adepts at throwing and catching the ball, but the game is merely an elaborate exhibition of rounders.

While it is presumed in London that the visit of Sir Edward B. Malet, British ambassador at Berlin, to England, is due to a family affliction—at least so it had been given out—it is asserted in Berlin that he is the medium of a secret communication from Prince Bismarck to Lord Salisbury on the subject of forming an alliance between Germany and Great Britain, Color is lent to the truth of this report by the fact that Sir Edward held an extended conference with Lord Salisbury, instead of devoting himself to family matters, as he would naturally do if the reasons assigned here for his visit were true.

St. James hall London, was crowded with people to hear Mr. Parnell's speech. Mr. Morley presided. The committee in charge was compelled to suspend the the issue of tickets for the meeting. Mr. Parnell received an ovasion, and he was unable to speak for several minutes, owing to volleys of cheers, the singing of "He's a Jolly Good Fellow." After Parnell's speech Sir Charles Russell made a few remarks and was received with deafening applause. Mr. Morley announced that in three weeks over a quarter of a million persons had signed the protest against the government's Irish policy. Mr. Bradlaugh, in moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, dwelt upon the importanee of London's voice in the Irish question.

Intelligence has just been received of the death of two trappers named Finlayson in the far North. The two were brothers and left Canot river settlement, about forty miles from Prince Alberta, N. W. T., last August for Deer lake, taking with them provisions and a trading outfit, intending to remain all winter trading in that region. After getting settled they started for the Hudson's Bay company's post, two hundred miles farther north and at the other end of the lake, and have not been seen until a short time ago, when a Hudson's bay trapper discovered their dead bodies about two miles from their camp. It is supposed they were lost in the lake, and the provisions giving out were starved to death before they could reach camp. One leaves a wife at Canet River. It is feared Dord Lonsdale has also met the same fate.

Advices just received from Samoa show that there was no basis for the sensational rumor of an engagement between the United states man of war, Nipsic, and the German Corvette, Olga. On the other hand, the German officials in the island have entirely given up their aggressive policy. The proclamation of martial law has been publically withdrawn and the germans have abandoned all claim to the right of searching incoming vessels for contraband of war. Both these steps have met with the hearty approval of all foreign residents, at Apia and have had a quieting effect. Unusual tranquility prevails throughout the island. Mataafa, however, has a force of troops estimated to be 6,000 strong. Tamasse's army consists of about 700 men. The men of war both German, English, and American, still remain at Apia ready for any emergency that may rise.

Miscellaneous News Items.

The shut down of the King Philip and American linen mills at Fall River, Mass., has added over 2,000 to the number of idle operatives there. About 4,000 strikers held a mass meeting and were andressed by the same speakers as at previous meetings. The men were urged not to go back until all could return in a body. Nothing was said about accepting the position of the board of arbitration to resume work, pending a settlement. Manufacturers say the board of trade will not appoint a committee to confer with the weavers, or otherwise recognize the union.

At the business conference of the National Farmers' alliance at Des Moines, Iowa, the plan of business organization presented at the January session was adopted, and in every state and territory the alliance will organize stock companies for the sale of farm product and purchase of machinery and supplies direct from manufacturers. In relation to the binding twine matter the following was adopted: In view of the fact that the prices of binding twine have advanced almost beyond profitable use, through the manipulations of speculators, who have cornered the entire sisal and manilla fibre, we would recommend to farmers that every expedient be resorted to for the purpose of meeting the emergency by cutting off the use of twine if possible; and we recommend changing binders into harvesters, or changing into headers, which can be done at small cost; also to cut and stack loose; and we recommend curtailing the small grain crop wherever the results of late years have been of but doubtful profit.

Minnesota Railroad Project.

A telegram from Chicago contains the following: "What is considered perfectly reliable information has been received to the effect that Presidents Hill and Minot, of the Manitoba and the Eastern Minnesota Railways, left St. Paul for Boston almost immediately after the passage of the Duluth & Winnipeg extension act by the Minnesota house of representatives, for the purpose of completing a loan of $5,000,000 for the construction of a line across Northern Minnesota from Crookston to West Superior. If they accomplish the purpose of their errand they will act at once, commence the work of construction from both ends of the proposed line, surveys of which are already in the hands of the Manitoba railway at St. Paul. Railroad men here speak of it as the most important railroad move for West Superior and Duluth that has ever been projected. They say that it will put the wheat of the Red river valley and of Montana and Northern Dakota into the Lake Superior elevator, free of dangerous competition from Minneapolis millers, who will have to pay a premium for the transportation or lose the grain, which will probably amount hereafter to a total of upwards of 40,000,000 but for export. The lack of local traffic on the new proposed line, they say, will compel the Manitoba to give a lower through rate to West Superior than it can afford to give to Minneapolis over its own lines where local traffic is heavy."

Dakota Temperance Convention.

Eight hundred delegates were present beside a hundred or more visitors. Many of the most noted persons in the state, of the bar, the pulpit, the press, and in politics, were present. Of all that has been said or done, the letter of Gov. Larrabee of Iowa created the most enthusiasm, at the Temperance convention at Huron, Dakota. It is as follows:

Des Moines, Feb. 28.—To Rev. William Fielder, Aberdeen, Dak: Your communication of recent date is at hand and noted. In reply, I desire to say that the prohibitory law in Iowa has much more than answered the best expectations of its foremost, hopeful advocates. As regards the asseveration that prohibition has driven people out of the state, I think that not a person has left the state on account of prohibition whom it is desirable to have return. Many of those engaged in the saloon and liquor business, and such persons as are usually attracted by these interests, have left, and the state is largely the gainer thereby. The cheap lands of the states and territories west of us have induced a great many enterprising and valuable citizens to emigrate, independent of any influence of prohibition. There has been a steady growth in our population and census of 1890 will probably show in Iowa at least 2,000,000 inhabitants. The vote at the last election shows an increase of 65,320 votes over the presidential election of 1884, a larger increase than the election of 1885 over that of 1880. As to the depreciation of the value of real estate occasioned by prohibition, it is the sheerest nonsense. Values have, I believe, been sustained in Iowa as well as in adjoining states where prohibition is not the rule. The same causes that have affected values elsewhere have undoubtedly had their effect here. Crops grow, herds multiply and the markets of the world continue open to us the same as before, and why should business suffer? Money is now spent for the necessaries of life and for legitimate use instead of being spent at the saloons. The banking business of a state is perhaps as fair a barometer of business as can be found. The number of banks in the state has increased from 186 in 1883 to 244 in 1888. Deposits have increased from $27,331,719.74 to $39,935,862.98 in 1888. I think more than half of the jails in the state are entirely empty at the present time. There are ninety-eight less convicts in our penitentiaries than there were three years ago, notwithstanding the growth of the population. Expenses in criminal courts have decreased very largely during the last few years. I send you with this a copy of a collection of letters from the district judges of our state, which will show you that the testimony is overwhelmingly in favor of the law. More recent statements from them would no doubt show still more favorable results. Tramps are very scarce in Iowa. There are evidently very few attractions for them here. Probably more than 8,000 of their recruiting stations have been closed in Iowa during the last five years. The wives and mothers of the state, and especially those of small means, are almost unanimously in favor of the law. The families of laboring men now receive the benefits of the earnings that formerly went to the saloons. There is no question in my mind but what the law is doing good work for the people. My views heretofore advanced in favor of the law are strengthened and confirmed by added experience. Our people are more determined than ever to make no compromise with the saloons. The law has more friends in the state than it ever had before and I am satisfied that no state can show results more gratifying.

WILLIAM LARRABEE.

This expression of the sense of the convention was unanimously endorsed.

This being a non-partisan convention, and with a desire to unify all our forces on a given line of action, we studiously avoid all political lines and party distinctions in view of the great end to be accomplished. South Dakota's golden opportunity is here to enter the constellation of states as a star of the first magnitude, free from the infamous stain of the alcoholic liquor traffic. The motto for the campaign shall be, "By the grace of God, constitutional prohibition for South Dakota." Therefore

Resolved, That we pledge our time, our money, our prayers and our votes, first, for the adoption of the Sioux Falls constitution on May 14; second, for the selection of such men only to the July convention as are earnestly in favor of constitutional prohibition; third, for ratification of constitutional prohibition at the October election; fourth, at all times to our utmost for the selection and election of such officers from constable to governor as are in hearty sympathy with this cause, and will respect their sworn obligation and support the majesty of the law.

The foregoing was followed by the adoption of a plan of work.

WHAT STATE INSPECTION MEANS.

Well Worth Reading.

Farmers, listen. The passage of the livestock inspection law to be to be presented by the butchers of the country, will cost you a decline of 20 per cent, in the value of every beef animal you will have for sale. The voice of the butcher is the voice of the siren luring you on to destruction. On the contrary, let us reason together.

To-day you are competing with Chicago dressed beef in the larger towns of the country, where the consumption of meat is considerable, but the small towns are left to the local butcher, and a very considerable trade or demand exists for home-dressed beef. Your cattle are fat and free from bruises, and you realize a fair margin on your feeding, because you really have the edge on the live-cattle market. Western cattle rarely come into competition with the beef steers of the farmer, save in a few of the larger cities.

But cut off Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and St. Paul from their dressed beef product, nearly three million cattle a year, and you turn all these loose upon your local markets. The West is full of cattle cheaply raised and cheaply fed. They must be sold. If Chicago and other markets do not take them they will find a market. The country will be scoured from end to end to find a place for them. Your local markets will be overrun. When you are selling choice beeves at five and six dollars a hundred, the Colorado or Wyoming steers will be run in upon you in train-load lots, and the local butcher, true to his instinct to buy the cheapest and sell the highest, will decline to pay you six dollars a hundred when he can buy something that will answer his purpose for three dollars. There will be no Chicago competition to urge him to buy the best in order to support his theory that home-dressed meat is the best, and as competion is gone there will be no object in having the best. The trade will be in his hands, and he will so manipulate it as to realize the most. His philanthropy and zeal for the phople will have vanished with the opening opportunity to sell cheap meat, and the farmer will find himself the sufferer. The experience of every farmer in the land is that small markets are easily glutted, and an oversupply means ruinously low figures. Five or ten cars of fat steers from the West would demoralize two-thirds of the markets in the East, and reduce the value 25 to 50 per cent.

If State inspection means higher prices for all kinds of meat to the consumer and lower prices to the producer, who is left to be benefited by the passage of such laws? The butcher, and the butcher alone. Can these two classes, who comprise the great masses, be so generous of their earnings as to vote them away to the local butcher and get nothing in return? Think about this, gentlemen, and after thinking act.—Northwestern Live Stock Journal, Feb. 22, 1889.

A Chicago Swindler Caught.

William H. Davis, a well known builder and real estate dealer, was arrested at the door of the Chicago Trust and Savings bank, charged with victimizing the president of the institution, D. H. Tolman. Forgery was the specification, but the purpose was to hold Davis in addition for an extensive series of offenses, such as selling to each of a number of people the same piece of property. The prisoner quickly gave bail for the forgery and disappeared. It would appear that besides the plunder for his crimes he has made way with all his real estate holdings. Where the money is gone to is a mystery. The arrest was well planned. Davis had an appointment with Mr. Tolman at the bank, and before the hour arrived the president had sworn out a warrant and given the document to an officer, who was stationed in the bank entrance to await the real estate man. Davis' arrival was prompt; his arrest was equally so. Both events were surpassed in celerity, however, by his release, his scheduling the required security of $1,000 and walking out before it was realized that additional warrants were necessary. Davis has been in the real estate business in Chicago ten years, with an office on La Salle street and a handsome residence on Robey street. He built a big business block on Third avenue near Van Buren street a year ago, now occupied by the Regan Printing company.

About $15,000 would seem to cover Davis' alleged ill-gotten gains in the transactions in which Banker Tolman, according to the latter's statement, is personally interested. "The extent of Davis' operations in other real estate," said Mr. Tolman, "I cannot even guess at." Davis' late residence was deserted, and has been for two months. It is said he sent his wife out of town when he closed the house

It is reported that Justice Mathews will resign from the supreme bench, and that Judge Gresham will be appointed his successor before the present term of the court expires in May.

Martin, Williams, Graham and McDonald were recaptured near Mason and brought in to Ashland, Wis., over the Omaha by Officers Gus Schwartz, Charles Eldred and Martin Cupid. Richie is the only prisoner now out. His capture is expected.

Senator Chace of Rhode Island is to resign for reasons of a business nature. Among the persons spoken of as likely to be candidates for the nomination are Lyman B. Goff, Benjamin N. Appum, ex-Gov. George Peabody Wetmore and H. J. Spooner, member of congress.

The secretary of the interior has decided to bring suit against D. S. Miers and A. F. Hicks for $216 for 16,051 feet of lumber cut on the public domain near Dagget Brook, Minn. Hicks, who is a poor man, cut the timber and sold it to Miers. The latter offered to compromise, and the government accepted his offer, but he never made it good. Now the government proposes to bring suit to secure the amount offered in compromise.

By proclamation the president has released from reservation the southeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 6, township 36 north, range 9 east, in the district of lands at Wausau, Wis. These lands were reserved for the purpose of river improvement in 1881.

The cabinet had under discussion the opening of Oklahoma or at least a portion of the territory included within its limits. The president is authorized by the terms of recent legislation to open to settlement about 8,000,000 acres of land, and the opinion prevails that he will shortly issue his proclamation adding that acreage to the public domain.

The supreme court of Illinois denied the motion to amend the record in the case of Fielden, Schwab and Neebe. Counsel for the anarchists claimed that the record was untrue in declaring that the parties were in court when the decision was rendered, and that the sentence of the court was illegal. The court decides that the supreme court is not a trial court of review to pass upon the record of the court below and discover what errors, if any, exist. It would be preposterous to expect that prisoners should be brought from a distant jail or penitentiary to be present at a decision in any case before the court. The declaration "Now come the parties" was but a mere form of law in this court, and could not be otherwise construed.

An open switch was the cause of a collision between the east and west-bound freights on the Manitoba track near Howard Lake, Minn. The east-bound train was heavily loaded with wheat, and coming on the down grade at about five miles an hour. It ran in into the cars of the west-bound as the latter lay on the switch. Seven cars of the former and five of the latter were wrecked. The engineer and fireman of the east-bound train saved themselves by jumping. Their engine was badly jammed at the boiler head and lost its headlight. The colision was occasioned by the carelessness of a man who has been on the road twenty years and never before had an accident.

Mr. Clarkson's selection for the first assistant postmaster general is received with great glee by the friends of ex-Senator George M. Chilcott of Colorado, who are pushing that gentleman for the office of commissioner of the general land office. There are a dozen or so candidates for this place, but the Chilcott people say their only real competitor is ex-Gov. Stone of Iowa, the contest having narrowed down to these two. Iowa, they insist, cannot expect to have both the land office and the second chief place in the postoffice department, and so they regard Chilcott as the coming land commissioner. Senator Teller is the leading backer of Chilcott, and it is understood that if Chilcott gets the place it will be run in accordance with Teller's plans, and to suit the interest of a class of land speculators who flourished while he was secretary of the interior.

EXIT GOV. CHURCH.

Gov. Mellette Appointed to the Place Vacated by the Objectionable Church.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 12.—The last opposition to the Dakota appointments was withdrawn this morning, and the nominations of Arthur C. Mellette and Luther B. Richardson for governor and secretary went into the senate this afternoon. They would have been confirmed at once but for the objection of Plumb, which sent them to the committee on territories. It is believed that they will be reported and confirmed in to-morrow's session. The nominations do not state in the usual form the manner in which the vacancy they are made to fill is created. Mellette and Richardson are not appointed vice Church and McCormack, resigned or removed. They are simply appointed, and the appointment operates as a removal of their predecessors, or will when it is completed by confirmation, commission and qualification. This indicates that up to the time the nominations were sent in the resignations of Church and McCormack, asked for Saturday, had not been received. If appearances and assurances are to be trusted the appointment of Mellette gives unmixed satisfaction.

NO REAL OPPOSITION.

There has been no confessed opposition to him from the first, and the delay in his nomination, which some were inclined to attribute to secret machinations, is explained by other influences. There was opposition from North Dakota to the appointment of Richardson; but this came in the main from representatives of the other crowd at Grand Forks, who withdrew it this morning when they found that Mellette's name would not be sent till Richardson's was, and that their opposition was simply delaying the removal of Church. Gov. Pierce shared in the opposition to Richardson, not, as he explained, through any opposition to him, but because he wanted to see McCormack left in office a week or so after Church's removal. This wish turns out to be connected with the burning desire that has filled the breasts of all Dakota Republicans here for the last day or two, for the peremptory suspension of Church by telegraph, without waiting for the slower process of appointing his successor, leaving McCormack as acting governor till Mellette could get to Bismarck. The president and Secretary Noble have been deluged with telegrams this morning urging the instant removal of Church on the ground that, since the adjournment of the legislature, he is filling all the territorial offices, executive boards and such like with Democrats, whom, it is alleged, Mellette cannot remove under the law.

NO COMMISSIONS YET ISSUED.

The president did not see his way clear to suspend Church for this offense, but the telegrams may have hastened Mellette's appointment. It turns out that McCormack has not yet issued commissions to Church's appointees, and it was thought if Church could be summarily deposed before that was done, Mellette might still come into his own. This is the culmination of all the acts of courtesy to the Republicans for which Pierce and others wanted McCormack retained a few weeks, that he might not be discredited by being coupled with Church in removal. But nobody is grumbling very seriously. Gov. Mellette is rarely fortunate, not only in the universal support of his name and the general approval of his nomination, but in the fact that he goes into office absolutely unhampered by combinations and untrammeled by pledges. In reply to questions this afternoon he said:

I have had more than the usual reasons for keeping clear of pledges and combinations. I shall be in office only six months, and, though Dakota has all the civil and social features of a state, I am governor, not by popular claim, but by executive appointment. Then I suppose that in half of the territory I am considered an outsider—a sort of a carpet bagger. All my interests are in South Dakota, and I have never been in Bismarck. Under these circumstances it would not become me to meddle in the internal affairs of either future state. I cannot regard myself otherwise than as the agent of the general government chosen to superintend and aid the civil operations preliminary to statehood. My responsibility is to the president rather than to the people. I shall certainly try to deserve their good opinion, but I shall not concern myself with their state politics, nor permit them to control my course as territorial governor. This plan is not of my seeking, not of my desiring. I value it far less, with all the brief lease of power, than the barren honor given me by the suffrages of the people of South Dakota three years ago. But I shall try to do my duty in it, and I think it is my duty to simply administer the law, without either forwarding or hampering any man's political ambition. I have made no pledges, except the promise to treat every man fairly, and give every aspirant for office a clear field and no favor. My whole action as executive will be governed by the desire to fulfill the law, bring the Dakotas in next November under good constitutions, and leave no politician anxious to say that I forward his opponent against himself. I have not promised nor even determined upon a single appointment either in North or South Dakota. To every applicant I have made the same answer: That I must go into office unhampered by any pledge, except the general one to treat everybody fairly and equally.

F. A. C.

NO REDUNDANCY HERE.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 12.—The following telegrams were this afternoon sent to the governor and secretary of Dakota:

Louis K. Church, Governor, Bismarck, Dak.: Your resignation as governor of Dakota, tendered in your letter of the 2d inst., is accepted by direction of the president.
JOHN W. NOBLE,
Secretary.

Michael L. McCormack, Secretary, Bismarck, Dak.: You have been removed by the president from the office of secretary of Dakota, to take effect on the appointment and qualification of your successor.
JOHN W. NOBLE,
Secretary.

AT BISMARCK.

BISMARCK, Dak., Special Telegram, March 12.—The appointment of Mellette as governor was expected, and he is conceded to be the right man for the place at this time. Richardson for secretary was not expected just now. It was supposed that McCormack was good for a few weeks yet. He had told his Republican friends visiting Washington that his resignation could be had for the asking. Richardson, however, is a personal friend of the displaced secretary, and may know what McCormack's wishes were and acted in harmony with them. Being interviewed on the situation after the appointment of Gov. Mellette, Gov. Church said this evening:

I am perfectly satisfied. I have done my best to give the people of the territory a good administration and leave it to them to judge how far I have succeeded. I will do all I can to aid Gov. Mellette by extending to him any courtesy within my power. Personally I have no fault to find. I forwarded my resignation on March 2. I am a Democrat, and have been ready to take the medicine that a Democrat should expect after the result on Nov. 6. I feel that I shall go out of office with the respect of my party friends, and at least with the respect of fair-minded Republicans. The only thing that I regret is that I have not had an opportunity to indicate in some substantial way my deep sense of appreciation of the sympathy and support of many good Democrats during my administration as governor. Had we been successful in the last national election they would have been recognized, and I have no apologies to make for my Democracy, and in becoming a private citizen and assuming my place again in the ranks. I do so with the pleasing confidence that I may again have an opportunity of joining hand in hand with those who are struggling for the supremacy of Democratic principles.

THE NEWS AT HOME.

WATERTOWN, Dak., Special Telegram, March 12.—The news of the appointment of A. C. Mellette as governor of the Dakotas was received with enthusiasm in this city. The whole city is holding a jubilee. Mrs. Mellette at her beautiful residence on Prospect Hill has all the afternoon and evening been receiving large delegations of citizens who called to extend their congratulations to the first lady of the territory. When the governor returns he will be received with a demonstration second to none ever seen in Dakota.

Arthur Calvin Mellette was born on a farm in Delaware county, Ind., in 1844. While a boy he left college to join the army, being a private in the Ninth Indiana regiment. After the war he practiced law at Muncie, where he was elected county superintendent of schools. He was elected to the legislature and is known as the father of the present Indiana school of law. He went to Dakota in 1878 and was appointed register of the Springfield land office, which was soon moved to Watertown, where he has since lived. In 1885 he was elected governor of the State of South Dakota. Gov. Mellette is a fine specimen of manhood, large and brainy, and has an excellent record as a statesman.

Luther B. Richardson has been a prosperous and influential farmer, near Grand Forks for several years. The position of secretary of Dakota will be the first public office he has ever held. Mr. Richardson is a graduate of Cornell university. Mr. McCormack, the retiring secretary, is a firm friend of his successor.

BISMARCK, Dak., Special Telegram, March 12.—Gov. Mellette will find on his arrival at Bismarck that his predecessor has filled all the offices by issuing commissions and forwarding the same to the appointees. There have been busy times in the governor's room. In some cases, like the superintendent of public instruction, he has removed them, to take effect at some future date, and appointed a successor to begin from that date. In the commissions of attorney general, treasurer and auditor the commission reads like this: "During and until the end of the next legislative council." The governor construes the second section of the tenure of office act as favoring his appointees. It reads:

All vacancies created by death, resignation, removal, or under the provisions of this act, shall be filled by appointment by the governor, and the terms of office of such appointees shall expire at the end of the legislative assembly next ensuing, unless sooner terminated under provisions of this act.

The third section, running as follows, is broad enough to cover all officers, and is the language of the carefully drawn act as it passed the house. In the council it was tacked on to a bill prescribing the terms of, the offices, but the life in it was not killed.

That all officers of the territory appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council, or such as may be appointed by him to fill vacancies, shall be subject to removal at the pleasure of the executive without assigning any cause therefor, and the vacancies thus created shall be filled by the governor; provided, however, that this act shall not be construed as applying to the governor of any state created out of this territory.

TO WHOM IT APPLIES.

Subsequent act provided for the government of the public institutions and in whom vested. It is asserted in administration circles that the tenure of office act could not apply in any event to these officers, but that must be a bad construction, as the foregoing says all officers are subject to removal: time of creation is immaterial. The text of the trustee act is as follows:

The governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the council, shall appoint at this session of the legislative assembly five trustees for each of said institutions [naming all the public institutions], two of whom shall hold their office for the period of two years and three for a period of four years and until their successors are appointed and qualified, except to fill vacancies, which appointments shall be made by the governor and shall extend only to the end of the next session of the legislative assembly, during which session the governor shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the council, appoint some person to fill the said vacancy for the remainder of the term unexpired.

This act limits the number of sessions of a board to twelve in one year, and the total number of days in session to twenty-four. The per diem is fixed at $3.

AN AWFUL MURDER.

Capt. F. W. Dawson, Editor of the Charleston News and Courier is Foully Murdered by Dr. T. B. McDow.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 12.—Capt. F. W. Dawson, editor of the News and Courier, and agent of the associated press in this city, was murdered this afternoon about 3:30 o'clock by T. B. McDow, a physician of this city, who is married and has several children. The evidence in the case is very meager, but it has been learned that Capt. Dawson was murdered because of an attempt on his part to save the honor of a servant girl in his employ. The murder was committed about 3:45 p. m., but was not discovered for three hours afterwards, when the murderer surrendered himself. The body of the murdered man had in the meantime lain in the office of the murderer, not one hundred yards from his own residence. Capt. Dawson left the News and Courier office about 3:30 p. m. and was never seen alive again. It appears that he had suspicions that his maid servant, who had charge of his children, was not behaving herself properly. Last week he asked the chief of police to detail a detective to shadow the girl, stating that he did not desire his children to be entrusted to a girl who was not strictly honest. The detective accordingly shadowed the young woman. On Monday morning he saw her get on a Rutledge street car, where she was soon after the murderer. The detective followed the pair for several hours and submitted a report in writing to the chief of police, who communicated its details to Capt. Dawson this morning. The murdered man's face was badly beaten, and a pistol bullet was found in his heart. It is supposed that he went to Dr. McDow's to remonstrate with him, a married man and the father of several children, against seducing his maid-servant, and that Dr. McDow shot him after the two had been engaged in a controversy. After the murder, McDow disappeared till 6:30 p. m., when he appeared at the police station and surrendered himself. McDow is said to be the only doctor in the city who is not a member of the state medical society, and has an unsavory reputation. He married, some years ago, the daughter of C. C. Aherns, a rich retired grocer, and it is known that the police have been asked to shadow him several times. The city is in a terrible state of excitement. All the evidence adduced thus far shows that the murder was in the annals of crime. Capt. Dawson was shot while sitting down. The shot was a fatal one. After murdering his victim Dr. McDow left him lying on the floor, locked his office door and went out to a corner grocery shop. There is evidence that he tried to bury the corpse of his victim, but that in the meantime suspicions had got out, and finally, three hours after he had killed Capt. Dawson, he surrendered himself to the police authorities. The murderer has the reputation of being a rake, and it is said that he is known in almost every house of prostitution in the city. The body of the murdered man has been taken to his residence, but the coroner, after impaneling a jury, has adjourned the inquest until to-morrow. The murderer was hurried to the jail as soon as he surrendered himself, and for the present is safe from lynching, as the jail is well nigh impregnable. The entire community is incensed. The city council had just met to-night when the news of the murder was telephoned, upon which the council at once adjourned. Capt. Dawson was a gentleman held in the highest respect by persons of all classes and conditions, and prominent citizens declare that his killing must have been a deliberate and outrageous murder.

Mr. and Mrs. Henney, late of Kansas City, who were alleged to have abducted little Lucy Spellman, were arraigned at Chicago. Officer Dudley, of the humane society, read to the court a dispatch from Kansas City, which said that there would be no prosecution against the Henneys. Upon this representation Mr. and Mrs. Henney was discharged from custody. Little Lucy, who is nineteen months old, will be taken back to her mother.

Great excitement exists in the Lower California gold mining camps, and thousands of desperate gold hunters are breathing vengeance against the company of English capitalists whose agents lay claim to the mines and are trying to shut out Americans and others. The situation looks threatening and a battle between the independent miners and the English company's men is looked for every moment. Blood will certainly be shed if the company insists on bringing coolies to the camp.

WEST FOSSTON

IS THE

CHICAGO OF THE NORTHWEST.

NEXT WEEK

WE WILL TELL YOU

WHY!

Gen. J. H. Baker, who has fed for years at the public crib, who for several years was honored with a position on the railroad commission—supposed to be looking after the interests of the people—is now the accredited mouthpiece of the Manitoba railroad in its efforts to defeat the wishes of the people in their efforts to build the Duluth & Winnipeg. The question now occurs how much good did he ever do the people as railroad commissioner.

The D. & W.

No enterprise that was ever projected for the upbuilding of this country has given promise of so much benefit to us as has the building of the Duluth & Winnipeg road and there are. but few, if any, in this country that oppose it. Being an entirely independent road and the shortest road to the head of navigation it would make at least five cents per bushel less freight on our wheat and a proportionate reduction on all incoming freights. Running, as it would through an immense pine country it would cause lumber manufactories to spring up which would fill this country with cheap pine lumber, an article that this country stands greatly in need of to aid in its upbuilding. If the question was before the people to vote on it would carry by an overwhelming majority, and yet, in the light of the great benefit this road would confer upon the many poor settlers in this district, with a full knowledge that it is their earnest desire to have the road built, Mr. Sampson, in committee meeting voted against the bill to extend the time for building the road and thus struck a blow at the welfare of his own country and his own constituents that he could never repair if he should live to be hundreds of years old. The building of the D. & W. means wealth and prosperity to every farmer in this country. If the extension of time that they ask is not granted they cannot raise the money to build it and our senator, if he has any idea at all of representing this people should vote for their interests. What excuse can he offer to these hundreds of poor farmers for voting to deprive them of a profit of at least five cents per bushel on their wheat? What excuse for voting to deprive them of cheap lumber? In the early day Mr. Sampson was the friend to the poor settler and gave many a poor man a little flour, a few potatoes, a little meat and aid in other ways to assist the settlers to tide over to harvest. He did all he could to establish a flour mill here, and, if he could have had his way about it it would have been a grist-mill and of great benefit to the farmers. As it was he tried to make a competitive wheat market but was overruled by his partners, but now, in his vote to kill a road that would be of more benefit to the county than many such mills, he kicks over every good action he has ever done and inflicts a terrible injury upon the poor settlers whose grateful votes put him where he is. He must not be surprised if in their bitter disappointment they ask "what consideration was strong enough to make him forget the interests of the country that ever before he has seemed so anxious to help build up?" Wherein does his vote to kill the D. & W. road provide a better thing for the country? He owes it to his constituents to give them a better thing if he does not see fit to comply with their earnest desires to have him aid to build their road. The D. & W. only ask an extension of three years time, a favor that has never before been refused to any road. The people of the northern part of the state are very anxious to have this done and the people of the balance of the state are perfectly willing to grant the extension, but the Manitoba Railroad company says it must not be done and is doing everything in its power to prevent it. Our people have a right to expect their representative to stand by the people in a fight of this kind.

All honor to Senator Buckman who dares to stand up and plead the cause of the people vs the interests of a powerful railroad company, even in the face of a protest by a few of his constituents. Senator B. by his manly cause has invoked the wrath of the railroad magnates who are trying to make it extra hot for him. But the people will stand by such a man never fear.

The People Want It.

Senator Buckman Talks on the Subject of the Duluth & Winnipeg Road.

It Will Make the Northern Part of the State Blossom Like the Rose.

The Secret of the Opposition.

Pioneer Press. March 17.

Senator C. B. Buckman was asked last night to state his position in the matter of the bill now before the senate extending the time within which the Duluth & Winnipeg was to build its road in order to obtain the land grant of the state. This is a matter on which no one is better posted than the genial senator. He is not only thoroughly familiar with the country through which the road is to run, if built, from his business as a lumberman, but he is also well posted on the previous legislation from having been mixed up in it as a champion of the Brainerd & Northwestern four years ago. It is also a subject on which Senator Buckman is willing to talk, as he feels that grave questions of public policy of interest to every citizen of the state are involved, and that an attempt is being made, if not to do an act of great injustice, at least to prevent the consummation of an act of simple justice. He therefore responded with alacrity, and said:

"My position in this matter is very easily stated, and is not at all hard to understand. It is simply this: I want a road through the northern part of this state. I would naturally have preferred it to be the proposed Brainerd & Northwestern, for that would have run through my district. I would be glad to do anything in reason for the people of Brainerd. But for reasons which I will state later, it has got to be impossible to get this road. I therefore turn to the Duluth & Winnipeg.

"Four years ago the Duluth & Winnipeg was apparently dead, and what there was of it was controlled by Boston men. A company was organized at Brainerd by Mr. C. F. Kindred to build a road from Brainerd northwest to or toward Winnipeg. Mr. Kindred represented that he could easily place its bonds in the east and he got up considerable enthusiasm. He came down here and asked me if I would help him in the matter, and I very willingly acquiesced. We went to work and we got the legislature to pass a bill transferring the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg, in case of forfeiture, to the Brainerd & Northwestern. I will not attempt to go into the details of how the Duluth & Winnipeg had secured this grant. The details of the passage of the bills giving it to them are well known and have been sufficiently discussed. Suffice it to say that the Brainerd road was to have it, in case it was forfeited. Mr. Kindred kept the organization alive and represented that he could place its bonds at the proper time.

"At the time the bill was passed there was great opposition to it, which came from the Manitoba road alone, which would be paralleled. It fought the bill tooth and nail, but it was passed in spite of it. The attitude of the Manitoba was not at all changed. The organization having been formed, the next thing was to get control of it. Now, it is a matter of fact that within a year Mr. Kindred, alone and unauthorized, sold to the Manitoba road every book and record of the Brainerd & Northwestern, which gave it the control of the road. This was not only not authorized by the officers, but they were in total ignorance of it, I believe, up to within thirty days. I began to suspect it six months ago, but they are just beginning to get their eyes open. This, of course, gave us nothing further to expect from the Brainerd & Northwestern. In the meantime new blood had been infused into the Duluth & Winnipeg. The Foley Brothers, of St. Cloud, Donald Grant, of Faribault, and others, took hold of it and its prospects began to look up. They built twenty miles of road through a terrible country. Last fall they asked that the lands for this road be allotted to them. This met with opposition, not from the people, but from the Brainerd & Northwestern, controlled as it is by the Manitoba, and, as a result, these lands have not yet been allotted to them. My position to-day is just what it was four years ago, in favor of a road through the northern part of the state.

"The legislature is not asked to do anything in regard to these lands. It cannot do anything that will change the state of affairs. The forfeiture bill, which was killed in the house, was a Manitoba measure. The secret of their opposition is not hard to discern. The construction of the road would mean competition to them and a consequent reduction of rates. That is all there is of it. The legislature is simply asked to increase the time of the grant, which would clear the matter up and take it out of the courts. It is a mistake, however, to suppose that if this bill is killed the lands revert to the state. They do not. The forfeiture bill provided for that, and the lower house killed it. If the senate kills this other bill, the lands remain just as they are. One of the absurd fallacies of the position of the opposition to this bill is that they claim that the Duluth & Winnipeg has no rights in the matter. If it has not, why was it necessary to introduce this forfeiture bill?

"This extension of grant is a thing that has never been denied any road by the legislature of this state nor by the general government to any road in this state nor any in the Northwest. The very men who oppose it have grown rich by this extension of grants. Other roads have had extension after extension. Why should it be denied now? The only reason is that the Manitoba does not want the road built. The opposition does not come from the people. That at Brainerd is controlled by Mr. Kindred, who in turn is controlled by the Manitoba.

"The situation is simple. There is plenty of money behind this Duluth road. It has built twenty miles of the road, and it pledges itself to build one hundred miles this year and each year till the road is done. It is a tangible proposition. Its outfits are ready to go to work as soon as this thing is settled. The legislature is not asked to put a dollar of the state's money into it. It is simply asked to take an action which will take this matter out of the courts, where the opposition can worry it for years. But the state cannot get the lands back, for a forfeiture cannot be made without an act of forfeiture, and the house has refused to pass it.

"As to the benefits arising from the building of the road, a volume might be written. Look at the Duluth & Iron Range for example. There is a road ninety miles long, which has brought into the state treasury in one year $30,000. It was built into a territory which before did not bring into the state one mill. Besides the building of the road, the company has put $1,000,000 worth of improvements along its line, and three flourishing cities have sprung up. A territory rich in minerals and timber has been opened up. That road never would have been built without the land grant. The country would never have otherwise been touched. If there was anything there, it was impossible to get it out. Every mile of the Duluth & Winnipeg will be just as valuable to the state proportionately. One-third of the area of the state is north of the Northern Pacific road. It is a barren wilderness, practically unsettled, and yet containing some of the finest pine land and richest mineral land in the state. It goes without saying that this will never be opened up without the land grant. The lands the state holds are practically valueless, because they are unsalable. Build this road and they are worth something. They can be sold, and thousands and thousands of dollars will flow into the state treasury from this source and from taxation of lands that do not now produce a cent. North of a certain point the waters of this state flow north. The fine timber is being cut by crews that come into it from the other side, and whose supplies are brought from the other side. The logs are floated north, right out of our state into Canada, where they are cut up. Put this road in and they will come this way. We shall get the benefits of the business instead of Manitoba. The wholesale men of these cities will furnish the supplies. Not only that, but the cost of supplying our own camps will be greatly reduced. Again, the vast flow of emigration which now passes through our state to the territories west of us will be stopped. We will be able to give these people as good homes and lands as they can get there. A vast desolate region will be populated, and we shall get the benefits of it, and our state will grow great. Lastly, the great northwestern portion of our state will get the benefits of competition. This road will give them a direct outlet for their products. They are now dependent on one road, and this new road will be a godsend to them. Why should there be any opposition to helping, or at least not hindering this great work? The question is, shall we or shall we not encourage an enterprise that will so greatly benefit our state? Public policy, the interest of every citizen of the commonwealth, answers in the affirmative. The opposition, which is either the Manitoba road itself, or what is manufactured by it, alone answers in the negative."

That is what a Senator says who does not live in this section, while our own Senator, who does, says that the people cannot have the road.

Binding Twine Squeeze.

Minneaplis Journal.

Fargo, Dak., March 15—The agitation among the farmers over the binding twine trust has resulted in a meeting, to be held next Wedntsday, for the purpose of devising, if possible, some means of relief. It is proposed to establish a large twine factory and manufacture flax fibre into twine. Last year there were 329,288 acres planted to flax in the territory, and if it is once demonstrated that a good quality of binding twine can be made from this fiber there will be no trouble in procuring all the raw material necessary to supply the home demand.

Minneapolis Journal: Success to the farmers in their tussle with the twine trust, and, if we are not much mistaken, the farmers are pretty sure to get the best of it if they stand together. If the wheat crop of the Northwest should be harvested without binding, or at least without binding twine, it would make twine cheaper hereafter than it has ever been before. The farmers in the vicinity of Fargo are also confident of their ability to supply themselves independent of the trust. It is to be hoped they may.

FOUE NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MARCH 21, 1889.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

REGULAR MEETING, HELD MARCH 12, 1889.

President Watts in the chair. Members present—Ald. Lally, Childs, Jerome, Fournet, Walter, Steenerson, Nolan, Buhn, Marlette and Jennings.

On motion the records were ordered changed, showing report of committee on water furnished stock yards. The minutes as corrected were approved.

The bill of Joseph Netzer was referred to the city comptroller to report at the next regular meeting of the city council.

The report of the fire committee was accepted and action on same was postponed until next regular meeting.

The petition objecting to the sewer tax was referred to the city attorney for him to report on the competency of the city council to refund said tax.

Ald. Childs offered the following resolutions which were adopted:

Resolved, That the city treasurer be required to make a full, detailed and itemized statement of all his receipts and disbursements for the past fiscal year and present the same at the next meeting of the council, to be held March 19th, 1889, and that the comptroller be requested to assist him in preparing this report, and that the clerk be directed to serve a written copy of this resolution upon both the treasurer and comptroller immediately after the adjournment of this meeting.

Resolved, That a commitee of three be appointed to examine the books, papers and files belonging to the city and in the hands of the city clerk, with instructions to report whether the records, accounts, files, &c., are properly kept and cared for, and if not, what their actual condition is.

The sum of $98 86 was ordered to be withdrawn from the general fund and placed in the hands of the treasurer as a contingent fund from which the said treasurer shall pay the laborers on street work on presentation of orders, time checks or pay rolls issued by the street commissioner. Said bills to be held as vouchers against said fund until finally allowed by proper authority.

The following named places were designated as polling places for the next annual charter election, to be held April 2d, 1889:

First ward—City Hall.

Second ward—Wm. Watts' office.

Third ward—Steenerson & McManus' office.

Fourth ward—St. Louis Hotel Sample Room.

Fifth ward—Carman Hotel.

Ald. Steenerson offered the following resolution, which was carried:

Resolved, That the finance committee and the city comptroller are hereby appointed a committee to consider the propriety of securing an enabling act for the purpose of funding its floating indebtedness and to report on same at an adjourned meeting of the council, to be held March 19th, 1889.

Ald. Childs offered the following resolution, which was carried:

Resolved, That the city comptroller be requested to assist the city attorney in preparing a bill authorizing the board of sinking fund commission to invest the monies belonging to said fund in municipal and school bonds of the State of Minnesota under the same restrictions as now govern other investments, and to forward the same to Senator Sampson with a request that he cause the passage of the same through the legislature now in session.

The matter of appointing a pound keeper was referred to the ways and means committee.

JOHN PATERSON, City Clerk.

The Twine Trust.

ANGUS, March 13, 1889.

ED. JOURNAL: Enclosed find a list of names from the town of Tabor, in regard to the twine trust. Farmers here feel great indignation in view of this new attempt at wholesale robbery. Farmers in the Red River Valley are little better than in a state of slavery.

Three plans were discussed at our meeting yesterday for throwing off the oppressor's yoke and securing a fair compensation for our toil.

1. It was proposed to raise less wheat, and so need less twine. We are now wearing out our lives and our land and getting little for it. Half the number of bushels of wheat we now grow, at double the price, would give us far more nett profit.

2. It was proposed to set the binders up, so as to cut the grain high, and thus have but a small amount of straw to handle with the heads. This would lessen the labor, both of stacking and threshing. Perhaps a better way would be to cut the grain with "headers." This plan is common in Southern Minnesota and in the James River Valley and other parts of Dakota. In this way seven men and ten horses will cut and put in stack from 20 to 40 acres per day. No twine is used and no other plan of harvesting is so economical.

3. It was proposed to remove the "binders" from our machines and let two men ride on the platform and bind with straw, the same as with the old-fashioned "harvester." Two men can bind 12 acres per day and use no twine.

This monopoly can and MUST be smashed in some way. If farmers can only be induced, in some practical way, to combine and make their influence felt, the good work will soon be done.

S. H. BARTEAU.

Grand Forks Herald: "Do you think you could identify a letter written in a familiar hand-writing?" was the interrogatory propounded to a Herald reporter yesterday by Attorney A. C. Wilkinson of Crookston, at the same time handing the newsman the following:

"Mr. Macomber; God forgive me, I can bear it no longer. The note of $400 I made and signed; shield my name. Be kind to my wife and you shall have every cent. I am going to get it where I cannot fail. It is hard to strike a friend. I feel as if I could serve you on my knees for your kindness. You did not deserve this from me, but in time will understand all. I will come back and then all will be well. Be kind to my wife.

E. T. BENNETEAU."

The reporter scanned the epistle, mentioned; scanned it again; remembered that a few months ago he had been the recipient of a letter purporting to have come from Jamestown, Dakota lauding A. B. Ward to the skies; he remembered also that that selfsame letter was the production of that conceited whelp himself. Of course, there was a similarity between the two chirographies.

"Yes," replied the Herald man "that's Ward's writting. What of it?"

"Let me tell you," replied Wilkinson, drawing his chair closer to the newsgetherer. "Some years ago, I practiced law in Wisconsin—New Lisbon—was district attorney of Juneau county. Well, a theatrical troupe, Pike's I think was the name of it, came to New Lisbon and disbanded there. Among its members was a slick looking actor and wife: they were both members of the troupe. Well, this fellow styled himself Benneteau. Talk about a smooth talker; if ever God made one, 'twas him. Shortly after his arrival in New Lisbon, he ingrafted himself into the good will of an old lawyer there: told him he had formerly been a barrister in New York city and was very desirous to renew the profession. The old gentleman was easily persuaded upon to furnish him a starter. It wasn't long before this Benneteau began to think of taking a partner—Macomber a banker there had a son, a graduate of a law school, who was about locating there and Benneteau and this young Macomber soon complete a deal—Mr. Macomber senior furnished the firm or rather Benneteau with a library—the partnership didn't last long however nor did Benneteau—He had a client by the name of Jeff Heath, on whom he forged a note for $400—that's the note referred to in the letter—Heath was a contractor and at that time was a little short of funds, tho' he had excellent credit, well, Benneteau went to Macomber's bank, got the note cashed, and the only thing left of him next morning it New Lisbon was his wife and the letter you have just read.

His wife;—Yes she was an estimable lady and went back again on the stage to support her little girl. Her maiden name as near as I can remember was Lizzie Hudson—her home was only a short distance from New Lisbon. Last time I was in St. Paul, I happened to attend a performance of the Maggie Mitchell troupe and there upon the stage was the same lady. But I am wandering from the subject—that Benneteau was none else than your Grand Forks champion swindler and blackleg—Ward.

How do I know:—How do I know that two and two makes four, though I have never seen the man personally here, the description of him tallies so minutely and perfectly to this Benneteau that I am postive the twain are one. You yourself have just admitted that the similarity between the Jamestown letter and the one I have just shown you is remarkable. Yes siree Ward and Benneteau are the same fellows.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION

Of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company.

We, the undersigned, do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of incorporation under title one (1), of chapter thirty-four (34), of the general laws of the State of Minnesota, and the several acts of the legislature of said State, amendatory thereto, and for that purpose have adopted and signed the following articles of incorporation.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this corporation shall be

"The Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company."

The general nature of its business shall be to construct, maintain and operate for the transportation of persons and property for hire, a main line of railroad with one or more side-tracks, or lines of rails, and branch lines. The main line to commence at some point on Lake Superior at or near the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, extending thence in a westerly and northwesterly direction through the city of Crookston, to the international boundary line, at some point on the northern boundary line of Kittson County, in the State of Minnesota, with a branch line extending from said main line, at the city of Crookston, in a westerly direction through Polk County to the Red River. And also a branch line extending from the city of Crookston, in a southeasterly direction to the city of Brainerd, in Crow Wing County, Minnesota.

ART. 2. The principal place of business of said Railroad Company, shall be at Crookston, Minnesota.

ART. 3. The time of commencement of the said corporation shall be on the twelfth day of March, 1889, and the same shall continue for a period of fifty years.

ART. 4. The amount of the capital stock of the said corporation shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000), and the same shall be divided into fifty thousand (50,000) shares of one hundred dollars ($100) each, and all capital stock subscribed for shall be paid in at the times and in the amounts required by resolution of the Board of Directors.

ART. 5. The highest amount of indebtedness or liability to which said corporation shall at any time be subject shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000).

ART. 6. The names and places of residence of the persons forming this association for incorporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague. Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone. William Anglim,
John R. McKinnon, John McLean,
John Locken.

all of whom reside at the City of Crookston, in Polk County, Minnesota.

ART. 7. The names of the first Board of Directors of said corporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague. Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone. William Anglim.
John R. McKinnon. John McLean.
John Locken.

The government of said corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of seven (7) directors, to be elected by and from the stockholders annually, as hereafter provided. The annual meeting for such election shall be held at the office of the company at the City of Crookston, on the first Monday of February of each year, and until their successors are elected and qualified the said directors above named shall respectively continue to be such directors. The directors shall at their annual meeting to be held immediately after the annual meeting of the stockholders, elect a President, a Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Until the annual meeting as aforesaid:

Robert J. Montague shall be President.
John McLean, Vice-President.
Edmund M. Walsh, Secretary.
William Anglin, Treasurer.

In case of the resignation of any of said officers or directors or their inability or refusal to act, their places shall be filled by the remainder of said Board of Directors, at any meeting called and held for that purpose. If for any cause the annual meeting for the election of the officers and directors shall not be held at the time above specified, it may be held at any other time that the directors may appoint for that purpose.

In witness whereof, the said incorporators have hereunto set their hands and seals this 16th day of February, A. D. 1889.

ROBERT J. MONTAGUE, (Seal.)
JOHN McLEAN, (Seal.)
EDMUND M. WALSH, (Seal.)
WILLIAM ANGLIM, (Seal.)
JOHN LOCKEN, (Seal.)
JOHN R. McKINNON, (Seal.)
NATHAN P. STONE, (Seal.)

In presence of O. O. Christianson, Alex. McKinnon, witnesses to all of the foregoing signatures.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk. }

On this 16th day of February, A. D. 1889, before me, a Notary Public within and for said county, personally appeared Robert J. Montague John McLean, Edmund M. Walsh, William Anglim, John Locken, John R. McKinnon, Nathan P. Stone, to me well known to be the persons described in, and who executed the foregoing articles of incorporation, and they acknowledged that they executed the same as their own free act and deed.

{ SEAL. } O. O. CHRISTIANSON, Notary Public.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., March 5th, 1889.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on April 11th, 1889, viz: PASCAL LABELLE, for the southwest ¼ of the sw¼ Sec. 21, Township 151, Range 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Germain Pellilier, Alphonse Rabl, Israel Rabl, Moise DeJardins, all of Crookston P. O. Any person who desires to protest against the allowance of such proof, or who knows of any substantial reason, under the law and the regulations of the Interior Department, why such proof should not be allowed, will be given an opportunity at the above mentioned time and place to cross examine the witnesses of said claimant, and to offer evidence in rebuttal of that submitted by claimant.

[45-51] H. R. DICKMANS, Register.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk,—ss. In Probate Court. Special term, March 11th, 1889.

In the matter of the estate of Isak Shefloe deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Peter O. Onstad, administrator of the estate of Isak Shefloe, deceased, representing among other things that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining and allowing his account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to heirs.

It is ordered, that said account be examined and petition heard, by the Judge of this Court, on Tuesday, the 9th day of April, A. D. 1889, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate Office in Crookston, in said county.

And it is further ordered, that notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper, printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 11th day of March, A. D. 1889.

By the Court, O. O. CHRISTIANSON,

[47-49] Judge of Probate.

THE DICKENS!

Compared with the cost of former, even recent days, it is amazing how the prices of standard books are now reduced. This is especially true of the works of Charles Dickens, and the most marvelously cheap edition of his works ever published is unquestionably the "Boz" edition, now issued by John B. Alden, the "Literary Revolution" publisher, New York, Chicago, and elsewhere. It is printed in good, clear, large-faced nonpariel type (from the same plates as Appleton's Popular Library Edition, price per set $10), double-column pages, small quarto form, easy for the eye, convenient to handle, and is handsomely bound in cloth, in eight volumes, as follows:

List of the Vols.—Over 130 Illustrations.

1.—Martin Chuzzlewit. Barnaby Rudge.
2.—Bleak House Sketches by Boz,
3.—Nicholas Nickleby. Tale of Two Cities. Uncommercial Traveler.
4.—Pickwick Papers. Reprinted Pieces. Great Expectations.
5—David Copperfield. Christmas Stories. Edwin Drood.
6.—Mutual Friend. Hard Times. Pictures from Italy.
7.—Dombey and Son. Old Curiosity Shop. American Notes.
8.—Little Dorrit. Oliver Twist.

Price Per Vol. 45c. Per Set $3.00.

Size of volume 5 3-4 x 7 3-4 inches? postage, if by mail, 12 cents per volume.

Please notice carefully the simple and reasonable conditions on which it is offered:

1st. Paid in advance subscribers to THE JOURNAL.
2d. To be presented within a specified date.
3d. 20 cents cash with the coupon, and 12 cents postage, if by mail.

The first condition is OUR requirement. If you have paid us—thank you; it is a pleasure to acknowledge it with the above privilege. If you have not yet paid, the above is an inducement for you to do so at once. If you have a neighbor who "borrows" your paper, or who is not a subscriber, will you kindly tempt him, for us, to subscribe by showing him this notice.

See our Book Coupon offer above for the extraordinary reduction in cost to subscribers to this paper. Note the limited time within which it may be ordered.

The D. & W. R. R.

ST. PAUL, March 15.—Ed. Dispatch: It is sufficiently obvious that Mr. Porter, president of the Duluth & Iron Range Railroad company, and Mr. Hill, president of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway company, have formed a compact to defeat the construction of a railroad from Duluth to Winnipeg via the Red River Valley. The former acts upon the view that there will not be more than enough swamp lands (having any value) in Lake, Cook and St. Louis Counties to supply deficiencies in the grant of the Duluth & Iron Range Railway company, and that forfeiture of the grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway company would shut out that company from competitive selection of lands in those counties for like deficiencies. Mr. Hill's action proceeds on the vein that he could not successfully compete with the proposed road for the grain trade between the Red River Valley and the head of the lake. Neither of these men pay any attention to public policy or the roads of the state—with both it is a matter of purely selfish interests. It remains to be seen whether the State of Minnesota is under the control of the two corporations of which these two men are the exponents. Their agents began opposition to construction of the Duluth & Winnipeg with arguments on the merits, but finding that every argument they made could be and was really and condescendingly answered, they have finally betaken themselves to falsification and misrepresentations, in expectation that before impressions so created could be removed their objects would be accomplished. I have hoped and still hope to secure construction of the Duluth & Winnipeg road by fair and legitimate argument, by calling attention to the public need of the road, and of the equities of those who have already invested largely in work done upon it, and by calling attention of our representative men in both houses to the fact that other parts of the state have been developed by similar aids, and that fairness demanded that the north third of the state be now opened to settlement in like manner. If such arguments prove unavailing then it is high time that such obstructive influences be removed or reduced to subjection. Is this state powerless in the hands of two railway corporations? Cannot the best interests of the state at large be promoted unless these two corporations consent? Senator Buckman was persuaded to believe two years ago that the Duluth & Winnipeg road was not going to be built, and that his action of that date would conduse to the development of another portion of the state; and for that reason he then favored turning the swamp land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway company over to the St. Paul, Brainerd & Northwestern Railway company in case of its forfeiture, but subsequent events have satisfied him as well as others that the St. Paul, Brainerd & Northwestern road was not to be built, and that no road through any part of the region north of the Northern Pacific road would be built unless and until the Duluth & Winnipeg road was built, and that the only way to secure the building of that road was to maintain its swamp land grant in such condition as would render the enterprise a safe investment for the money needed to build that road, and that the building of that road would compel the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway company to build another, so that the state would practically thus secure the building of two roads, where now there were none, and where none would otherwise be built. Complaint is now made of Senator Buckman, because he cannot be mislead and deceived again.

I am not going to consume time or space with noticing and correcting petty misrepresentations as to the facts, and have once stated all the facts as they are. Every man has a correct state map, and the records of the secretary of state's office and of the board of railway and warehouse commissioners are public and cannot be unconsciously falsified.

This is not a controversy with or between men, but it is really a struggle between the state on the one side and the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway company and the Duluth & Iron Range Railway company on the other side, as to whether the northern part of this state is to be opened up and developed or left a wilderness to shut off and separate the Red River Valley from the lake. The issue is plain and simple. To whom does this state belong, anyhow? Yours, etc.

A Machine That Will Beat the Binder Twine Trust.

WATERLOO, Iowa, Special Telegram to Pioneer Press.—Some of the local implement dealers here believe that they have hit upon an expedient to beat the binder twine trust. At the request of one of those dealers the inventor of a new harvesting machine which was perfected here several years ago went to Des Moines and laid the scheme before the meeting of the national Farmers' alliance. A letter was received from him this morning, in which he says that he was admitted to the secret meeting of the alliance, where he explained his machine, and it was strongly endorsed, and arrangements will probably be made to take the whole output of his factory for the year. The new machine cuts the grain in a long swath, like the old fashioned cradle, and puts two swaths together. Another machine follows and loads the grain from these swaths loose, thus obviating the necessity of binding. An attempt will be made to secure the manufacture of these machines for this city. There is considerable interest manifested here in regard to the twine question. Last year 250,000 pounds of binder twine were used in this county, and the price proposed by the trust will increase the cost of the twine used here about $20,000 this year.

The Duluth & Winnipeg Grant.

To the Editor of the Globe.

St. Paul, March 14.—Men who are residents of this state and who are thoroughly conversant with Duluth & Winnipeg railroad affairs have been hoping that fair and honest statements and methods would be used in discussing and treating this matter. When day succeeds day and we read articles that contain quotations garbled to serve false ends, and statements that will not bear the light of truth couched in phraseology that permits double meaning, it seems as though there was back of it all a propelling force actuated by other motives than those that have the welfare of the state at heart, as they profess to have. Upon all public occasions when opportunity has been offered the fullest investigation in every sense of the Duluth & Winnipeg affair has been invited, and in every instance the company has come off victor. The majority of the present incorporators are honorable residents of this state who have now put their energies into a project, which was instituted years ago for the acknowledged benefit of the state. And now they find themselves confronted with accusations that are false in every particular. From dark and mysterious places there are thrown out to the public ear: "A gigantic steal of swamp land;" "A pine land ring seeking to defraud the state of millions of acres of land;" "The whole matter a piece of jobbery," etc. The same conditions that gave rise to this land grant in 1878 exist now and in a stronger degree, and the human vultures, who cast the slurs above quoted, have not the moral or physical courage to confront face to face those men who have subscribed to this project and accuse them of these untruths. The Duluth & Winnipeg people are asking, for the first and only time, a favor that has been granted in the past to every similar corporation from two to six times. Openly and frankly they state their case and give reasons that cannot be controverted as to why this favor should be extended to them and they ask to be met in the same fair and open manner. Excepting in one particular, not a single opposing issue has been brought out openly and above board. What mighty force is it then that is moving the powers of darkness to thwart the construction of this road? Who is it that now controls the Brainerd & Northwestern railroad and wishes to strut and parade before the people as a public benefactor? For whose benefit are special telegrams and resolutions from the city of Brainerd showered upon us and whose interests can be best forwarded by the publication of distorted maps?

What mighty corporation is it who has profited by millions of dollars from the sales of lands in this state, and who is now so solicitous about the education of children yet to be born?

At a day not far distant certain people treading a path not of this earth will approach a pearly gate seeking admittance, and the guardian thereof will wave them back with the rebuke that the distribution of a few boars and bulls does not entitle them to everlasting peace.

The people in the north third of this state are looking with longing eyes to the legislature, and supplicating to be freed from a slavedom that is sapping their very life, and which has driven thousand of people from our state. The Duluth & Winnipeg road will give them that freedom, and no other road will.

If a free and open discussion of this matter shows the Duluth & Winnipeg to have made a just request, then let it be grantad; otherwise let it be denied, but let their opponents come out into the light and show themselves in their true colors.

The Educated Farmer.

Thomas P. Montfort in the Prairie Farmer.

The time has come when, to be successful in life, a person must be educated. Natural tact is a great thing. Money is a great thing. Genius is a great thing. These are all good things and great helps to success, but far greater yet is education. As competition narrows down and the margin of action grows smaller, the better must a man be equipped for the battle of life, if he expects to be successful. This is as true of the farmer as of any one else. The time has passed for farmers to depend on muscle and hard labor alone. They must use their brains as well as hands. They must do more thinking and planning if they desire to receive the best results.

The farmer who reads and studies is the one who works to a purpose, while the one who does not read is the one who makes his efforts at hap-hazard. The former is posted on the markets, and, from long study, is able to draw conclusions and form pretty correct ideas of what it will be to his interest to raise for those markets. He discovers that the wheat maaket is likely to have a downward tendency, from the fact that he is informed of a large area of wheat sown in the main wheat-producing State. Consequently, he very sensibly concludes, that for a profit he had better turn his attention to other crops. The uneducated farmer, on the other hand, knows nothing of markets, or of the outlook for crop production, and is as liable to produce a non-paying crop as any.

Then again, the educated farmer is always posted in everything pertaining to his business, and is ready to be the first to take advantage of a new and valuable discovery, and every year there are many valuable discoveries made in the agricultural world. These are cheaper and more convenient methods of performing farm labor; ways by which better returns are secured from the same amount of soil and work; newer and more satisfactory methods of caring for stock and of feeding and pasturing the same; and many other discoveries trifling and insignificent in themselves, but which, in the aggregate, amount to a great deal in a long run.

The uneducated farmer—the one who does not read—is the one who treats small matters as unworthy of any thought or attention, and who too often walks over dollars in a mad chase after phantom gold pieces. And yet it is the small things most often that constitute the profit.

The educated farmer knows how to save. He understands the value of economy. He knows how to obtain the greatest results at the least expence. He knows how to secure the greatest yield from a given amount of ground. He knows what crops to cultivate and when and where to market his products. He is posted in the new and best varieties of seeds, and also the best varieties of stock. He has the advantage of the experience of other men, because he reads. He does not depend altogether on his own observation and experience.

Farming is a science, and there are many new things to learn in it yet, and the best and cheapest way to learn those things is by study. Take agricultural papers, read in their columns the experiences and observation of others, and avail yourself of the many useful hints and suggestions, and thus keep up with the procession.

"Farming is no longer profitable," some men cry, when the fact is they do not find it so for the reason that they are away behind the procession, and are attempting to run on the old plan of all muscle-work and no brain-work.

Holstein-Friesian Notes.

The Prairie Farmer.

My advertisement in the Prairie Farmer has been bringing me a great many inquiries for Holstein cattle. The demand for this race of cattle is certainly good, although prices are much lower than a few years since. Our other breeds, however, have similarly declined in price. Holsteins have the advantage over other breeds, as the cows produce fine calves, and a great flow of milk. If this milk is properly utilized for cheese or butter, and slops for pigs, it will bring the owner of the of the cow, each year, from $40 to $70.

Holsteins are also splendid beef cattle, although, in many places they are not popular for beef animals, as the breeders of beef cattle are prejudiced against them. This prejudice will not last long. The truth will be known. Feeding-tests prove that Holsteins will make as economical growth for the feed consumed as any of the beef breeds. The quality of the beef is execllent. Many good judges of meat have informed the writer that they never ate better beef. Butchers, too, who have slaughtered Holsteins, claim that they never handled better carcasses. This noble race of cattle is certainly destined in the near future to cut a great figure in supplying this country with beef and dairy products.

Cattle breeders are inquiring for Holsteins from every quarter.

The writer reports sales as follows: To Dr. J. G. O'Brien, Texas, the bull "Captain Grafton," and four females; Mr. Briggs Wilber, of Mt. Ayr, the bull, Captain Logan; Mr. J. M. Martin, of Utah, about 20 head; Porter Bros., Dakota, purchased the bull, Captain's Lone Astrer; Mr. H. M. Van Tyle, of Iowa, the cow, Astrea 9th; Mr. Augustus Wilder, of Iowa, the cow, Mary Astrea; Hon. John C. Cooper, of Texas, the heifer, Miss Maggie F.; Mr. H. C. Jacobs, of Texas, the young bull captain Billy; Mr. J. A. Schuddmeyer of Texas, a few heifer calves.

In conclusion I will say, success to the Prairie Farmer and its patrons.

Early Oats

The Prairie Farmer.

In a majority of cases it is the early oats that yield the best, not only in quantity but in quality. Oats will stand a considerable frost with less injury than they will stand the hot, scorching sun we so often have in July, and especially so if they are just filling out. Oats and onions are two crops that, as a rule, ought to be ready to go in the ground just as soon as the condition of the soil will admit. If this is done, it will be quite an item to make the necessary preparations in advance, so that at the proper time the work can be pushed along as rapidly as possible. The seed should be secured and be on hand, and the implements all ready to go to work. On land that has been in corn or that has been plowed in the fall, the oats can be sown broadcast, and then with a cultivator they can be plowed or cultivated in very rapidly. A good harrowing will usually fine and level down the soil sufficiently and at the same time cover the seed. On stubble-land it will, of course, be necessary to plow and then sow the seed, harrowing thoroughly to level down the surface and cover the seed.

Oats require a deep stirring of the soil. The roots branch out over the surface, and three inches of the surface put in good tilth will be all that is necessary. More seed should be used on thin land than on good rich soil. Often a good rolling after sowing the seed will be found beneficial, and especially so if the soil is some what dry, as it presses the soil down upon the seed and induces a better germination. On thin land, where the oats will not make a very tall growth, rolling places the soil in a better condition to harvest.

Oats sown with the drill yield well, and if the soil has been plowed during the winter, a good harrowing is all the preparation necessary to get ready for the drill. If plowed in the fall, a disc harrow will pulverize and fine the soil sufficiently to use the drill in sowing. With two teams the work can be done very rapidly in this way; and by having the seed on hand and the implements all ready for work, the crop can be put in with a very little trouble. Oats make one of the best articles of feed to be secured upon the farm, and should, as a rule, form a part of the crop. If a system of rotation is carried on, oats should be considered as one crop.

N. J. S.

Field Peas and Pork.

To the Northwestern Agriculturist.

A request is made in your January number, that some farmer give the best method of raising field peas in Minnesota and Dakota. In my boyhood, in the then famous Genesee Valley, N. Y., my father was very successful in field pea culture. He found the best results in deep fall ploughing and broadcast seeding, as early in the spring as the ground was in order. Later seeding made larger vines but less peas. Some advocated seeding in the old of the moon to secure a big yield of peas and moderate growth of vines. One year father sowed as early as possible, when the moon was quite new, and had a bountiful yield, and left a small piece for the old of the moon, which made big vines and a small yield of peas, thus reversing the popular theory. He used to seed about three bushels per acre, and sometimes plowed them in rather shallow and left the furrows without smoothing to facilitate mowing, keeping the vines from laying flat on the ground. But covering with the harrow without replowing made fully as good a crop. The yield on good clean land ranged from 30 to 40 bushels per acre, and the crop was more profitable for making pork than corn, which usually made a little more per acre, but required much the most labor.

When I was grown to manhood, I found another crop still better, I plowed deep in the fall, and early in the spring sowed one bushel of June peas, one of two rowed barley and one of oats per acre and covered with a harrow. These varieties would ripen together, and yield 30 to 50 per cent more weight of grain than if sown separate.

To start fattening, we ground the grain and mixed the meal with boiled potatoes, which, with clover pasture, the milk and slops of the house, made the pigs grow and take flesh fast. As the pigs grew and fattened, the meal was increased and the potatoes diminished and they were topped off (in a warm pen) in February, or when a year old, on corn. They usually made at that age an average of 365 pounds dressed. When killed at nine to ten months old, they would seldom make a pound per day of age; yet from six to nine months they would eat as much, or more, than from nine to twelve months old, showing a profit in the last three months feeding, which is contrary to the present theory, and probably contrary to the results that would now be obtained with some of our improved breeds of early maturing hogs. At that date we had the common breeds, that would now be called scrubs; yet with care and good feed from pigs up there was no trouble in obtaining the above results, while the pork was preferable to that corn fed exclusively. More lean meat in proportion to the fat, and a little less lard.

My father was very methodical and kept an account with his pigs for many years. The latter method produced the best and cheapest meat.

In cleaning my mixed seed, I used to blow over a portion of the oats, and raised a small piece of peas to replenish my seed, otherwise the oats would gain on the barley and both would gain on the peas, and this kept the richness of my feed up to the standard.

The climate and soil of North Dakota and Minnesota are excellent for such a mixed crop. The reason why such a mixture of grain produces better results than each sown by itself, is the same that causes a better and heavier yield from mixed grasses, but space will not admit a full explanation in this communication.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MARCH 28, 1889.

'Round Home.

That ice cream soda water at Herb's takes the cake.

G. H. Pollard left on Saturday last for the drive.

Farmers are generally seeding this week. At least a month earlier than usual.

When the spring time comes, gentle Annie, go to Herb's and try an ice cream soda.

A. Yvernault, who was so sick last week is very much improved this week. Able to be about.

Attorney A. R. Holston was down from the Falls last week interviewing his friends in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Melocke welcomed the arrival of a bouncing baby boy on Wednesday March 20th.

See M. R. Brown's notice of horses and mules to trade for stock cattle, elsewhere in this issue. [49-51]

E. O. Flanders reports that Star Bashaw colt improving rapidly. Says he will beat any number of dead colts.

The way the drills are going out this week would seem to indicate that farmers intend to seed thoroughly this year if they never have before.

Artesian lemonade, soda water, frui mix, milk shake and ice cream soda, five in number, should constitute a wide enough range for choice, at Herb's.

The children cry for it, the matrons ask for it, and young man, if you wish to win her undying affection, go with her to Herb's and get her an ice cream soda.

Last Saturday was one of the busiest days Crookston has seen lately. The streets were crowded with people and every store seemed to be doing a big trade.

S. M. McKee returned to civilization on Thursday last bringing 90 sheep and four good work horses. Much to his surprise he found the soil all ready for seeding and went to work on Monday.

Swan Hovick reports that his business has grown so much that he will be obliged to find larger quarters somewhere. Talks of moving in where Berthiaume& Michaud were, on Broadway.

A little flurry of snow and colder weather on Tuesday seemed to indicate that perhaps spring is not quite so previous as we has supposed. Some remarked: "Uncle John must be sick again."

See the notice of full-blood Jersey calf for sale elsewhere in this issue. This animal is in one of the best butter strains of that noted breed and is a bargain for somebody. If you need such an animal it will pay you to see that one.

On Wednesday night at about 10:30 the fire alarm brought out the department to attend to a fire in the C. O. D. which for a time threatened to get away with that fine establishment. The fire was in the second story among some clothing, not easy of access and, together with the water did much damage.

J. D. Knudson, one of the progressive farmers of the town of King came down last Thursday and purchased a full-blood Holstein bull calf from THE JOURNAL stock farm, taking him home with him on Saturday. Mr. K. says farmers in his neighborhood express a determination to do without twine rather than to purchase at trust prices.

Ole Bang was up from his farm on the west side last week. Ole is getting to be a first-class farmer, believes in thoroughbred stock and is the happy possessor of a fine French Clyde horse which makes him the envy of his farmer friends and neighbors. He says the west side farmers are going into stock more than ever this year and will make wheat farming less a specialty.

Jas. Novotny came down from Angus last week to buy one of those new Dowagiac drills that McKinnon Bro's. sell. Mr. N. is one of the leading farmers of Tabor township and believes that whatever is worth doing at all is worth well doing. He says his neighbors are are all in earnest on the twine question —that they have determined not to use any twine at all if the price exceeds last year's figures.

The county board met last week to see about supplying seed wheat to those who have applied. Although the money received would be inadequate to supply the demand if $1 per bushel had to be paid, the commissioners hope to be able to make it answer at the price for which wheat can be purchased. Each commissioner will attend to the wants of his own district.

Louis Barrette whose return from Stillwater we noted last week was taken to St. Peter later in the week. Upon his arrival on Wednesday his condition was suspected and he was kept under surveillance by the police all day awaiting the arrival of his father who took him home for a day or so. He was then brought before Judge Christianson found to be insane and policeman Goynier took him to St. Peter. The doctors there say that he can live but a short time.

Alderman Marlette had a valuable mare that had her shoulders injured severely, took cold in it and a swelling as large as a hornet's nest was the result. He called Mike Leguee to attend the case who soon had the shoulders healed as good as new. So well pleased was Marlette at the success of the job and the smallness of the bill therefor that he sent Van Dyke & Co., an order to give Mike the best box of cigars the shop afforded.

The department answered the call to an incipient fire in rear of the laundry, in the alley back of the engine house, on Monday about 11 a. m. The fire had caught in an old carpet lying on a sawbuck standing close to an old shed. When discovered the shed was blazing up in good shape and in a short time there would have been business on hand. It is thought the fire took from a spark from the chimney to the feed mill on same alley. The prospects for fun in that neighborhood are first-class.

Seeding was pretty generally commenced this week.

F. E. Hertz & Co., received an immense soda fountain on Monday.

The ward caucuses will be held this evening at the usual places at 8 o'clock.

Sheriff N. O. Paulsrud went down to Minneapolis to see the Barrett boys hung.

H. A. McClatchie was down from Red Lake Falls on Monday enjoying city life with his many friends.

Wheat has been excited and higher everywhere but in this market where the same old figure rules, 87 for 1 Hard.

Mr. Sampson acts as though he thought the business men of Crookston were a set of boys or fools to put up with his nonsense.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Locken welcomed to their home a little stranger who will be eligible for millinery in a few years.

Mr. Hueler was in the city this week trying to make arrangements for power for the new flour mill which he contemplates building.

Postmaster McKinnon has tendered his resignation. "Sandy" has been a faithful servant and we could find many a poorer postmaster.

See the notice of Brown's auction sale elsewhere in this issue. On Saturday next he will offer some choice farm teams at your own price.

Fred Tiedt was down from Euclid on Tuesday rustling about the streets for business. Fred is an aspirant for the Euclid postoffice, when Mike quits.

Wm. Wylie was in from Black River on Monday after a team. Says his neighbors are busy seeding but he is of the opinion that it is altogether too early yet.

Prof. Wentworth of Grand Forks preached at the Congregational church on Sunday, morning and evening. We are told that he will occupy the pulpit until it is supplied by a regular pastor.

The Hon. Burn-hard Sampson came up from St. Paul on Sunday morning. He drove through the Fifth Ward and looked at the houses to see how the people stood on the bond question. When he returned on Sunday evening he must have carried away a vast amount of valuable information stored away in that massive brain of his.

Political Opinion.

D. E. Hattlestad:—My goodness, I don't see what Sampson can be thinking about to set up his own will against the wishes of the whole city. It is the heighth of presumption for him to assume to be dictator general.

P. O. Schmidt:—My little baby girl tips the beam at 22 pounds and is only nine months old. How is that for solid?

R. J. Montogue:—I am about disgusted with this bonding business when it has come to such a pass that we have got to squander so much money to obtain what a postage stamp ought to accomplish. The way Mr. Sampson is treating the city is a positive shame.

B. Sampson:—I must and I musn't; I will and I wont; I'll be d—d if I do and I'll be d—d if I don't.

Henry Nolan:—Who'll be mayor? Well, if I should be sufficiently urged——

C. O. Christianson:—I was misrepresented about that furlough business. I considered the move unnecessary at that stage of the game, as Mr. Sampson had given his word of honor to the city to pass our bill and if he is a man of honor he would have to keep his word, and I could see no use of extreme measures at that time.

OBSERVATIONS.

This week we observe that John Cromb is numerously mentioned for mayor. John has made a first-class comptroller and would be a good mayor.

That A. G. Gallasch is highly recommended for comptroller if Cromb is selected as mayor. The selection would be a good one.

That an unusual amount of apathy exists in relation to the coming city election. Even the bright spring weather can't awaken much enthusiasm.

That every man woman and child in the city, who has the real interest of Crookston at heart, earnestly desires the passage of the bonding bill as it was prepared by the people's committee.

That our people have done everything in their power to convince Sampson of that fact except get down on their knees and pray to him. Does he expect them to do that?

That the prospects of a new flouring mill are very good a consummation greatly to be desired.

That the adjusters arrived on Monday morning to adjust losses incurred by the fire at the C. O. D.

That Crookston has got as efficient a fire department as any city in the Northwest. We take a back seat for no one.

That Doc Henault was so entranced with Fosston that he lengthened a call into about a week. He insists that it was only because he missed the train.

That Gallasch finds his duties as cashier growing more attractive each day. He likes to sit with his back to the desk and gaze out of the Main St., window.

That the signs of reviving trade and good business for the coming season are many and encouraging.

That alderman Marlette is now more careful where he hitches his horse.

Respectfully submitted,
J. H. LOCKEN,
City Treasurer.

EDITOR JOURNAL:

DEAR SIR:—By order of the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the City Council, I hand you the annexed report of the City Treasurer, which the charter of our city requires shall be published before the annual election.

Besides the disbursements therein shown, there are bills to the amount of several hundreds of dollars before the Council not yet acted upon because of a lack of funds out of which to pay them. Also the full amounts of salaries to city officers are not in all instances shown, the fiscal year not ending till April 1st.

I have caused to be prepared a digest of the several accounts entering into the general fund, seeking to group the items in such a way that the cost of each department of our city government may be readily seen.

There was received into the general fund as follows;

From Licenses		$10350 00

THE DIFFERENCE

Between the National Building and Loan Associations and the Local Mutual Building and Loan Associations?

Building Association News, Duluth, Minn.

This was the quesion asked by a champion of the Nationals before the committee on corporations, of the Legislature of Minnesota. We will note a few.

AS A BASIS we will take shares whose ultimate value is $1,000.

LOCAL.	NATIONAL.
No membership fee.	Membership fee on shares $10.00 to $20.00.
Membership fee is loaned the same as interest and premium.	Membership fee goes into agents pocket or expense fund.
Transfer fee 50 cents.	Transfer fee $1.00, $2.75 and $5.00.
Transfer fee is loaned the same as interest and premium.	Prospectuses do not state where this goes.
Fines per month not over 50 cents.	Fines first month .50 to $1.00, sixth month .50 to $3.50.
Withdrawal fees none.	Withdrawal fee $3.00.
Expenses per year $1.25.	Expenses per year $10.00 to $12.00, besides membership fees, withdrawal fees, &c.
An investor paying ahead two years and withdrawing would receive from $11.90 to $29.20 more than he invested.	An investor paying ahead two years and withdrawing would lose from $29.80 to the whole amount invested.
Issue detailed statements semi-annually or annually.	No detailed statements have been issued.
Assist sister Associations in organizing.	Are trying to pass a bill to stop their like being organized.
Anti-monopolist.	Monopolist.
For the members.	For the officers and agents.
Has had and will have a steady growth.	Has "gone up like a rocket and will come down like a stick."

The above facts are compiled from the statements of about 300 Mutual Associations in regard to the Local Associations.

In regard to the National Associations the prospectuses of the National of Minneapolis, whose agent left Duluht between two days, The American, of Minneapolis, The United States, of St. Paul, and the National, of St. Paul. There may be a field in the United States for Associations to do business over a large territory. That the men who have attempted to occupy the field by organizing the above Associations, have proved themselves incompetent and that their schemes will prove failures, we have not the slightest doubt.

We believe that to follow the method of ordinary banks in placing stock with whoever desires it, but whose loans are all made at home is far the safes.

Expense of Workingmen's Building and Loan Association of Crookston, past months, $37.50.

Expense of the Workingmen's Building and Loan Association to members is run on the "American" or "United States" method would have been:

Membership fees	$300
20 cents for each dollar of dues received	360
	$660

WORK ON A FARM.

A good reliable steady man and a boy can find a steady job for the season by applying at THE JOURNAL office. None but sober reliable persons need apply.

A RARE CHANCE.

It is not often the case that one has a chance to trade stock cattle for good work horses and mules, but M. R. Brown has decided to offer just such an opportunity. Sometime between April 10th and 15th he will receive two carloads of good work horses and mules, which he will be prepared to exchange for stock cattle. Here is a good chance to get a good solid team and pay for it if you have the cattle.

Auction Sale.

The undersigned will sell at public auction at his old stables, corner of Fourth St., and Broadway, on Saturday March 30th 1889, twelve large work horses weighing from 1,200 to 1,500 pounds each, and ten large mules, all in prime condition and ready to go to work. I will sell them without reserve at your own price, for cash or good paper due Dec. 15th next. 10 per cent. off for cash.

THE FARM.

Agricultural Notes.

Disease germs are not killed by the decomposition of the carcass, and are brought to the surface by earth-worms. Hence, do not bury, but burn the carcasses of animals that have died of infectious diseases.

The best farm labor is always the cheapest. Wages and quantity of work are not all; quality of work, abuse and neglect of animals, breaking of implements, and waste of many things make the cheap laborer dear.

Mr. Paddock, in Hoard's Dairyman, says that when he has sufficient cream gathered for churning, he heats it to nearly blood heat, stirring is occasionally while heating, so as to mix it thoroughly; then he sets it away to cool and lets it stand until the next day; then he warms it to about 65 degrees and churns.

It should not be forgotten that flesh and fat contain 75 per cent. of water, and consequently fattening animals should be well supplied with water of a moderate temperature, not less than 55 or 60 degrees. It hastens the fattening of stall-fed beasts to give sufficient meal stirred in the water to make a thin gruel.—Henry Stewart.

In my experience in breeding swine, says the New York breeder, I find it best to select good, clean-cut sows, with plenty of bone and constitution, better a little course in bone than too fine bred, and breed them to finely bred Berkshire, Essex or Yorkshire boars: The pig will combine the fineness of the boar with the constitution of the sows.

One farmer is strong in one direction, another is strong where the first one is weak. So, when they put their heads together in the give-and-take process, it is easy to see that both must be improved. It is a dull farmer who cannot be benefitted by attending farmers' institutes. The general purpose farmer is the successful one especially where small capital is invested; and to be able to farm all crops combined with stock of various kinds, will bring in money at all seasons of the year and produce happier and better results than any other vocation that is to be found in this life, less worry, more contentment, and better results in the end.

Question About Ensilage.

Some facts about ensilage have passed beyond all question. That food, especially green, fodder corn, can be put up in this manner and make a succulent and nutritious diet for stock in Winter, nobody need now doubt. Whether it will pay in any given case must depend upon its circumstances. The growing belief is that the value of this mode of providing Winter feed has been under rather than over-estimated, and that it will pay many who now ridicule it. As for the methods of ensilaging, one simple fact will save much questioning. The principle involved is exactly the same as that used by the housewife in canning fruit, with this addition that ensilage being put up in large quantities furnishes somewhat to help protect it from freezing and injury in cold weather.

Small Farms.

Practical Farmer: There is no reason why a small farm should not be made to pay as well as a large one. It is not the "acres," but the way they are "tilled." More system is needed on the farm. The different fields and pastures should not be laid out without reference to system, the lay of the land as regards drainage; etc. We have often heard these remarks, "What a nice little farm!" "I wouldn't mind owning such a farm!" Now it is not at all impossible, or even impracticable to make the majority of little farms attractive and desirable; and it is to be hoped that the average farmer will look more to the appearance of his place, and see that it is in no way inferior to his neighbors'. The subject of improving and diversifying our country homes, is just as important as to have a "half-million dollar court-house" in which to pay our taxes.

Partial Soiling of Cows.

Many farmers cannot quite make up their minds to wholly abandon the pasture system. They will have much in the increased productiveness of their cows by soiling them, but it will involve some additional labor. They can also keep more cows on a few acres, thus making more manure, and bringing their land to a higher state of fertility. Some of these good results can be accomplished by partial soiling, having a pasture lot for cows to run in, and supplementing its deficiencies by growing near it fields of clover, Spring grain, and fodder corn, to be cut and thrown over the fence into the pasture lot. This is the compromise measure that in most cases will soon lead to full soiling at least for cows. It is beginners in soiling who will mostly try this, and they cannot make the land for soiling crops too rich. It costs considerable to cut and carry off a green crop, and unless it is a large one, it probably will not pay.

Barbed Wire.

It is rather late in the day, but the discovery has now been made that all American patents on barbed wire are worthless. The device was patented in France in 1865, some years before a patent was issued in this country. The United States Supreme Court has declared as the law of this country that either a foreign patent or the description of a patented article in a foreign journal are bars against patenting it in the United States. If a patent has been granted either of these will make it void, though it be shown that the American patentee knew nothing of the facts. The holders of various barbed wire patents have recovered considerable money from farmers and others as royalties. Where this has been paid under protest it may probably now be sued for and recovered. At all events, no more money should be paid as royalty on barbed wire. This exaction has borne most heavily on Western farmers, who have been mainly dependent on barbed wire as their fencing material. Barbed wire for some purposes is valuable to farmers everywhere, and as now it will be much cheaper, it will be more extensively used than it has been.

The Farmer of the Future.

The successful farmer of the future must be well grounded in the general and technical knowledge of his business. He must look closely and more carefully into the internal working of his farm than was necessary in former times. He must watch keenly every movement of the foreign producer, study the conditions and prospects of the markets, and be prepared to produce such commodities as are likely to bring him the best return. He must not tie himself to the growing of certain crops and the rearing of certain stock merely because his father did so, or because he himself found them profitable in times gone by. He must cultivate an "open mind," be ready and willing to avail himself of any new system or modification of practice calculated to benefit him, being careful, of course, not to attempt upon a larger scale practices that are risky, or that have not been proven by actual test. He must not be above giving his attention to little points of detail, or to tiny driblets of income, for in agriculture the "day of small things" has assuredly come. Method, precision, industry, forethought, economy, sound and ready judgment and intelligence—these are the elements of successful business. They are as essential to the farmer of to-day as to the busiest business man in the greatest commercial center.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Sand of Dazzling Whiteness.

Some sixty miles due north of El Paso lies a formation of almost pure gypsum, forming ranges of low, undulating hills, without a speck of a mixture, and of a dazzling whiteness. The gypsum occurs in the shape of a fine sand, and the district is some twenty-five miles long by six or seven miles wide. The rays of the sun are so strongly reflected from a brilliant surface that traveling across the country is almost impossible in summer on account of the blinding glare and the great heat generated. This gypsum range is locally known as the White Sands, and the White Oaks railroad skirts the eastern border. In one locality on the White Sands there is a natural basin like depression, into which a number of neighboring gullies and valleys lead and concentrate, and this basin has, for the first time within the memory of man, been filled by rain, and over 300 acres have been covered several feet deep and transformed into a lake. As the bottom of this lake consists of the purest gypsum, which has been by the water cemented into a sold snow white mass, it cannot drain off except by the slow process of evaporation, and when the mid-day sun shines with its full force upon the landscape, the effect of the reflection is dazzling and magnificent beyond description. There is, probably, no similar scenery anywhere in America.—El Paso Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Heart in the Stomach.

Youth's Companion.

The ill nature of many men will vanish in the presence of their favorite dishes on the dinner table, a fact that has given rise to the old saying that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach.

The writer once boarded with an irritable elderly man who gave laughable illustrations of the truth in adage. When things had gone wrong with the choleric old gentleman his wife would slyly say to her daughter, who assisted in the cooking:

"We'd better have apple dumplin's to-day, Sarah, your pa is so out of speerits. I intended having a pot-pie, but he don't care much for that, and you know how fond he is of dumplin's."

"When the "dumplin's" appeared the old gentleman's wrath would speedily vanish.

Sometimes the wise old lady would scatter an impending storm and keep it for breakfast by appearing with a plate of doughnuts or pie, saying:

"Here, pa, you'd better eat this; nobody else wants it, and it's just sittin' round in the way."

An Archæologist's Find.

New York Star.

Prof. Edward Froissard, the archæologist, is fond of devoting his leisure time in hunting up curios to add to his already large collection. He told me recently of his latest find. While he was spending a few weeks at a quiet Long Island village lately, the children of the house brought home some hickory nuts. They had nothing with which to crack them, so the hostess, their mother, handed them something which she called "that old chunk of brass," and they proceeded to use it. Something about the "chunk of brass" caught the watchful eye of Froissard, and he made a grab for it. "Would you believe it?" he said to me. "When I rubbed off the dirt, I discovered it to be a genuine bronze bust of Washington—a perfect antique, and an original not described in any book. I learned that my hostess' grandfather had been a prosperous New York shipowner in the early part of the century, and that the bust had been presented to him by one of his captains, who had brought it from France in 1820. Three generations of Long Island urchins had cracked nuts with the priceless relic."

AN INDIAN'S WRATH.

Several years ago my husband built and conducted a hotel for the accommodation of the miners and teamsters at the terminal point of one of our California railroads. Like many other small towns in the northern portion of the State, it boasted of an Indian rancherie, or settlement, within its environments, the half-civilized inhabitants of which played a more or less important part in its local history. With few exceptions they were a moderately peaceful, industrious community—the men spending their time in hunting and fishing, and the women doing the drudgery, such as procuring fuel for their fires, the laundry work of their white neighbors, etc. Every now and then, however, the wild nature of the red men, either through the medium of fire-water or intense passion, would become aroused, and at such times crimes of varying degrees of enormity were almost certain to be the result.

We had one child, a bright little fellow about two years old, who by reason of his cute, babyish antics, had become a great favorite with the patrons of the hotel; and they, as a token of their affection, presented him on his second birthday with a diminutive iron bank, in which, each of the miners and teamsters had dropped a silver dollar. As day after day came and went, dollar after dollar found its way into the little treasure box, till it became so heavy that baby could no longer lift it, and I placed it for safe-keeping upon a bracket in my dressing-room.

One evening, after old Julie, the Indian woman who did our laundrying once a week, had performed her usual hard day's washing, it occurred to me that I had done a very careless thing in permitting her to go into my room for the soiled clothes, and, knowing the propensity of her race to steal, I at once proceeded to ascertain whether anything was missing. Baby's bank was gone! Old Julia had stolen it.

It was too late to do anything that day, but early the next morning we had their hut searched, with the result that fragments of the broken bank were found, but no money. They were bountifully supplied with provisions, however, and inquiry at one of the stores elicited the fact that a large bill of goods such as had found had been purchased there the evening before by old Julia and her spouse. The woman was accordingly arrested, and, after being convicted, was sent to the county jail, in the adjoining town for a term of three months.

Many predicted that this would not be the end of the affair, as the woman's husband was a dangerous character, and might seek to avenge his wife's imprisonment; but neither my husband nor myself shared their fears, and the matter was forgotten after a day or two.

One day, about a fortnight after Julia's conviction, I was assisting the dining-room girls to prepare the table for luncheon, when suddenly the sound of a low, guttural, threatening voice at the window drew my attention. Looking up, startled and frightened, I beheld a savage, hideous-looking Indian glaring in at me. It was Indian Jack, old Julia's husband.

Seeing my frightened look, he advanced still closer, put his swarthy face in at the open window, and, shaking his fist at me, grunted out, "You no give me back my Julia, me kill you pretty soon?"

I had him driven off at once, and as I watched him slowly making his way back to the rancherie on the river bank half a mile to the rear of our house, and saw his threatening, angry gestures, I confess I was badly frightened. This feeling soon wore off, however, and as my husband was inclined to think it no more than a game of bluff, his visit was quite forgotten by the time lunceon was over.

That afternoon the table-girls went out in the woods for ferns; the cook also was out, and as my husband was seldom about the house except at meals, I was for the time being alone. To while away the time I picked up a paper, and was just becoming interested in some article, when I was startled by a loud, frightened scream from my little boy who way playing in the back yard. Springing up I run to the window, just in time to see Indian Jack snatch up my child in his arms, and hasten away in the chaparrel. A terrible, frightful thought instantly flashed through my mind. He was going to avenge the incarceration of his wife by taking the life of my poor innocent boy!

There was no help at hand; if he was saved, I alone must save him, and with a desperate hope spurring me on, I bound out of the door in frantic, determined pursuit.

Believing his movements had been unobserved the Indian had not made as hurried flight as he might have done, and before half the distance to the rancherie had been traveled, I was close behind him.

"Bring back my boy!" cried I in frantic tones. "Kill me if you will, but spare my child!"

An angry grunt was his only reply upon finding me in pursuit, and placing his hand over the baby's mouth to still his piteous cries, he quickened his pace so as to keep out of my way:

Still I ran on, begging in sobbing tones for my child, but if it had any effect at all upon the fiendish brute, it was to encourage him in his horrid purpose, for now and then he would pause, look back with an exultant, develish expression upon his hideous face, and then swagger off again with a low, gloating chuckle that pierced my heart like a dagger.

In this manner the race was kept up until his hut was reached, when he bounded inside, closed the door with a bang, and then locked it. In vain I pounded upon the door, begged, wept, and pleaded; the brute was as immovable as a rock, and I could hear my poor baby pleading in plaintive, wailing accents for "mamma, mamma, mamma!"

The sound of my lamentations attracted the attention of a score of half-naked, sleepy-looking Indians, who rushed pell-mell from their cabins to learn the cause of the unusual commotion, and to them I renewed my pleading. "No sabe!" was all that I could get out of them, and I returned to the door again knowing that Jack could at least understand me.

He gave me no answer, however, contenting himself with holding an animated confab in his own dialect with his comrades on the outside. What they were talking about of course I could not tell, but I was not to be kept long in ignorance; for I was suddenl yseized, dragged to an adjoining hut, and rudely thrust inside. With the sound of the key turning in the lock as I was made a prisoner, and the feeble wail of my child ringing in my ears, I fainted,—the intensity of my mental anguish was more than I could endure.

How long I lay thus I do not know, but when I awoke to consciousness all was silent. I listened, but I could not hear my child's plaintive cry in the adjoining hut. A horrible thought flashed into my mind: Had the demon Jack killed him?

My distracted mind had not yet found the answer when the sound of my door being unlocked was heard, and the next moment Jack entered my presence, locking the door after him. I rushed toward him, and frantically grasped his arm. "My boy! Where is he? What have you done with him?"

The Indian shook me rudely away. "Ugh!" grunted he. "Boy no good! Too much yah! yah! all time,—d—— boy!"

I would not be thus put off, and still assailed him with my entreaties. He endured it with stolid indifference for several moments, and then, as if prompted by an uncontrollable impulse, took one hasty stride toward me and rudely clutched my arm. "You tell jail man let my Julia come back!" demanded he savagely.

I told him I would do all I could, but that it was now beyond my power to effect her release.

"You tell Injun lie!" cried he. Jail man let her go, you tell him to!"

I again told him as I had before, that I was powerless to do as he asked.

The answer seemed to goad him on to greater fury; his grip tightened upon my arm; his dark eyes emitted a fiendish, wicked glitter, and, drawing from his belt a keen-edged dirk, he leaned over me and hissed. "You lie, and Jack kill you!"

I saw the gleaming blade ascend and hang trembling above me, and then, with a loud, piercing, despairing shriek, I lost consciousness.

When I opened my eyes, I found my husband bending over me, and a group of familiar faces all around me, whom I at once recognized as the regular patrons of the hotel.

The flight of Indian Jack and my frantic pursuit had been observed by some men working in a slaughter-house near the rancherie, and, fearing something was wrong, they had notified my husband, who, with several miners, had rushed to my relief. My baby-boy was found fast asleep in Jacob's cabin, which accounted for my not hearing him when I recovered from my swoon some time before.

As for Jack, after being mauled to the heart's content of the indignant miners, he was given notice to leave the community at once, which he did, making a bee-line for the foothills lying beneath Mount Shasta.

The noble-hearted miners and teamsters, not satisfied with ridding the neighborhood of Indian Jack, donated a larger and stronger bank to my boy, and showed no relaxation in their generosity until it was even heavier than the one old Julia stole.

As for myself—well, I am no longer a resident of that part of the State, and though I were to live a thousand years, I should never forget the horrors of that eventful day, or how nearly I became the victim of an Indian's wrath.—Mrs. A. S. Burroughs, in Overland Monthly.

A Story of Tim Campbell.

Another time, when Tim was civil justice, a shyster lawyer didn,t know much about his clients nor their case. This shyster, Lang by name, was anxious for a postponement, but he didn't know how to work it. Some one entered the room, and whispering to him, said: "Larry, Chief Justice —— of the Supreme court is dead." "Is that so," says Larry: "I'll announce it to the old man and maybe he'll adjourn the court." So he arose and in a deeply solemn and sepulchral tone announced the death of Judge —— of the Supreme court of the United States. "Is that straight," said the Hon. Tim to Larry's informant, who was then near him. Learning that it was, his honor was deeply affected. His emotion nearly overcame him. Rising he stood with bowed head and several tears trickled down his cheeks. Mastering his emotion and with bowed head, he said: "I have just heard with feelings of the deepest emotion that one of us has passed away and in respect to his memory the court is now adjourned."—Baltimore American.

A Clerical Error.

In a country church the curate had to give out two notices, the first of which was about baptisms, and the latter had to do with a new hymn book. Owing to an accident he inverted the order and gave out as follows: I am requested to give notice that the new hymn books will be used for the first time in this church on Sunday next, and I am also requested to call attention to the delay which often takes place in bringing children to be baptized; they should be brought on the earliest day possible. This is particularly pressed on mothers who have young babies. And for the information of those who have none," added the rector, in gentle, kindly tones, and who being deaf had not heard what had been previously said "for the information of those who have none I may state that if wished they can be obtained on application in the vestry immediately after the service to-day. Limp ones 1 shilling each; with stiff backs 2 shillings."—London Figaro.

AN OPEN QUESTION.

Is Harrison a Descendant of Pocahontas.

It is popularly believed that President Harrison is descended from Pocahontas and from the Parliamentary soldier and regicide General Thomas Harrison, who was executed in 1660.

Pocahontas, daughter of Powhatan, manifested a friendliness for the early white settlers of Virginia when she was but a girl. The story of how she saved the life of Captain John Smith, who had been captured and condemned to death by her father—how she, on several occasions, made known to the settlers their danger when about to be attacked—is well known to all acquaited with the early history of America. Her subsequent marriage with John Rolfe, an Englishman—her removal to England were a son was born, from whom numerous wealthy families of Virginia claim descent—is the basis of the opinion that President Harrison is one of her descendants.

Whether this be true or not it is, however, well-known that President Harrison is a descendant of a noted family, distinguished alike in peace and war. The name of Harrison is already indelibly written upon the pages of American history, for General Wm. Henry Harrison—the ninth President of the United States—was the grandfather of Gen. Ben. Harrison.

The election of another memeber of the Harrison family is but another proof of the prevailing disposition of the public to return to healthy administration of public affairs so characteristic of the earlier years of govenment. A similar desire has been manifested for a revival of early manners and customs in many various ways, of which mention in particular can be made of the prevailing demand for those old time preparations which were so successfully employed in the prevention and cure of the ills and ailments which frequented the early log-cabin homes.

After much inquiry and research a noted manufacturer has procured the original methods used in their preparation and again under the name of Warner's Log Cabin Remedies, the public is possessed of those well-known preparations for the cure of coughs colds, consumption in its early stages, blood disorders, catarrh, dyspepsia, debility, and other common disorders.

Nothwithstanding the amount of time, attention and expense which the manufacture of Warner's Safe Cure demands—its well-known reputation as the only remedy for the prevention and cure of kidney diseases being world wide—the manufacturer is resolved to push the merit of Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla to the front because of its splendid blood purifying properties and great value as a household remedy and spring-time system renovator.

Pocahontas, during her life-long friendship for the white settlers of Virginia, besides her many acts of kindness, is said to have contributed much valuable information to the log cabin home concerning the successful methods employed by the Indians in the treatment of disease and it matters little whether the alleged relationship between herself and the President be true or not for the name of Pocahontas is already immortal.

THE MOONLIGHT RIDE

Rev. Dr. Talmage Strongly Impressed with the Intensity of Genuine Church Affection.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 17.—At the tabernacle this morning, the Rev T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., expounded the seventh chapter of Ecclesiastes. The subject of Dr. Talmage's Sermon was "The Moonlight Ride," and the text Nehemiah ii., 15: "Then I went up in the night by the brook, and viewed the hall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned." He said:

A dead city is more suggestive than a living city—past Rome than present Rome—ruins than newly frescoed cathedral. But the best time to visit a ruin is by moonlight. The Coliseum is far more fascinating to the traveller after sundown than before. You may stand by daylight amid the monastic ruins of Melrose abbey, and study shafted oriel, and rosetted stone and mullion, but they throw their strongest witchery by moonlight. Some of you remember what the enchanter of Scotland said in the "Lay of the Last Minstrel:"

"Wouldst thou view fair Melrose aright, Go visit it by the pale moonlight."

Washington Irving describes the Andalusian moonlight upon the Alhambra ruins as amounting to an enchantment. My text presents you Jerusalem in ruins. The tower down. The gates down. The walls down. Everything down. Nehemiah on horseback, by moonlight looking upon the ruins. While he rides there are some friends on foot going with him, for they do not want the many horses to disturb the suspicions of the people. These people do not know the secret of Nehemiah's heart, but they are going as a sort of body-guard. I hear the clicking hoofs of the horse on which Nehemiah rides, as he guides it this way and that, winding through that gate, amid the debris of once great Jerusalem. Now the horse comes to a dead halt at the tumbled masonry where he can not pass. Now he shies off at the charred timbers. Now he comes along where the water under the moonlight flashes from the mouth of the brazen dragon after which the gate was named. Heavy hearted Nehemiah! Riding in and out, now by his old home desolated, now by the defaced temple, now amid the scars of the city that had gone down under battering ram and conflagration. The escorting party knows not what Nehemiah means. Is he getting crazy? Have his own personal sorrows, added to the sorrows of the nation, unbalanced his intellect? Still the midnight exploration goes on. Nehemiah on horseback rides through the fish gate, by the tower of the furnaces, by the king's pool, by the dragon well, in and out, in and out, until the midnight ride is completed, and Nehemiah dismounts from his horse, and to the amazed and confounded and incredulous body guard declares the dead secret of his heart when he says: "Come, now let us build Jerusalem." "What, Nehemiah, have you any money?" "No." "Have you any kingly authority?" "No." "Have you any eloquence?" "No." Yet that midnight moonlight ride of Nehemiah resulted in the glorious rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem. The people knew not how the thing was to be done, but with great enthusiasm they cried out, "Let us rise up now and build the city," Some people laughed and said it could not be done. Some people were infuriate and offered physical violence, saying the thing should not be done. But the workmen went right on, standing on the wall, trowel in one hand, sword in the other, until the work was gloriously completed. At that very time, in Greece, Xenophon was writing a history, and Plato was making philosophy, and Demosthenes was rattling his rhetorical thunder, but all of them together did not do so much for the world as this midnight moonlight ride of praying, courageous, homesick, close-mouthed Nehemiah.

My subject first impresses me with the idea what an intense thing is church affection. Seize the bridle of that horse and stop Nehemiah. Why are you risking your life here in the night? Your horse will stumble over these ruins and fall on you. Stop this useless exposure of your life. No; Nehemiah will not stop. He at last tells us the whole story. He lets us know he was an exile in a far distant land, and he was a servant, a cup-bearer in the palace of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and one day, while he was handing the cup of wine to the king, the king said to him, "What is the matter with you? You are not sick. I know you must have some great trouble. What is the matter with you? Then he told the king how that beloved Jerusalem was broken down; now that his father's tomb had been desecrated; now that the temple had been dishonored and defaced; how that the walls were scattered and broken. "Well," said says King Artaxerxes, "what do you want?" "Well," said the cup-bearer, Nehemiah, "I want to go home. I want to fix up the grave of my father. I want ro restore the beauty of the temple. I want to rebuild the masonry of the city wall. Besides, I want passports so that I will not be hindered in my journey. And, besides that," as you will find in the context' "I want an order on the man who keeps your forest for just so much timber as I may need for the rebuilding of the city." "How long shall you be gone?" said the king. The time of absence is arranged. In hot haste this seeming adventurer comes to Jerusalem, and in my text we find him on horseback, in the midnight, riding around the ruins. It is through the spectacles of this scene that we discover the ardent attachment of Nehemiah for sacred Jerusalem, which in all ages has been the type of the church of God, our Jerusalem, which we love just as much as Nehemiah loved his Jerusalem. The fact is that you love the Church of God so much that there is no spot on earth so sacred, unless it is your own fireside. The church has been to you so much comfort and illumination that there is nothing that makes you so irate as have it talked against. If there have been times when you have been carried into captivity by sickness, you longed for the church, our holy Jerusalem, just as much as Nehemiah longed for his Jerusalem, and the first day you came out you came to the house of the Lord. When the temple was in ruins as ours was years ago, like Nehemiah you walked around and looked at it, and in the moonlight you stood listening if you could not hear the voice of the dead organ, the psalm of the expired Sabbaths. What Jerusalem was to Nehemiah the church of God is to you. Skeptics and infidels may scoff at the church as an obsolete affair, as a relic of the dark ages, as a convention of goody-goody people, but all the impression they have made on your mind against the church of God is absolutely nothing. You would make more sacrifices for it to-day than for any other institution, and if it were needful you would die in its defense. You can take the words of the kingly old poet as he said: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." You understand in your own experience the pathos, the homesickness, the courage, the holy enthusiasm of Nehemiah in his midnight, moonlight ride around the ruins of his beloved Jerusalem.

Again, my text impresses me with the fact that before reconstruction there must be an exploration of ruins. Why was not Nehemiah asleep under the covers? Why was not his horse stabled in the midnight? Let the police of the city arrest this midnight rider out on a reconnoiter. Nehemiah must see the ruins. Nehemiah in the preliminary exploration: in this gate, out that gate—east, west, north, south—all through the ruins. The ruins must be explored before the work of reconstruction can begin. The reason that so many people in this day, apparently converted, do not stay converted is because they did not first explore the ruins of their own heart. The reason that there are so many professed Christians who in this day lie and forge and steal and commit adultery and go to the penitentiary is because they first do not learn the ruin of their own heart. They have not found out that "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." They had an idea that they were almost right, and they built religion as a sort of extension, as an ornamental cupola. There was a superstructure of religion built on a substratum of unrepented sin. The trouble with a good deal of modern theology is that instead of building on the right foundation it builds on the debris of an unregenerated nature. They attempt to rebuild Jerusalem before, in the midnight of conviction, they have seen the ghastliness of the ruin. They have such a poor foundation for their religion that the first northeast storm of temptation blows them down. I have no faith in a man's conversion if he is not converted in the old-fashioned way—John Bunyan's way, John Wesley's way, John Calvin's way, Paul's way, Christ's way, God's way. A dentist once said to me: "Does that hurt?" Said I: "Of course it hurts. It is in your business as in my profession. We have to hurt before we can help." You will never understand redemption until you understand ruin. A man tells me that some one is a member of the church. It makes no impression on my mind at all. I simply want to know whether he was converted in the old-fashioned way or whether he was converted in the new-fashioned way. If he was converted in the old-fashioned way he will stand. If he was converted in the new-fashioned way he will not stand. That is all there is about it. A man comes to me to talk about religion. The first question I ask him is: "Do you feel yourself to be a sinner?"

If he says: "Well, I—yes," the hesitancy makes me feel that that man wants a ride on Nehemiah's horse by midnight through the ruins—in by the gate of his affections, out by the gate of his will; and before he has got through with that midnight ride will drop the reins on the horse's neck, and will take his right hand and smite on his heart and say: "God be merciful to me a sinner;" and before he has stabled his horse he will take his feet out of the stirrups, and he will slide down on the ground, and he will kneel, crying, "Have mercy on me, O God, according to thy loving kindness, according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies; blot out my transgressions, for I acknowledge my transgressions and my sins are ever before thee." Ah, my friends, you see this is not a complimentary gospel. That is what makes people so mad. It comes to a man of a million dollars and impenitent in his sins and says, "You're a pauper." It comes to a woman of fairest cheek, who has never repented, and says: "You're a sinner." It comes to a man priding himself on his independence and says: "You're bound hand and foot by the devil." It comes to our entire race and says: "You're a ruin, a ghastly ruin, an illimitable ruin." Satan sometimes says to me, "Why do you preach that truth? Why don't you preach a gospel with no repentance in it? Why don't you flatter men's hearts so that you make them feel all right? Why don't you preach a humanitarian gospel with no repentance in it, saying nothing about the ruin, talking all the time about redemption?" I say, "Get thee behind me, Satan." I would rather lead five souls the right way than 20,000 the wrong way. The redemption of the gospel is a perfect farce if there is no ruin. "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." "If any one, though he be an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel than this," says the apostle, "let him be accursed." There must be the midnight ride over the ruins before Jerusalem can be built. There must be the clicking of the hoofs before there can be the ringing of the trowels.

Again. My subject gives me a specimen of busy and triumphant sadness. If there was any man in the world who had a right to mope and give up everything as lost it was Nehemiah. You say "He was a cub-bearer in the palace of Shushan, and it was a grand place." so it was. The hall of that palace was 200 feet square, and the roof hovered over thirty-six marble pillars, each pillar, 60 feet high; and the intense blue of the sky, and the deep green of the forest foliage, and the white of the driven snow, all hung trembling in the upholstery. But, my friends, you know very well that fine architecture will not put down homesickness. Yet Nehemiah did not give up. Then, when you see him going among these desolated streets and by these dismantled towers, and by the torn-up grave of his father, you would suppose that he would have dismounted from his horse and gone to his room and said: "Woe is me! My father's grave is torn up. The temple is dishonored. The walls are broken down. I have no money with which to rebuild. I wish I had never been born. I wish I were dead." Not so says Nehemiah. Although he had a grief so intense that it excited the commentary of his king, yet that penniless, expatriated Nehemiah rouses himself up to rebuild the city. He gets his permission of absence. He gets his passports. He hastens away to Jerusalem. By night on horse-back he rides through the ruins. He overcomes the most ferocious opposition. He arouses the piety and patriotism of the people, and in less than two months, namely, in fifty-two days, Jerusalem was rebuilt. That's what I call busy and triumphant sadness.

My friends, the whole temptation is with you when you have trouble to do just the opposite to the behavior of Nehemiah, and that is to give up. You say, "I have lost my child and can never smile again, "I have lost my property and I never can repay my fortunes." You say, again for a new life." If Satan can make you form that resolution, and make you keep it, he has ruined you. Trouble is not sent to crush you, but to arouse you to animate you, to propel you. The blacksmith does not thrust the iron into the forge, and then blow away with the bellows, and then bring the hot iron out on the anvil and beat with stroke after stroke to ruin the iron, but to prepare it for a better use. Oh, that the Lord God of Nehemiah would rouse up all broken-hearted people to rebuild. Whipped, betrayed, shipwrecked, imprisoned Paul went right on. The Italian martyr Algerius sits in his dungeon writing a letter, and he dates it "From the delectable orchard of the Leonine prison." That is what I call triumphant sadness. I knew a mother who buried her baby on Friday and on Sabbath appeared in the house of God and said: "Give me a class. I have no child now left me, and I would like to have a class of little children. Give me a class off the back street." That, I say, is beautiful. That is triumphant sadness. At 3 o'clock this afternoon, in a beautiful parlor in Philadelphia—a parlor pictured and statuetted—there will be from ten to twenty destitute children of the street. It has been so every Sabbath afternoon at 3 o'clock for many years. Those destitute children receive religious instruction, concluding with cakes and sweets. How do I know that that has been going on for many years? I know it in this way:

That was the first home in Philadelphia where I was called to comfort. They had come from Long Branch. The father and mother almost idolized the boy, and the sob and shriek of that father and mother as they hung over the coffin resound in my ears to-day. There seemed to be no use of praying, for when I knelt down to pray the sobbing drowned out all the prayer. But the Lord comforted that sorrow. They did not forget the boy. If you go on the sacred winter afternoon into Laurel Hill you would find a monument with the word "Walter" inscribed upon it, and a wreath of fresh flowers around the name. I think there has not been an hour when that was, the year, winter or summer when there was not a wreath of fresh flowers around Walter's name. But the Christian mother who sends those flowers there, having no child left, Sabbath afternoons mothers ten or twenty of the lost ones of the street. That is beautiful. That is what I call busy and triumphant sadness. I knew a mother who lost her child and she said: "Give me a class," and she had one. [illegible] Give up? Who is going to give up? If you are going up to God, who is going to give up with poverty? A little child was found holding her dead mother's hand, and said: "Oh, I do wish God would send me more light for poor folks." My dear, God will be your light, God will be your shelter, God will be your home. Give up? Who is going to give up? If you are going to give up when you are on the bosom of God he can have all his troubles healed? Give up! Never think of giving up. Are you borne down with poverty? A little child was found holding her dead mother's hand, and said: "Oh, I do wish God would send me more light for poor folks." My dear, God will be your light, God will be your shelter, God will be your home. I have no tears to give to the present. Think of that old sexton said: [illegible] to hear this he asked the sexton, as he put so much care on the little graves in the larger graves—and the old sexton said: "Sir, you know the scripture 'of such is the kingdom of heaven,' and I think the Saviour is pleased when he sees so much white clover growing around these little graves." But when the minister pressed the old sexton for a more satisfactory answer, the old sexton said: "Sir, about these larger graves, I don't know who are the Lord's saints and who are not; but you know, sir, it is clean different with the bairns." Oh, if you have had that keen, tender, indescribable sorrow that comes from the loss of a child, do not give up. The old sexton was right. It is all well with the bairns. Or, if you have sinned, if you have sinned grievously—sinned until you have been cast out by the church, sinned until you have been cast out by society—do not give up. Perhaps there may be in this house one that could truthfully utter the lamentation of another:

"Once I was pure as the snow, but I fell—
Fell like a snowflake, from heaven to hell—
Fell, to be trampled as filth in the street—
Fell, to be scoffed at, spit on, and beat;
Praying, cursing, wishing to die,
Selling my soul to whoever would buy,
Dealing in shame for a morsel of bread,
Hating the living and fearing the dead."

Do not give up. One like unto the son of God comes to you to-day, saying. "Go and sin no more," while he cries out to your assailants, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone at her." Oh, there is no reason why any man in this house, by reason of any trouble or sin, should give up. Are you a foreigner, and in a strange land? Nehemiah was an exile. Are you penniless? Nehemiah was poor. Are you homesick? Nehemiah was homesick. Are you broken-hearted? Nehemiah was broken-hearted. But just see him in the text, riding along the sacrilege graved of his father, and by the dragon well, And through the fish gate, and by the king's pool, in and out, in and out, the moonlight falling on the broken masonry, which throws a long shadow at which the horse shies, and at the same time the moonlight kindling up the features of this man till you see not only the mark of sad reminiscence; but the courage, the hope, the enthusiasm of a man who knows that Jerusalem will be rebuilded. I pick you up to-day out of your sins and out of your sorrow, and I put you against the warm heart of Christ. "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

A Learned Shoemaker.

Pall Mall Gazette.

Mr. John Mackintoch, author of "The History of Civilization in Scotland," who will write the volume "Scotland," in the "Story of National Series," is in many respects a remarkable man. He was sent to work on a farm in his native county of Banff at ten years of age, and was subsequently apprenticed to shoemaking, at which trade he worked in various parts of Scotland for fourteen years. In 1869 he opened a small stationery shop in Aberdeen, "and there, on the shop counter," he once wrote, "amid all the noise and bustle of a stirring thoroughfare, three volumes of my history were written and the proof sheets corrected and revised; all being done while customers were coming in and out and constantly interrupting me."

Mr. Mackintoch's shop is passed daily by professors on their way to the University, and at one time several of them were in the habit of calling occasionally and having a chat with the literary shoemaker. He was accorded the privilege, too, of using the University library. His history consists of four portly volumes, the last and best dealing with the moral and material advancement of the country. Mr. Mckintosh has been in the habit all his life of rising before four A. M. He says he finds the early morning hours the best for literary work.

The Horse-hair "Snake.

The "horse-hair" snake is a common source of error. The creature that is usually called by that name originates and has a life-history as follows: A small flesh-colored mite is in water. It changes to a purplish lead color and comes to the top of the water, where it sports for a time, and when looking across water of a still evening, especially if looking toward the setting sun, one can see masses of these tiny creatures that look like smoke in the water. When they reach this stage of development they leave the water and get out on the leaves and grass. Here, as opportunity offers, they attach themselves to the feet of large insects—especially of grasshoppers, katydids, etc. The legs of these insects being hollow, they crawl up them, where they grow till they fill the legs and sometimes the cavities of the bodies of these large insects. This accounts for the fat, clumsy condition of many of these insects. After a rain, in which the insects are drowned, the full-fledged "horse-hair snakes" come forth to delight the small boy, and to interest the student of nature, after which they lay eggs in the water, if it does not dry up too soon, and curl around them for a time, and about the eggs hatch into the little flesh-colored mites first described, the "snakes" die.

The Power of Dinner.

A distinguished lawyer came out of his private office a few days ago and brusquely told a reporter that he did not care to discuss the private affairs of his clients. He said it was none of the public's business, and then he bounced back into his private office and slammed the door. It was important that the reporter should get the news, and so, on the strength of past experience, he called at the lawyer's home that night. The lawyer had just finished his dinner, and he came into his parlor, his face beaming with geniality and a prime cigar in his mouth. He shook the reporter's hand and then talked to him for a half hour and gave him more information than he asked for. A slight knowledge of human nature is sometimes very useful.—New York Sun.

A Portrait of Washington.

The original portrait of Washington (right side of the face) by Gilbert Stuart, long thought to have been destroyed by the artist, seems to have been recognized in the hands of Dr. W. F. Channing, of California, who inherited it from his distinguished father, Rev. William Ellery Channing, who obtained it from his uncle, Col. Gibbs.—Science.

Senator Edmunds, being troubled with a cold on his lungs, became somewhat alarmed, and had gone to Georgia, hoping that a warmer climate will relieve him of his trouble.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

Windom has decided to exist without saloons.

Doud Sons & Co.'s barrel factory at Winona burned. Loss. $8,000; insurance $2,500.

Henderson is experiencing a boom, several new business enterprises having located there recently.

The board of education at Winona has decided to dispense with the usual spring vacation in the public schools.

The grist mill belonging to H. Jay Stedman at Sauk Center was destroyed by fire. Loss, $7,500; insurance, $3,000.

James H. Griffin, of Stillwater, attempted to extract a cartridge from a Winchester rifle, when it exploded and the powder entered his face and destroyed his right eye.

The Herald sizes up the condition of affairs at Eldora as follows: Coal is a drug in the market, mud is up a little, influenza booms, and snuffles are on the rampage.

Nick Iten, a farmer living near Clear Lake, reports that while returning from St. Cloud he was attacked by two highwaymen, but finally escaped.

Henry Ellis, a farmer of Jordan township, Fillmore county, attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a razor. The attending physician says there is no possible hope of his recovery. Despondency the cause.

The common council at Faribault has passed a resolution protesting against the passage of any bill by the legislature changing in any manner the boundary line or geographical limits of Faribault.

Rev. N. T. Blakeslee, for several years pastor of the Congregational church at Wabasha, has tendered his resignation as pastor, to take effect April 1. He has had calls from several localities, but has not yet decided where he will locate.

The Swedish Orphans' home at Vasa, has purchased more land for farming purposes. The farm last year contained 123 acres. There are thirty-seven children at the home now.

The wife of Chas H. Fish, of Worthington, eloped a few days ago with a member of an Uncle Tom's Cabin company. Fish employed an officer and found his wife at a hotel in Mankato, and after some talk they made up and returned home together.

An effort will be made to secure the commitment of J. Swanson, the seventeen-year-old boy held in jail at Red Wing, for horse stealing, to the state reform school, in order that he may escape the penitentiary.

Gustave John was arrested at Milbank, Dak., upon instructions from the sheriff of Blue Earth county for forgery. He borrowed $40 from the citizens' National bank, giving as collateral a note for $200 signed by a man known to the bank officials. The note turned out to be a forged one.

The first case of the violation of the license laws under the present system brought to the notice of the city authorities came up at Faribault. F. Dopping was arrested, charged with being the proprietor of a "blind pig." When arraigned he pleaded guilty, and was fined $50 and given thirty days in jail.

Edward Sherman, of Whitewater, 40 years old, and a steady, industrious man, determined to give up tobacco, which he smoked and chewed almost incesantly. Sickness followed, and the physician recomended Sherman to use tobacco again, but sparingly. He wouldn't take the advice, but vowed he'd get the better of the habit if it killed him. His health continued to fail, he became peevish, then morose, and then, a short time ago, violently insane. He has been removed to the Madison asylum.

The meeting of the Farmers' alliance at Austin was very largely attended. The matter of starting a twine factory was fully discussed. Experts stated that a $6,000 flax twine manufactory would produce from 700 to 1,000 pounds daily. It is claimed that our flax straw can be profitably worked up into twine. A committee consisting of J. J. Furlong, C. H. Huntington, Thomas Varco and G. W. Grimshaw, was appointed to investigate the matter fully and report at the next meeting.

A telegram was sent to Congressman Comstock at Washington from Fergus Falls, asking him if the recent order of the interior department suspending the action of President Cleveland's order consolidating Minnesota land offices, reinstating the land office at that place. He replied that it only suspended the president's order in cases where it had not yet been executed. The Fergus office having been closed and the property shipped to St. Cloud, that district does not get any benefit from the late order.

The war against the saloon has been renewed at Black River Falls. Nearly two months ago an agreement was made between the saloon and temperance men by which the former were to close up their business and the latter cease further prosecution. Being satisfied that saloon keeper Rosenberg was not keeping the agreement, the temperance men have opened prosecution against him. He was arrested on 11 charges. Every case possible was brought against him, and it is the purpose of the temperance party to bring such a pressure upon him that he will have to leave the city. Rossel, the proprietor of the Gladstone House, was also arrested for selling without a license.

EXTRAORDINARY LICENSE.

"It seems to me," remarked one of our citizens the other day, "that physicians are allowed extraordinary license in the manner in which they juggle with the welfare of their patients."

"Now here is Dr. —— who was attending Mr.—— up to the time of his death, and if he treated him for one thing he treated him for a dozen different disorders. First the doctor said pneumonia was the trouble; then it was consumption. Then the patient was dosed for heart trouble, and so on until just before he died it was ascertained that disease of the kidney's was the real trouble, and that which had been at first treated as pneumonia, consumption, heart disease, etc., were but the symptoms of the kidney disease.

"But then it was too late.

"This is only one case in a hundred, and I am beginning to lose faith in the doctors altogether. In fact I haven't had any need for their service since I began to keep Warner's Safe Cure in my house, a little over three years ago. Whenever I feel a little out of sorts I take a few doses of it, confident that the source of all disease is in the kidneys, which I know Warner's Safe Cure will keep in good order, and will eradicate any disease that may be lurking there. Had Mr. —— followed a similar course, I have no doubt that he would be alive to-day; but of course all people don't think alike.

"One thing is certain, however, and this is the doctors are allowed a little too much freedom in the way they have of pretending to know that which they really know nothing about. If they don't know what is the real trouble with the patient, they should admit it and not go on and experiment at the cost of the patient's life."

A Wonderful Oak.

There is a remarkable white oak at Salem, N. J. It stands in the burying-ground of the Society of Friends. I can not learn that any one knows its age exactly, but it is said to be at least 200 years old. It is a wonderful tree for its size and symmetry, and for the great number and spread of its branches. It was measured in 1884, and was then 80 feet high; the trunk was 18 feet 4 inches in girth, and the spread of the branches was 360 feet in circumference. The circle covered by them was 114 feet in diameter and its area 10,207 square feet. I am indebted to the courtesy of Mr. H. M. Rumsey for these measurements.

To see this tree is well worthy a summer day's journey from Philadelphia to Salem. Any such tree is a credit to the town in which it stands. Its existence indicates a degree of civilization, an appreciation of the beauty and majesty of noble trees, which is by no means so general in our country as is desirable. In too many places such insensibility and vandalism prevail that no tree has a chance to attain to imposing proportions, the beauty of complete development, or the interest which attaches to great age. I am sorry to say that this fine tree has been seriously injured within the last few years by neglect of the wounds made by the removal of several large branches. The large cut of surfaces are exposed to the weather and to the attack of enemies of all kinds, without any protection whatever. They should have been covered at once with a thick coat of coal-tar or paint. While unshielded they invite the entrance of the spores of various fungi, or toad-stools, which will ultimately destroy the tree. Their mycelium is a perennial growth, and spreads through the sound wood until the entire tree is inoculated with a fatal disease. It is probable that, in a few years, this grand tree will begin to show symptoms of decay.

Writing for the Eye and Ear.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

There is the greatest possible difference between writing for the eye and the ear, and the knowledge of this difference is one of the chief arts of the dramatist. A sentence containing exactly the same words may be written in two ways, both equally correct grammatically, but one effective when spoken, while the other will fall flat. Take as an instance the line:

"A mother's love is the holiest thing on earth."

Now, though this sentiment should gain applause, the arrangements of the sentence would nearly always prevent it. If any attempt were made to emphasize the end of the line the result would be only absurd. But let the words be inverted thus:

"The holiest thing on earth is a mother's love," and the accent can be put where it is wanted on the last two words, and applause would have been assured.

The Mine a Girl Discovered.

Among the mines here is the Sunset, which was discovered two years ago by Miss Minn Ingraham, a stepdaughter of Mr. Meylette. Wandering out from camp one day, she returned with a few specimens which she had picked up. Her mother deemed them worth investigation, and the same afternoon Miss Ingraham went with her father in quest of the place where she had found the ores. Clambering up the side of a cliff with the grace of a mountain gazelle, she stooped down and marked the spot just as the sun was sinking behind the distant ridge of the Elk range. A "discovery stake" had been prepared, was immediately set up on the spot. About fifteen months ago this claim was leased and bonded to the Gillespie Brothers, who at once organized the Sunset Mining company and began working it.—Aspen (Colo.) Chronicle.

Something About Cards.

Cards, which were invented at the close of the fourteenth century, says Notes and Queries, were originally very different from those in use at present. In shape they were square, and instead of suits of spades, clubs, hearts and diamonds, their marks were rabbits, pinks, roses, and flowers of columbine. The figured cards were pretty devised; a queen of rabbits, or of clubs. A rustic-looking man, grotesquely dressed, and sitting in a strange attitude, with a pink beside him, signified the knave of pinks, or of diamonds.

It is amusing to see people with their faces drawn up as if they had swallowed a feather and it was tickling their lungs and they would be happy if they could only sneeze. Now there is no need of "making faces." A bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will draw your face back into a smile.

"Kings are like stars, they rise and set." They have been worshiped because of their meaner men, and are just as sure to call for Salvation Oil.

C. W. Bennett, of Baltimore, Md., a guest of Hurst and Morton jumped or fell from a fifth story window and was instantly killed. Bennett has been drinking heavily and is supposed to have committed suicide, as he insisted on giving the porter his wife's address about an hour before he was found dead. The window of his room was open.

CARRIAGES AND HARNESS.

Something About the Elkhart Carriage and Harness Manufacturing Company.

This Company was organized and commenced business in 1873, and during the fifteen years of its operation it has extended its business and established an enviable reputation throughout the country. The superior quality of the goods which it manufactures, as well as its low prices, have been among the causes of its extended patronage and great success. The carriages, buggies and other vehicles manufactured and sold by this Company are made from the best material and by the best mechanics. The hard woods of Northern Indiana are celebrated as the best in the world for buggies, carriages and wagons, and these, after being perfectly seasoned, are used in all the vehicles made and sold by this Company. The iron, steel, leather, cloth and other material used are the best, and are put together in the best, strongest and most durable style. Now, as to their manner of doing business. They save the expenses with profits of middlemen, for they deal directly with the consumer. All goods ordered are boxed and delivered free on board of cars at Elkhart, Ind. They have but one price for an article, and that as low as such goods can be sold, and much lower than in cases where the middlemen must have a profit. An illustrated descriptive catalogue may be obtained by addressing G. B. Pratt, Sec'y, Elkhart, Indiana.

Now is the Time

To purify your blood and fortify your system against the debilitating effects of spring weather. At no other season is the bitter taste in the mouth more prominent, the breath so offensive, the drowsy dizziness so frequent, or the extreme tired feeling so prevalent. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine to build up the system, purify the blood, cure biliousness and headache, overcome that tired feeling and create a good appetite. Try it this spring.

"I wish to enroll my name as one of those who have derived health from the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For many years I have taken it, especially in the early spring, when I am troubled with dizziness, dullness, unpleasant taste in my mouth in the morning. It removes this bad taste, relieves my headache and makes me feel greatly refreshed. The two bottles I have used this spring have been worth a dollar a dose. I advise all my friends to take it." Death of Justice Stanley Matthews of the Federal Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—Associate Justice Stanley Matthews, of the United States supreme court, died at 10:55 o'clock this morning. The last change in his condition occurred yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. In the morning he had been feeling quite comfortable and cheerful. At that hour, however, the intense strain which marked the periods of decline occurred and held him until death brought relief. Dr. William W. Johnson was summoned, and finding his patient suffering so intensely administered opiates, which, toward morning, induced a state of semi-consciousness, in which he remained until the end. Occasionally he would partially revive and recognize the loved ones near him by a glance or pressure of the hand, but a relapse soon followed. For a number of hours previous to death he was practically unconscious. In his last hours the dying justice was surrounded by members of his family, who have been with him throughout his illness. Mrs. Matthews, his daughters, Miss Matthews and Miss Eva Matthews, and his son, Paul Matthews, and C. B. Matthews, his brother, of Cincinnati. Dr. Johnson was also present. The reports of Justice Matthews' condition during the past week had been of such a cheering nature that apprehension was in a great measure subdued, and the news of his death came with a shock, even to many who had been prepared for the announcement at any time during the winter. The justice was ever a and naturally the members of his family endeavored to be as cheerful and hopeful as he, and it was owing to his own belief that the favorable reports of the past week were given to those who inquired after his health. Only yesterday morning Justice Matthews was discussing with his family various plans for the future, when he should be able, as in the past, to take part in their execution. "But at no time since his return to Washington," said one of the family this morning, "have we really felt that there was hope of his recovery." The funeral will probably take place at 1 p. m. Monday. The remains will be interred in the family lot, Spring Grove cemetery, Cincinnati, but details will not be perfected until the arrival of the dead jurist's oldest son, Mortimer Matthews, a lawyer of Cincinnati, and his youngest daughter, Grace, wife of Horace Cleaveland, assistant United States district attorney at Cincinnati and nephew of Justice Harlan. The engagement of Miss Mathews and Justice Gray was announced this week, and the marriage was expected to occur shortly. In the United States supreme court immediately upon assembling the chief justice announced the death of Justice Matthews, and as a mark of respect to his memory the court adjourned until Tuesday next. The senate also adjourned upon receiving the announcement of Justice Matthews' death in a communication from Chief Justice Fuller.

HIS ILLNESS.

Justice Matthews has been an invalid for a year or more. During the winter of 1887-1888 he frequently complained of indigestion and muscular rheumatism and as the spring wore on began to suffer from obstinate diarrhœa, from which he lost a great deal of strength and flesh. At this time it was thought that his great devotion to work was to a large degree responsible for his illness, as no doubt it was, and acting upon the advice of his physician and friends, who had great hopes that a change of air might prove a lasting benefit, he went to Massachusetts, stopping for some time at Lenox and then at Nantucket, but he continued to lose ground. During the summer he had several attacks of muscular rheumatism associated with high fever which would confine him to his bed for several days at a time. On his return home he began to improve somewhat, but he continued to suffer from the intercurrent attacks, which always greatly reduced his strength and flesh. These came in at intervals of three or four weeks. Between them he would have periods of marked improvement, and several times when Dr. Johnston was confidently hoping to be able to get him out another attack would prostrate him and leave him weaker than ever. During last February he suffered greatly with a complication of cystitis and iritis. About this time an ulcer of the cornea appeared, with an effusion into the pleural cavity, which were attributable to his rheumatic condition. He recovered, however, from both of these latter complications. For about eight weeks previous to his final illness he had been absolutely free from pain, and his physician and family had great hopes of his ultimate recovery. That hope was modified, however, by the fact that while he had a good appetite and good digestion he although his strength improved daily. At this time he sat up during a part of each day and walked about his room and into the other rooms on the same floor. But about the 4th of March he had an acute attack of high fever, which lasted several days, and which very much exhausted him. After this passed off he seemed to be improving, with a return of appetite, but a recurrence of the chills and fever associated with cystitis still further added to his exhaustion and debility. During all of this time, his pulse was exceedingly feeble and the action of the heart was sustained only by remedies administered for that purpose. Yesterday afternoon he had a prolonged chill and high fever, which brought on intense local suffering. This was followed in a few hours by another chill from which he could not rally. He continued to lose strength and died a few minutes after 10 o'clock this morning. The immediate cause of death was exhaustion of the heart and congestion of the kidneys, with a partial suppression of the urine. Besides his regular attendant, Dr. William W. Johnston, other eminent physicians, including Dr. William Pepper of Philadelphia and Dr. N. S. Lincoln of Washington, were called in consultation from time to time. The arrangements for the funeral were practically completed this evening. Religious services will be held at his late residence on Connecticut avenue Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock. They will be brief and simple, and will be conducted by Rev. Dr. Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant. The remains will be removed to the Baltimore & Ohio station for transportation to Glendale, Ohio, by way of Cincinnati. Religious services will be held there at Christ Episcopal church under the conduct of Rev. Dr. Price, the rector, Tuesday afternoon, and the remains will then be removed to Spring Grove cemetery for interment. Members of the supreme court will accompany the remains as honorary pall bearers and the messengers of the court will be the active pall bearers.

Stanley Matthews was a native of Cincinnati, his birth having occurred July 21, 1824. He was the eldest child of his father's second marriage. Until he was eight years of age the family lived the greater part of the time in Kentucky, where his father, Thomas J. Matthews, was a professor of mathematics in Transylvania university. In 1832, having been elected president of Woodward high school, Cincinnati, Prof. Matthews returned to that city, and for the next seven years took charge of the education of his son, preparing him for the junior class in Kenyon college, Ohio, where he graduated in the fall of 1840. Among his fellow students was Rutherford B. Hayes, afterward president. After devoting two years to the study of law Stanley Matthews removed to Maury county, Tenn., where he obtained a position as an assistant in a school. Having been admitted to the bar, he commenced his practice at Columbus, devoting his leisure to editing a paper called The Tennessee Democrat. After his return to Cincinnati in 1844 he formed the acquaintance of Dr. Gamaliel Bailey, who was then publishing the Cincinnati Herald, an anti-slavery paper. He became a contributor to this newspaper, and subsequently succeeded Dr. Bailey in conducting its publication. At that time the anti-slavery feeling was running high in Ohio, involving both parties, and the prominence into which Mr. Matthews' name had been brought, as the publisher of this paper, made him a party to the combination which elected Mr. Chase United States senator from that state, and resulted in Matthews' election, as a "Free Soiler," clerk of the Ohio house of representatives.

Mr. Matthews was in 1850 elected by the Democrats one of the three judges of the court of common pleas of Hamilton county. He resigned in January, 1853, finding the salary insufficient, and became a member of the law firm of Worthington & Matthews. He subsequently served one full term in the senate of Ohio. President Buchanan appointed him United States district attorney in 1858. In two years he tendered his resignation to relieve President Lincoln of any embarrassment in providing an occupant for the office. At the commencement of hostilities he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-third Ohio infantry. Rutherford B. Hayes was major of the regiment and Gen. Rosecrans its colonel. Lieut. Col. Matthews served with his regiment in West Virginia. He was promoted to the colonelcy of the Fifty-first Ohio regiment in October, 1861. His regiment was engaged in service in Kentucky under Maj. Gen. Buell, becoming afterward part of the Army of the Cumberland. In April, 1863, Col. Matthews was elected by the Republicans judge of the superior court of Cincinnati and resigned his military command. He fulfilled his judicial position until July, 1864, when he tendered his resignation, compelled by pecuniary considerations to resume his private practice. This soon became very extensive and profitable.

In 1872 Mr. Matthews, although a member of the convention which first nominated Mr. Greeley for president, withdrew before the nomination and supported the election of Gen. Grant in the canvass. He was afterward a Republican candidate for congress. Mr. Matthews was a warm supporter, as well as a personal friend, of Gen. Hayes, and before the electoral commission rendered efficient service to his friend. Upon the resignation of Senator Sherman, to become secretary of the treasury, Mr. Matthews was elected as his successor, serving from 1877 until 1879. Toward the close of his administration, President Hayes sent the nomination of Stanley Matthews to the senate to be an associate justice of the supreme court, but the nomination was not acted upon by that congress. It was renewed by President Garfield on May 12, 1881, and confirmed. Justice Matthews was a man of great intellectual energy. His mind was clear, comprehensive and analytical. He had a strong will and a force of character which, with his thorough training, quick perceptions, retentive memory and sound judgment, had carried him to the front rank of his profession as a lawyer, and had won for him an enviable reputation in the position he lately occupied.

THEY FEAR BLOODSHED.

Oklahoma Pilgrims Flock Into the Forbidden Country on the Withdrawal of Troops—Waiting for the President's Proclamation.

WICHITA, Kan., Special Telegram, March 22.—Reports from Oklahoma City state that the boomers who had disappeared from their claims and are in concealment in the woods or in the Indian reservation have returned with the withdrawal of the soldiers. Each train brings hundreds that have been hanging along the border in desperation. The excitement at Purcell and on the border is intense, and the people have left business to hang around the telegraph office and newspaper offices to hear of President Harrison's issuing his proclamation. The number of boomers is augmented by train and wagon loads of would-be settlers and prospectors. They have been expecting the proclamation each day, and when night comes mutterings of disappointment and lamentations are heard on every hand. Of the favorable reports to-day they hardly know what to say, as they have so often been disappointed. Col. Crooker, who has labored to hold back the invaders, stated: "Should the president hesitate much longer blood will be shed." The boomers are greatly agitated over the efforts to prevent them now going in. An old man who had watched a piece of land six years to-day stated that a band of almost 1,000 old boomers had been formed, and an effort to dispossess any of them would be death to the informant. This league, he says, is secret and growing in numbers each day, and, whether expelled or not, they will hold their claims by force. The situation is certainly critical.

RIOT AT FALL RIVER.

Trouble Between Strikers and Workmen Retained at the Fall River Mills.

FALL RIVER, Mass., March 22.—The first serious trouble of the Fall River strike occurred to-night at the Seaconnet mill. This mill is the only one which has made a determined attempt to run with "knobstick" help, and the strikers there have been the only ones in the city to gather about the mill to make any disturbance. When the mill shut down to-night the crowd near the mill gates and along the streets in the vicinity numbered over a thousand. As the working weavers came out they were greeted with cries of derision in French and English. Finally the "knobsticks" replied to the taunts in kind. This was followed by a volley of stones from the crowd, one of which struck a "knobstick's" head. The man beside him immediately turned and fired a pistol in the direction of the crowd, which promptly scattered and replied with another volley of stones. The police seized the man with the pistol in his hand, and hurried him to the station. No one has been found that was injured by the bullet, although several were reported injured by stones. At the station the man arrested gave his name as Lewis Lapointe. The mill overseer found bail for him in $300. There were 533 looms running at the mill to-day, with indications that a greater portion of the weave rooms would be running to-morrow.

Contracts Let.

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., Special Telegram, March 22.—Maj. Alex MacKenzie, in charge of river improvements from the Des Moines rapids to Minneapolis, has awarded the following contracts for work to be done out of this year's appropriations, otherwise than by the government fleet: From Fairport to Muscatine 45,000; Reed's Landing to Fountain City $40,000; at Keithsburg $32,000; all to Capt. A. J. Whitney of this city; at Fort Madison $22,000, to Patterson Bros., Fort Madison.

Minnesota Legislature.

SATURDAY, MARCH 16.

SENATE.—Several bills of a general nature and of greater or less importance were introduced in the senate. One put in by Senator Daniels fixes as the time for the meeting of the legislature the first Tuesday after the first Monday in December. This sets the opening of the session about one month earlier than under the existing law, and will therefore secure a correspondingly earlier adjournment. Some of the members do not like the idea of sitting away into the latter part of April, as they will have to do under the ninety days rule with a January opening.

Mr. Bowen introduced a bill to require railway companies to use automatic couplers on their freight cars.

A bill introduced by Senator Dodge provides for the registration of all thoroughbred stock that may be offered for sale or service in this state. The measure contemplates the appointment by the governor of a commissioner of registry, who shall keep registration books in St. Paul, in which shall be registered not only the thoroughbred stock of Minnesota, but of the adjoining states, if the owners desire to have it registered, for purpose of sale in Minnesota.

HOUSE.—Mr. Diment is on the war path, and the scalp of the Manitoba system seems to be what he is after. Whether he is to have the pleasure of removing it, remains to be seen. Yesterday forenoon he offered the following resolution, which went over under notice of debate given by Mr. Eastman:

Whereas, The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad company was formed and established under the laws of the Territory and now State of Minnesota, to build, maintain and to that end said corporation was authorized to have a capital stock not exceeding $20,000,000, with power to borrow money and to mortgage all its property to secure repaying thereof, and in and by such mortgages to provide for and establish a sinking fund with which to discharge the same at or before maturity thereof; and

Whereas, Congress heretofore granted certain lands to the late Territory and now State of Minnesota for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said public highways, and provided that said lands be held by said territory and state for the use and purpose aforesaid, and that the same should be subject to the future disposal of the legislature thereof for said purposes and none other; and

Whereas, Said trust was accepted by said Territory and now State of Minnesota and said lands were by said territory and state turned over to said corporation subject to said trust, to the end that the same and the proceeds thereof should be faithfully applied to said purposes and none other; and

Whereas, Said corporation heretofore mortgaged all its property, including said lands, to secure payment of its bonds to the amount of $16,000,000, and in and by such mortgages established a sinking fund for the discharge thereof, at or before maturity, by specially setting apart and pledging the proceeds of said lands to that purpose; and

Whereas, Said corporation has also issued its stock certificates to the amount of $15,000,000, as fully paid up; and

Whereas, Said mortgages were not made or used to raise money wherewith to build, maintain, equip and operate said highways, but in part to wrongfully enrich divers individuals then having control of said corporation; and

Whereas, Said stock certificates were not made or issued upon full payment of the face value thereof, but to be distributed gratuitously among divers persons then having control of said corporation, and without payment of any amount therefor; and

Whereas, The proceeds of said lands have not been faithfully applied by said corporation to the discharge of said mortgages, according to the terms of said trust or according to the terms of said sinking fund provisions, but on the contrary thereof have been wrongfully and fraudulently applied to the carrying on of other enterprises; and

Whereas, Said corporation in virtue of said fact has misused and abused the special purposes, privileges and franchises received thereby from said Territory and now State of Minnesota so that the people of this state are now being called upon to pay exorbitant and unreasonable rates for transportation upon and over said highways to pay interest on moneys never borrowed for the construction, maintenance, equipment or operation of said highways, and to pay dividends on stock which was never actually paid in; and

Whereas, The legislature of this state, and each branch thereof, is clothed with power and under duty to examine into the affairs and condition of said corporation for the purpose of determining what shall be done therewith to correct said abuses; now therefore, it is

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of this house be appointed with full power and authority to examine generally into the affairs and condition of said corporation, and to that end with full power and authority to administer all necessary oaths to the directors, officers and stockholders of said corporation, and to examine them on oath in relation to the affairs and condition thereof, and to examine the vaults, safes, books, documents and papers belonging to said corporation or pertaining to its affairs and condition, and to compel the production of all keys, books, papers and documents according to the statute in such cases made and provided, and with all convenient speed to report to this house such examinations, with such findings and recommendations in that behalf as they shall deem proper.

MONDAY, MARCH, 18.

SENATE.—A couple of the house bills were ingloriously "turned" in the senate. One was the bill designating certain days, observed as public holidays, to be legal holidays.

The other house bill that failed of passage was the one authorizing the issuing of liquor licenses to the proprietors of the summer hotels at Excelsior. It was urged against the measure that it proposed special, discriminating and unconstitutional legislation, while Mr. Pope made the point that with such bills as this the legislature can annul local option prohibition in any part of the state. The vote stood 18 for and 15 against the measure, and the bill was declared lost, because not a majority of the entire senate voted for it.

Mr. Day, in the senate, is one of the progressive members of the legislature—a fact apparent from a measure he introduced yesterday. Mr. Day's bill is designed to revolutionize the mode of capital punishment, providing like the New York law for inflicting the death penalty by the application to the condemned criminal of electricity.

HOUSE.—Mr. Diment yesterday called up his Manitoba resolution and moved its adoption. Mr. Benson took up the fight for the road, and several others opposed it, but the original resolutions passed—Yeas 61, Nays 18. The speaker later in the day appointed as the committee called for: Messrs. Diment, Flynn, Stebbins, Eastman, Morgan, Sumner and Crossfield.

The joint senate and house committees on judiciary held another meeting to hear the question of the constitutionality of the meat inspection bill argued. Judge Fleming presided. W. H. Sanborn was the first speaker, and he attacked the constitutionality of the bill.

Gen Cole defended the bill against the charge that it was not designed in good faith simply for health protection. Mr. Erwin concluded the argument, taking the stand that the bill was not constitutional.

TUESDAY, MARCH, 19.

SENATE.—When Mr. Day's bill to submit a constitutional amendment providing for a return to sixty-day sessions of the legislature came up on general orders in the senate, that gentleman claimed that the adoption of the ninety-day rule was accomplished by a fraud upon the people. The amendment was stated and printed in such a blind way, he claimed, that many citizens did not know what they were voting for. He was thoroughly satisfied that the people do not want ninety-day sessions, and never had wanted a session of that length. Mr. Ward took substantially the same view. He regarded the ninety-day session a curse and an unnecessary expense upon the state, and believed that the people would be even better pleased with forty-day than with sixty-day sessions.

Mr. Keller favored a return to the old system. Mr. Day's bill he regarded as the best measure that has been introduced this session. He said the people were deceived in voting for ninety days. The type in which the constitutional amendment was printed was small. Moreover, half the voters in the state could not read English, and those that could would have to go to a lawyer to find out what the amendment meant. For his own part, if the senate did not adjourn pretty soon, he would pack his little satchel and waste basket and skedaddle for home. Senators Clark, Ives and Goodrich took ground against the bill, claiming that, with the state growing rapidly and legislative needs increasing correspondingly, it would be next to impossible to find time to carefully consider all the matters that may come up, inside of sixty days. They refuted the claim of Mr. Day that the people did not vote intelligently on the ninety-day proposition. A motion to recommend the bill for passage was lost, the vote standing 14 for and 21 against it.

HOUSE.—The house tackled another investigation yesterday by adopting the following resolution, offered by Mr Sevatson:

Whereas, It is alleged that the supply of binding twine and the raw material from which the same is manufactured has been bought up by certain parties, and

Whereas, It is claimed that by reason thereof the said parties have consummated a so-called twine trust, and

Whereas, The grain-raisers of this state look with grave apprehension upon this alleged twine trust, which threatens to exact from them unreasonable and extortionate prices for binding twine to be used in the near future:

Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed by the speaker to inquire into and fully investigate whether or not such alleged twine trust exists, and whether or not it extends into this state; also, if such is the case, what legislation is necessary to protect the farmers of this state from the encroachment of such alleged trust, and to accomplish said purpose the said committee is hereby given power to send for persons and papers, and to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to administer oaths to witnesses and make report to the house on their investigation.

The resolution was adopted without debate.

The speaker appointed as such committee Messrs. Sevatson, Brush, Farley, James and Morris.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20.

SENATE.—After a long, hard fight the Duluth & Winnipeg loses its grant. The senate decides by a vote of twenty-six to sixteen against the bill.

Mr. Day introduced a resolution providing for an extra edition of the state manual to the number of 3,000 copies, and for their distribution among institutions of learning, public libraries, members of the legislature, etc.

The game bill introduced in the senate yesterday is the same in all its provisions as the one that has been put in in the house.

A bill introduced by Mr. Truax provides a way for bringing suit against foreigners who are property owners in this state for the collection of taxes.

HOUSE.—The local option bill was killed in the House by a vote of 32 for to 26 against.

The reapportionment bill came in yesterday about as agreed upon by the committee. The bill provides for 54 senatorial districts, with 114 representatives. The average population for members, senators and representatives included, is 6,653. The district where the representation is the greatest is the Seventh, composed of Murray, Rock, Nobles and Pipe Stone, where there is a member for every 4,970 people, while in Washington county, which receives the least representation, there is but one member for 8,917 of the population. Ramsey and Rice counties also have but one member for more than 8,200 of the population. The counties which suffer the most by the bill are Washington and Rice, which lose one and two representatives respectively. The bill will undoubtedly be fought hard in the house, and if it gets through at all it will be after it has been amended in several features.

THURSDAY MARCH, 21.

SENATE.—The possibility of another boodle investigation flashed across the horizon of the senate yesterday morning when Mr. Pope arose to a question of privilege and sent to the clerk's desk to be read an article clipped from a morning newspaper relating to rumors of the use of money in connection with the contest over the Duluth & Winnipeg land grant bill.

Mr. Hixon, who voted against the indefinite postponement of the bill on Wednesday, is evidently one of those who believes that corrupting influences were brought to bear to secure his defeat. In explaining his vote he remarked that "arguments more potent than words" had been used to influence the action of the senate. Another senator, and one who opposed the bill, stated that he had seen a proposition signed by officials of the Duluth & Winnipeg road offering a gentleman 1,280 acres of land for his vote. The senator to whom this offer was made refused it, and made no secret of the fact that it had been made to him. No resolution for an investigation was offered yesterday, and Mr. Pope, when asked if he should have steps taken to have one ordered, remarked that he did not know. And here the matter rests.

HOUSE.—The house spent most of both morning and afternoon sessions in the discussion of general orders, and as there were no bills of particular importance the day was very dull.

Mr. Morgan introduced a measure for the relief of Sam Nichols, amending the oil inspection law already passed, by making the salary $3,600 instead of $2,400.

Mr. Lane introduced a resolution which recited that, whereas the life of the members was being made a burden by the noise and confusion created by the lobbyists were at work in the house, the sergeant-at-arms was instructed to remove all of that class from the floor Mr. Heidemann thought the members themselves were to blame, and Mr. Anderson agreeing with him gave notice of debate.

FRIDAY, MARCH 22.

SENATE.—Mr. Buckman, chairman of the finance committee, in reporting the general appropriation bill yesterday called attention to the financial condition of the state, which he characterized as precarious. The committee believed that in the bills reported and to be acted upon it had gone to the full extent of the credit of the state.

The pool bill came to the surface again yesterday on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby it was lost. The reconsideration was moved by Mr. Burkhart and was carried. Then the bill was placed on the calendar. It is understood that Mr. Ives and Mr. Smith will try again to figure out a measure that will be satisfactory to both.

HOUSE.—The house committee on grain and warehouse met yesterday afternoon and decided to report favorably Col. Brush's bill to regulate the furnishing of cars and the shipment of wheat and other grain or product of the state in carload lots, and the inspection and weighing thereof, and also fixing the liabilities of common carriers.

Mr. Smout will shortly introduce a bill of unique provisions. It is designed to secure an informal expression of the people of the state on the questions of prohibition and high license, so that the next legislature may have a "pointer" in acting on such legislation. It provides that at the next general election, at each polling place, there shall be provided an extra ballot box and ballots marked "prohibition" and "high license." Each voter is to be given a chance to express his preference as between the two systems. The expression of opinion thus obtained is designed to be purely informal, and not in any way binding on the legislature.

One of the Seven Richest Men.

Boston Journal.

The Chinese Minister is a mandarin of such high rank that he stands fifth only from the Emperor, and rumor has it that he is one of the seven richest men in the world, the seven including the famous Rothschilds. His jewels are magnificent, and it is a well known fact that he was one of the heavy purchasers when the imperial regalia of France was broken up and sold. He is a man of little height, with phenomenally small hands and feet, piercing brown eyes, a fair skin, and two dimples that make his smile doubly pleasant. His manners are exquisite, and he carries his hospitality to the point of interpreting literally the flowery phases of his native land. He is an immense favorite in society. His taste is perfect, and the rich and harmonious toilets he wears are the envy and admiration of all colorists. He speaks very good English, and has a distinct lisp, which he exercises very cleverly at times.

HOUSEHOLD.

Hints for the Home.

Fish may be scalded much easier by dipping into boiling water about a minute.

A teaspoonful of turpentine boiled with white clothes will aid the whitening process.

For fetid perspiration of the feet, rub the parts with dry carbonate of bismuth night and morning.

White spots on furniture can be removed by holding a hot iron close over them.

The Old-time Hemstitching is now a favorite finish for all manner of house linen from table damask to pillow cases.

The new Directoire long coats for utility uses during the inevitable wet and chilly days of the spring season are stylish garments. They are made variously of faced cloth, tweed and light-weight broadcloth in various shades.

To take out paint, mix equal parts of ammonia and turpentine. Saturate the spot two or three times, then wash out in soap suds; or cover the spot with olive oil or butter, and apply chloroform, chloric either, or benzine. Paint can often be rubbed out of woolen goods after it has dried.

Morning wrappers, whether of silk or of fine wool, or striped flannel, are fitted smoothly in straight redingote style with the fullness gathered below the two middle forms in the back. On more elaborate models the fronts are turned back in revers, disclosing an accordeon pleat of silk which reaches from neck to foot. A wrapper of red-and-black striped flannel is lined throughout with vivid red surah.

In cooking oatmeal or cracked wheat, if the meal is put into a double boiler and salt added to the water in the outer receptacle, the food will be much improved in taste, the reason being undoubtedly because the meal is better cooked by this process. As salted water does not boil at so low a temperature as unsalted, therefore the meal is subjected to a greater heat, and is proportionately better cooked and much improved thereby.

HOW TO DISSOLVE SODA.—It is better always to dissolve soda in a very little—one or two tablespoonfuls of boiling water. First, boiling water dissolves it more quickly; second, the water being clear or transparent one can see that the soda is thoroughly dissolved, while, if you add it to milk, which, of course must be sour, or you would not be using soda with it, fermentation takes place at once, thereby destroying all opportunities for seeing whether or not the soda is thoroughly dissolved.

Dyspepsia.

Good Health gives the following direction for relief from dyspepsia: A warm compress worn over the stomach at night, a saline sponge both taken two or three times a week, an abundance of out-door exercise, great care respecting diet, and avoidance of things known to disagree, and the use of simple foods which can be easily digested, are effective measures in a great many cases. If to these simple measures are added hot-water drinking—one or two glasses before each meal—and fomentations in the region of the stomach, taken just before retiring for the night, signs of improvement should be visible in a few weeks.

How Scarlet Fever Poison is Distributed.

The Medical Era relates the case of a girl aged about eight, living at Fortress Monroe, Va., who was some months ago attacked by scarlet fever, the disease running a typical course. For a long time no possible source of contagion could be discovered. The child had not been absent from home, had been with no one lately exposed, and no other case was known to exist anywhere in the vicinity. Subsequently Dr. Brooks learned that one of the house servants had nursed a case of scarlet fever in a distant city just about a year before. After the case terminated she packed some of her things, including some clothing then worn, in a trunk and left the place. A year later she had the trunk sent to her, opened it and took out the contents, the little girl being present and handling the things. Very soon after the latter was attacked, as stated.

Benefit of a Sponge Bath.

A prominent physician, speaking of special baths and their uses, mentions the sponge-bath, the foam of bathing where the water is applied to the surface through the medium of cloth or sponge, no part of the body being plunged in the water. He says the practice of systematic daily sponge bathing is one giving untold benefit to its followers. Let a person not over strong, subject to frequent colds from slight exposure, the victim of chronic catarrh, sore throats, etc., begin the practice of taking a sponge-bath every morning, commencing with tepid water in a warm room (not hot), and following the sponging with friction that will produce a warm glow over the skin and take five minute's brisk walk in the open air. See if you do not return with a good appetite for breakfast. After having used tepid water for a few mornings, lower the temperature of the bath until cold water can be borne with impunity.

My Mother.

I am now so far advanced in life that my friends begin to call me old. But I have not lived long enough to learn why I should not still respect my mother, and regard her affectionately. She is quite advanced in years, and has nearly lost her sight. She now sits within a few feet of me, sewing up a rent in my linen coat. She has been a widow eight years, and is still toiling for the welfare of her children. She has never studied grammar, nor philosophy, nor music. These things were seldom taught in her young days; but she knows their value, and toiled many a hard day to purchase books for her children, and support them at school. And shall I now curl the lip in scorn, or blush in company, to hear her substitute a verb of unity for one of plurality, or pronounce a word twenty years behind the Webster era? Never—no, never. The old dilapidated grammer in my library might testify against her style; but its testimony would be infinitely more terribly agaist my ingratitude. I recollect well when she rode seven miles, one cold winter's day, to sell produce and purchase that book for me, when I was a little boy. It required a sacrifice, but "mother made it."—Home Journal.

New England's Old Girls.

It has often been asked what becomes of the surplus of the female over the male population of some of the States, especially of Massachusettes and Connecticut and perhaps of some of the other "down east" commonwealths. An estimable lady by the name of Miss Rebecca Jones, who herself belongs to that number and who was a school teacher for nearly twenty years in a small New England town, and who is now visiting friends in Brooklyn, gave some interesting statistics bearing upon this point to the writer of this article. Said she:

"I have kept a record of the girls who have graduated from the High Schools of my native village, where I have been a school teacher since 1871, what they have done and what has become of them."

She gave the figures for the classes of the years 1871 to 1876—from eighteen to eleven years ago—and strange figures for any marrying and giving in marriage community they are. Continuing, she said:

"The average of the female graduates from a typical New England school is between 16 and 17 years. Hence it will appear that the women of whom this list has been made, ranging to-day between 29 and 34 years old, have done the greater part of all the 'settling in life' that they are likely to do. Out of a total of ninety-nine graduates there were twenty-seven marriages, eleven deaths and sixty-nine are still single. Strange as it may seem, the eleven deaths were all caused by consumption. There have been two cases of insanity, both of the twenty-seven married group. The largest number of children of any is three. Three of the girls went to college after leaving the high school, all of whom are married.

"Of the unmarried sixty-one, twenty-one follow a very usual feminine calling—that of schoolm'am. One is at Hampton, Va., teaching the Indians; the other twenty are in country schools in or near by their homes. Three set type; one reads proof; one is a head dressmaker in a large establishment in New York city; four are dressmakers on their own hook; one is practicing medicine; three are music teachers; fifteen are stitchers and buttonhole makers in shoe shops, and the rest are home bodies.

"Just what has brought about such a preponderance of spinisterhood it is not altogether easy to say. Some people have contended that it did not exist, but statistics prove to the contrary. Such people have explained the great surplus of women in New England on the supposition that most of them are widows, made so by the hazardous occupation of the men along the Eastern coast. Widows there are in plenty, but the sixty-one of my records certainly never married.

"Probably most of them never had an opportunity to marry. There are few marriageable young men at the present time to be found in most of the small New England town. The serene quiet of this most lethargic rural section of the country does not suit the active spirit of young men of the day. They go away before they are old enough to marry, and the chances are that they don't come back again.

"If they do return they are impressed with the lack of money in New England, outside of the cities, by the length of time since the houses have been painted and the amount of calculation required before he can find a place where he can satisfactorily spend a dollar. They do not stay long enough to admire the hardy thrift that can wring a comfortable support from the stony soil where a New Yorker would starve, and 'the girls they left behind them' cannot compare, so they seem to think, for beauty of dress, fascinating coquetry or small talk of society with the blandishments of the city girls, who have insensibly became to them the standard for admiration.

"These thing considered, it is fortunate for the spinster that she is fast learning to thing it a natural and not altogether unpleasant state of affairs to be what she is. They do not look an unhappy lot, and New England is learning to be tender of and appreciate them. She does not call them 'old maids,' and the fiction of their youth is kept up till they die. One may hear of the 'Fisher girls,' the 'Smith girls,' and so on for weeks before the truth dawns that the 'girls' are well past the half century milestone of life. They never married and no one was ever cruel enough to mark out any line beyond which they ceased to be young. They are self-respecting and universally respected.

"There are New England towns in great numbers, where the best educated and best bred Yankee girl, of the best colonial families, can go into the shoe shop and work there for years after she had ceased to be a girl, save by courtesy, and still read the classics and move in, perhaps lead, the most aristocratic society of the town."

The Last of His Race.

Texas Siftings.

A good story is told of a purse-proud old noblemen who was traveling through the rural districts of Sweden. Over in that country the people do not have quite as much respect for the titled aristocracy as in some localities on the continent. One day this nobleman came rolling up to a country tavern, and as he stopped his carriage he called out in imperious tone:

"Horses, landlord; horses here at once."

"I am very much pained to inform you that you will have to wait over an hour before fresh horses can be brought in," replied the landlord.

"How!" violently exclaimed the nobleman, "this to me! My man, I demand horses at once."

Then observing the fresh and sleek looking horses which were being led up to another carriage, he said:

"For whom are those horses?"

"They were ordered for this gentleman," answered the landlord, pointing to a tall, slim individual a few paces distant.

"I say, my man," called out the nobleman to the slim gent, "will you let me have those horses if I pay you a liberal bonus therefor?"

"Not much," answered the slim gent. "I intend to use them myself."

"This to me!" exclaimed the nobleman.

"That is what I said," replied the slim man.

"Perhaps you are not aware who I am?" roared the now thoroughly agitated and irate nobleman. "I am, sir, Field Marshal Baron George Sparre, the last and only one of my race."

"I am very glad to hear that," said the slim man stepping into the carriage. "It would be a terrible thing to think that there might be more of you coming. I am inclined to think that your race will be a foot race."

The slim man was a brother of the king of Sweden.

The Latest Swindle in Boston.

The city of Boston is just now being treated to a return to the days of alchemy more wonderful than when Dr Faustus, surrounded by test tubes and crucibles, was visited by his satanic majesty. There are H. E. Butler and Charles Henry Washburne and others who propose to make all the precious metals out of dirt, and as for jewels there will hereafter, according to those wizards, be no reason why every woman in the world shouldn't have diamond earrings and other ornaments composed of precious stones.

They propose to build a college which shall be a temple to the new science, and where experiments can be carried on. They issued a circular or "call to the awakened" to send in their contributions to Butler to order that the gentleman may proceed to build an "esoteric college" on the Pacific coast. This college is to be devoted to soul culture. There will be a colony of esoterics who will be endowed with miraculous powers. Those who invest are to be the possessors of untold millions. The call is issued in pamphlet form and occupies 200 pages. The reader is informed of the existence of a wonderful society called the G. N. K. R., or the "Genii of Nations, Knowledge and religious." The secrets committed to this society are to be revealed in Boston, and Butler to be the medium.

The principal theosophs of Boston first got the circular and copies were sent through the country to those who were in favor of theosoph. Then Professor Butler quietly waited for contributions. Now the newspapers have got hold of the matter, and the great scheme seems doomed.

Extending Cultivable Areas.

From the results obtained of late years in the semi-arid regions of the United States, east and west of the Rocky Mountains, it may be taken as a fair presumption that the time is not far distant when the so-called desert regions of the earth will dwindle down to a comparatively small area. So far as the inter-continental region of the United States is concerned, it has been shown that cultivation suited to the exigencies of the climate produces good crops, and where irrigation is practiced, most bountiful one.

In modern agriculture it is shown that with increasing population the necessities of a case bring thought that produces the means of relief. Thus, in the arid portions of Kansas, listing has brought good crops of Indian corn, cultivation successively covering the roots deeper and deeper, enabling them to use all the moisture in the soil. Thus, intelligent minds may bring into tilth other large semi-arid ares in Europe, Asia and Africa, when advancing civilization and education may make it necessary to bring these tracks of land into subjection.

Judas Abolished

Judas has been officially abolished in the island of Madeira. It has been a time-honored custom of the native to exhibit in one of their numerous religious processions an effigy of Judas; upon which the opprobrium of the populace was duly heaped, and at the close of the day Judas was burned with vociferous expressions of triumph and joy. Of late years it has happened that the effigy of Judas has borne a striking resemblance to some person upon whom the general public has ceased to smile, and thus the governor of the island, the mayor of Funchal, and a foreign consul have been caricatured in the processions and burned in effigy. The powers that be have decided that the mixture of politics and religion is not wholesome, and so the edict has gone forth that hereafter the people must get along without Judas.—New York Sun.

It is stated that the United States government has paid more money in the investigation of the disease of hogs than it has for all diseases affecting the human race.

The number of artificial teeth made in the United States last year by three of the largest business houses in the trade was near 20,000,000, and this was not more than half of the actual production of the country.

Fire Company No. 10, of Cincinnati, owns a dog which is said to have saved the lives of several firemen. The animal is described as a large, handsome Newfoundland, and is credited with being able to climb a ladder three stories high.

Gainesville, Ga., had its first snow in two years the other night. There wasn't a breath of air stirring, and in the morning two inches of beauty covered everything. The whole town turned out to snowball and enjoy the rare sight with a degree of pleasure quite unknown to the citizens of the snow-clad North.

Dr. J. M. Edmunds, in a paper in dental monthly, advocates the implanting metalic roots in the jaw, and the building of artifical teeth upon them. He believes that this method opens new possibilities for dentistry. By planting two metalic capsules in the rear of the jaw and two in the forward portion, he thinks it practical to lay a foundation for a complete set of permanent teeth.

London papers relate a story of a Welsh preacher who started on the cars to fulfill an engagement. When the conductor came for his ticket, he had forgotten to bring it, and had also forgotten his money. What was worse he had forgotten where he was going. It was found impossible to suggest to him any station that seemed to be the right one, and he had to telegraph home to have his friends look into his diary and send him word where he was going.

Three hundred miles an hour is the proposed speed for the electric postal railroad of the future. It is a compromise between the pneumatic tube and the ordinary railroad. It carries a miniature train of two cars solely for mail and light parcels, without any attendance. An experimental line has been erected at Laurel, twenty miles from Baltimore, Md., and if it succeeds, it is stated that similar roads will be laid between Baltimore and Washington, and elsewhere.

The town of Eaton, O., is aroused over the outline of a man's face which appears on the window glass of a house in which one Christman, who was murdered two years ago, lived. Christman's wife and daughter occupy the dwelling and they both say that they have seen the face since last March, and have avoided making it known to the public, from the fact that they did not want to be bothered with people coming to see it. It is stated that others have seen the face and that it resembles very closely that of the murdered man.

The original Astor, says Joe Howard, so far as we know, although it is fair to assume he had a father somewhere, was a very humble peddler—saving, grubbing, grasping, penurious, miserly, mean. Every cent he made he held on to it until it became a dollar, and every dollar until it was a hundred; and then, when land was cheap, with shrewdness and common sense he put his money in the earth; and the earth, which must last so long as time endures, lasts, and the present generation enjoy their "high life" by reason of what was done in very "low life," and for no other reason.

But few negroes carry life insurance policies. Why? In the first place the pure negro is not so long lived as the white man, and the admixture of white blood seems to decrease his chances of longevity still further. Another reason is that negroes are unable to give family history as white men are; They cannot tell, as a rule, how their parents died or what, if any, disease existed in their families. Ten years ago a Massachusetts Insurance Co. discovered that the mortality among its colored policy holders was about twice as great as among the whites, and this observation has been corroborated by that of other companies, with the result of discouraging this class of risks.

Washington Budget.

Secretary Windom is said to be authority for the statement that there will be no change in the office of the United States treasurer, now held by J. W. Hyatt before the end of the present fiscal year, June 30. It is understood that Mr. Joseph H. Huston of Indiana has been promised the office when it becomes vacant.

President Harrison's latest nominations were: Miles C. Moore of Walla Walla, Wash., to be governor of Washington Territory; Oliver C. White of Dayton, Wash., to be secretary of Washington Territory; Henry N. Blane of Montana to be chief justice of the supreme court of Montana. Postmasters—Graham L. Rice, West Superior, Wis.; John W. Banbury, Britton, S. D.

Senator Stewart's special committee to investigate the subject of irrigating and reclaiming arid lands will enter upon that duty August 1, meeting at St. Paul and proceeding first to Montana. The chairman expects that the trip will occupy about six weeks and cover most of the territories. This committee includes Senators Allison, Plumb, Hiscock, Gorman, Reagan and Jones of Arkansas.

One of the matters considered at the cabinet meeting was the case of an Illinois postmaster whose removal was asked by one of the Illinois congressmen because of the postmaster's political activity. It was admitted by the congressman that the office was well managed, and the matter was called to the attention of the cabinet for the reason that the action taken in this case might constitute a precedent hereafter. There is reason to believe that the result of the meeting was adverse to the wishes of the Illinois congressman.

Considerable comment has been made about the delay in the nomination of a minister to England, and especially as President Harrison has filled several of the important missions. It is now stated that the president has selected the minister to the court of St. James, but will not for the present send his name to the senate. The president desires, it is stated, to withhold the nomination until after the arrival of Sir Julian Pauncefote, the newly appointed British minister, and the presentation of his credentials to the department of state.

The United States consul general at Shanghai has informed the state department at the request of the Shanghai committee o the North China relief fund of the distress existing over a large area of China. Thousands are starving and dying from exposure in Northern China. Relief has already been received from America and England, but more is needed. Until the spring crops are gathered the famine will continue and to insure the spring planting money is required from abroad, as in the famine districts there is neither seed nor money to purchase it. It is stated that relief to be really effective must continue until next June, carrying a limited number quite through the season of want.

The following telegram was sent from Washington. The Commanding General, Division Missouri, Chicago—The act of congress approved March 5, 1889, provides in substance that no person shall be allowed to enter upon or occupy the land recently ceded to the United States by the Creek and Seminole Indians, until said lands are open for settlement by proclamation of the president, and that no person violating this provision shall ever be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any right thereto. The president directs that the officers under your command cause the people to be fully informed of these provisions of the law, and that they take and preserve the names of all persons who may enter the territory in violation of this provision, so that the same may be enforced by the land department when said lands are lawfully opened for settlement. By order of Maj.-Gen. Schofield, J. C. Kelton, A. A. G.

Calendar of Casualties.

A house situated near Day's mills, about one mile from Baldwinsville, Mass., owned by J. M. Peerley, was burned. Mrs. Russell, aged seventy-nine, and two daughters of a neighbor named Truehart, aged five and fifteen, perished in the flames.

A noise like the combined roar of hundreds of cannon, followed by the ascension of a huge black smoke to a towering height, startled the inhabitants of Lakewood, N. J., and those of other adjacent villages. It was conjectured that an explosion had occurred in the works of the United States Dynamite company, eight miles distant, and this was the case. The explosion had occurred in the mixing room. Thomas Haggerty and William Nicholas, both of Manchester, the only occupants of the room, were instantly killed. Nicholas was blown to atoms, and Haggerty died in less than an hour. The schock was perceptible in all the towns and villages within fifteen or twenty miles. The dynamite company located there, in which five men were killed and three maimed for life. The body of Nicholas was scattered in every direction about the premises, and men were engaged in gathering them piecemeal until darkness compeled them to desist.

Fire started in the Standard bagging factory at St. Louis and owing to the inflammable nature of the building and contents the flames spread rapidly, and caused the wildest panic amongst the 200 employes, most of whom were girls. A rush was made for the narrow stairway, but before half the number could escape they found themselves cut off by the heat and smoke. With aid of the few men employed in the building the panic-stricken girls succeeded in making their way throug the smoke and flames to a place where they could drop out to some low adjoining buildings, and all were thus saved and uninjured, with the exception of Ada Lebnecht, who was found horribly burned. Charles Gufran, who worked heroically in getting the girls out of the burning building, remained too long and was compelled to jump out of a third-story window. He was terribly injured but will not die. A man who was run over by a fire engine was taken away by friends before his name could be learned. The pecuniary loss by the fire will not exceed $10,000.

Crimes and Criminals.

The first case under the recent act of the legislature of Michigan, raising the age of consent to fourteen years, was concluded at Cassopolis. Charles Etter of Marcellus was charged with betraying Minnie Blood last July, she being under fourteen. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and he was sentenced to fourteen years in the state prison at Jackson.

Lars Larson, Halvor T. Halverson, Ole Peterson and Peder B. Holden, Norwegians living near La Grace, North Dakota came to town in a wagon, and after drinking freely started home. They engaged in a general quarrel, and Larson was shot through the head with a revolver, but by which one of his companions is not known. Larson was killed almost instantly. The men have been arrested.

A singular case developed at Cincinnati in the efforts of George Duffy and George Draess to convict each other of having drowned a man in the canal. They asked a colored coachman if the police were after them, there had been no suspicion of a crime. But that question led to their arrest, and they confessed that they fell in with a stranger whom they made drunk, and then pushed him into the canal. Each accuses the other of being the murderer. A man named Barnes of Newport, is missing and is thought to be the man.

J. G. Spendlove, a broker, and Gust Werner, a merchant tailor, who have for some time past occupied the same business house at Topeka, Kansas, had a disagreement in Spendlove's office as to the terms of the leases which they held. No one was present at the time, but five shots were heard by parties on the opposite side of the street, and on entering the building they found Werner had been killed and Spendlove was dying. Both had been shot in the neck. Spendlove was only able to gasp a few words, and said: "Werner shot me and then killed himself.

While Cora, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Frank Palmer of Stockbridge, Mass., was returning home from singing school with her younger brother, in a carriage, an unknown man sprang into the wagon, dragged Cora to the ground and feloniously assaulted her. The brother defended his sister as he could, breaking a lantern over the villian's head and then he drove rapidly home and gave the alarm. Mr. Palmer is one of the wealthiest and most prominent citizens of the place, and the affair has caused intense excitement. A few minutes before the assault on Cora, Mrs. William Hamilton was attacked in nearly the same locality by presumably the same scoundrel, but her screams frightened him away.

As an east-bound Atlantic & Pacific passenger train was pulling through Canyon Diablo west of Winslow, Ariz., it was boarded by four masked men. The train was moving slow and the robbers mounted the locomotive without any difficulty. By threats of shooting they forced the engineer to stop the train. One of the men stood guard over the locomotive while the others took the fireman to the express car and compelled by threats to call to the Wells-Fargo express messenger to open the door. He did so and the robbers entered and searched the messenger. He had between $200 and $300 in packages for local points, but the safe containing several thousand dollars was not touched, and no demand was made on the messenger to unlock it. None of the passengers were molested, and from the meager account obtained there appear to have been no effort on their part to protect the Wells-Fargo property. The four men then left, going south from Winslow. Sheriff and posse were sent in pursuit.

Foreign Jottings.

In Paris a gloomy feeling prevails regarding the position of the credit houses, especially of the Banque de Paris, which is much discussed. It is reported that the bank is deeply involved in the copper troubles and is not expected to pay a dividend for the past year. Moreover, it is stated that the directors of the concern announced at a banker's meeting that they were unable to subscribe for the relief of the Comptoir d'Escompte, having themselves lent £27,000,000 on copper warrants.

The North German Lloyd's steamer, Graf Bismark, from Buenos Ayres, has arrived at Bremen, She reports that on her outward passage the Belgian emigrants, comprising her compliment of passengers, rebelled against the quantity of food served to them, and some of the mutineers threw their food in the faces of the officers. They then attempted to capture the provision room by storm, and were with great difficulty prevented by the crew from obtaining posession of it. During the fight the mutineers cut one of the boats adrift. The rioting was finally quelled and the leaders of the mutiny were put n irons.

Somewhere about the fall of 1883 a man named George Cook came to Winnipeg from Montana and since that time has been engaged in various undertakings. For some time he worked at Pincher Creek. Among his other occupations he kept a stopping place at Scott's Coulee. While there he was married by Rev. W. Bridgman to one Josephine Munroe, a daughter of Francois Munroe, who is now living at the South Piegan agency. Subsequently is was discovered that Cook had a wife living in Oregon. He has left for Montana, taking wife No. 2 with him.

News in General.

Charles H. Forth & Co., of Boston the second largest pork-packing firm east of Chicago, made an assignment. Liabilities cannot yet be given, but will probably be $750,000.

The March statistical report of the department of agriculture gives the result of the investigation through its correspondents and agents and the merchant millers and the records of commercial inspection of the average weight of wheat by states. The general average is 56.5 pounds, the lowest average of six years. In the spring wheat region the range is from 53.5 pounds in Dakota to 55 pounds in Nebraska. It makes the crop equivalent to 391,000,000 bushels of 60 pounds each, less by nearly 25,000,000 bushels than the quantity in measured bushels.

About one hundred delegates from the Farmers' alliance, and many others from the Knights of Labor of Dakota, were in attendance at the alliance at Huron, D. T., They unanimously and by rising vote agreed to support the Sioux Falls constitution. A committee on resolution was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Chase and Smith of Sioux Falls, Lawrence of Spink, Dow of Kingsbury, Patten of Miner. They examined the capital scheme by which stock is being sold, and the plan is to locate it on the prairie and sell lots to remunerate the stockholders. Each stockholder is a voter. If, as election approaches, they find they cannot locate the capital at their own town, they can sell out to some town that will pay the most for the stock in their hands.

The Oklahoma boomers having fled to the woods upon the appearance of Lieut. Carson and his body of soldiers, scouts were sent out to hunt them down, but instructed to not resort to violence. In what is known as the Crutch county, northeast of Oklahoma station, quite a large number of boomers had gathered around William Beck. Among the number were his daughter, a relative, Samuel Anderson and an old man named William Adams. Their property had been destroyed in a former raid and they cherished bitter animosity against the troops. Their hiding place was discovered by an Indian scout and reported to Lieut. Carson, who sent a detachment after them. After being disarmed the boomers fought with clubs and stones, but were soon compelled to surrender. Several soldiers received slight wounds, but none serious. There has been great excitement among the boomers since the conflict, and while all express a determination to make similar resistance, they are seeking safer hiding places.

Shocking Tragedy in New Jersey.

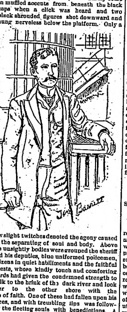
After Ferdinand Mutter, a milkman living on the road between Lyons Farms and Irvington, N. J. had left home to serve his customers, Joseph Salseman, his hired man, enticed the three children of the family into the barn, tied their hands and feet and buried them in the hay, went to the house, attempted to assault Mrs. Mutter, and, on being desperately resisted, struck her on the head with a hammer, rendering her unconscious. Salseman, then ransacked every trunk, box and drawer in the house in search of money, but overlooked a pocketbook containing $150 and secured only a silver watch. While he was thus engaged Mrs. Mutter regained unconsciousness, but fearing another attack, she lay still, feigning death. Salseman, before leaving the house, bent over her and felt her face, and was apparently satisfied that she was dead. He then went out. Mrs. Mutter, thinking that he had gone away, staggered to the door, intending to give the alarm. Salseman had not left the premises, and on seeing him Mrs. Mutter started to run, but was overtaken and dragged into the barn by Salseman, who there struck her twice on the head with the hammer, and while she lay senseless on the floor beat her with a club until it seemed certain that she was dead. He then fled, and has not yet been found. Soon after he left one of the children managed to crawl out from under the hay, and seeing his mother lying covered with blood he ran out and cried for help. A neighbor responded, and Mrs. Mutter was carried into the house and cared for and the children released. The woman's skull is fractured in three places, and she is not expected to live. Mutter became crazed when he returned home and found his wife dying. He started to Newark, but instead of informing the police at headquarters, where he was advised to go, he wandered about seeking Salseman in various saloons, and this delay gave Salseman a good start.

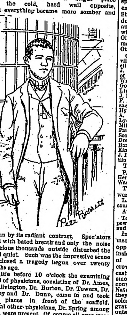
TWO LIVES TAKEN.

The Lives of the Barrett Boys Are Demanded by the Law Before Maturity.

A Touch of the Lever Launches Both Into a Void That Has No Bottom.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Special March 22.—The Barretts were "hanged by the neck until dead." The last spasmodic exclamations, "Have mercy on us," had hardly come in muffled accents from beneath the black caps when a click was heard and two black shrouded figures shot downward and hung nerveless below the platform. Only a few slight twitches denoted the agony caused by the separating of soul and body. Above the unsightly bodies were grouped the sheriff and his deputies, blue uniformed policemen, citizens in quiet habiliments and the faithful priests, whose kindly touch and comforting words had given the condemned strength to walk to the brink of the dark river and look over to the other shore with the eye of faith. One of these had fallen upon his knees, and with trembling lips was following the fleeting souls with benedictions. A ray of sunshine came through the prison window and made a bright place on the cold, hard wall opposite, and everything became more somber and solemn by its radiant contrast. Spectators stood with bated breath and only the noise of curious thousands outside disturbed the awful quiet. Such was the impressive scene that closed a tragedy begun over twenty months ago.





A little before 10 o'clock the examining board of physicians, consisting of Dr. Ames, Dr. Kilvington, Dr. Burton, Dr. Towers, Dr. Quinby and Dr. Dunn, came in and took their places in front of the scaffold. Several other physicians, Dr. Spring among them, were present. Of course all eyes were directed to the scaffold. The unpainted pine structure with its awful suggestions of death and doom was anything but pleasant to look upon, and yet the scaffold architect, Chris Spiel, who was on hand all the time, regarded it with quiet satisfaction as a triumph of his art.

Finally the ends of the dangling nooses were thrown to one side and rested upon the braces of the cross beam. The ladder was taken down and everything was positively decided to be all right. The carpenter then stepped forward, and, taking his rule and pencil out of his pocket, marked the space upon the traps within which the men were to stand. He did it with the cool business air with which he would have marked out the pattern for a bootjack.

At two minutes past 11 o'clock the silence in the room of execution had become impressive, the doors were thrown open and the doomed men were ushered into the scene of their execution. They were accompanied by the deputy sheriffs and by three Roman Catholic priests The priests were Father James McGolrick, Father Henry McGolrick and Father Corbett. They were in their churchly habiliments, and as they passed up the steps of the scaffold held aloft the crucifix and repeated many times, "Jesus have mercy on us." Tim Barrett was given the place on the right side of the scaffold. He knelt at once and Father Corbett kneeling by him administered the spiritual hope that the occasion demanded. The priest held his face close to that of the doomed man, who, under those awful circumstances, was encouraged to implore for divine mercy. He was not able to rise alone, but was assisted by Deputy Sheriff Rauen, who then bound the straps about his arms and his legs after the usual custom. Tim was very much agitated. It was with difficulty that he could stand and as each motion of the deputies he shuddered convulsively and rolled his eyes about in despair. And yet he repeated with the priest the petitions for divine mercy. When the black cap was pulled down over his eyes his voice could be heard in muffled tones beneath crying "Have mercy upon us." At the other side of the scaffold stood the younger brother, Pete.

PETE THE FIRM ONE.

He was much more composed than Tim. He looked all about the room, and even inspected the scaffold. It was only at the very last that he seemed on the point of giving way. Father Henry McGolrick performed for him the offices that Father Corbett did for Tim. Deputies Leroy, Peterson and James Riley adjusted the straps and black caps. One of the last things that Pete said was to ask that he be placed a little further forward so that his back would not strike when he went down. At one time he was about to fall and asked the deputy to hold him up. Finally the nooses were adjusted and all was in readiness except for the priests to finish the litany. All but the deputies who supported the men stood back. The low moans of the men could be heard from beneath the sable covering of their faces, still asking for mercy.

"Oh, Lord, I am innocent," Pete was heard to say.

Asked if they had any final request to make each of the men made some whispered statement to his spiritual comforter.

THE LAST MOMENT.

The last moment had come. The fathers stepped back, still uttering their prayers for the salvation to the two men, when Sheriff Ege touched the fatal lever, and at exactly 11:14 the trap fell and the two bodies dropped into the yawning gap beneath them. As was shown afterwards the necks of both men were broken instantly. Pete made more of a struggle. He convulsively lifted himself up several times in spasmodic efforts at respiration. But they were slight, and in a moment the body was almost motionless. The pressure on Tim's neck must have been greater. He slightly raised himself, drawing up his knees once or twice, and that was all. The body swayed slightly and come to rest with the face looking out from the scaffold. Pete's body faced the other way. The physicians at once stepped forward and with watch in hand attentively noted the heart beats of the expiring men until no traces of life were left. At 11:26 Tim Barrett was pronounced dead, and one minute later the same was said of Pete, thirteen minutes after the dropping of the traps. For several minutes the dense crowd had hardly moved a muscle When the sheriff announced that all was over they were still loth to leave the room, and it was only by excessive efforts that the deputies succeeded in clearing the space of all but the physicians, the newspaper representatives and a few others. The bodies were then cut down and the physicians made the usual examination. The necks of both men were found to be dislocated. They were stretched out upon the floor under the scaffold and the coverings removed, showing the ghastly faces of the murderers disclosed not yet firmly composed in death. Undertaker Connolly took charge of them at that point. The last loiterer retired and the execution was finally over.

SCENES IN THE JAIL.

Some of the Spectators of the Execution and How They Behaved While Waiting for the Dread Event.

The spectators began to assemble in the room where the hanging was to take place as early as 9 o'clock. At 10 o'clock the room was densely packed. The lofty apartment presented a very curious appearance. The scaffold was build in the center, the floor being on a level with the floor of the tier of cells on the west side of the room. Opposite, and on the east side, was another row of cells, in front of which was built a temporary platform for the use of the spectators. Every inch of space was utilized by the lookers-on. This brought many of them so near to the scaffold that they could touch it with their hands The spectators included many of the sheriffs and ex-sheriffs of the state. Among them were Sheriff A. W. De Frate of Douglas, who conducted the execution of the murderer, Lee, and Sheriff A. Brandenburg of Fergus Falls, who performed the same office for the man Olong. The experience of these gentlemen made them valuable aids to Sheriff Ege. Other sheriffs present were:

Gilbert Anderson of Nobles, Hans Field of Renville, H. Nupson of Fillmore, W. E. Mitchell of Freeborn, George Munroe of Stevens, J. E. Getman of Dodge, G. N. Jansvold of Yellow Medicine, Mark M. Woolley of Wright, Wood of Jackson, A. F. Anderson of Goodhue, H. M. Richardson of Olmsted, Lindholm of Grant, Bean of Ramsey, J. M. Markham, Aitkin; C. W. Lenfest, Anoka; F. D. Du Toll, Carver; Charles Andrews, Chisago; William W. Barlow, Cottonwood; John H. Hyland, Dakota; John B. Schmid, Brown; A. D. Brown, Lac qui Parle; J. F. Remore, Lyon; N. M. Holm, Meeker; A. F. Howard, Mille Lacs; Henry Rasicot, Morrison; Paul Shavory, St. Louis; Theodore Welland, Scott; D. R. Houlton, Sherburne; William Dretchko, Sibley; A. W. Kraemer, Stearns; J. C. Barncard, Steele; David Crotte, Wabasha; C. M. Kingsley, Waseca; C. P. Holcombe, Washington; J. P. Stemper, Watonwan; J. S. Cameron, Wilkin; Silas Braley, Winona.

The past sheriffs present were:

P. P. Swensen of Hennepin; William Brackett, Hennepin; Fred Zwinskey, Polk; Hugh Wilson, Waseca.

The visiting sheriffs from other states were:

L. D. Fieldley, Dakota; H. Anderson, Bayfield county, Wis.; E. Bartlett, Sargent county, Dak.

Among the deputy sheriffs present were:

Tousley of Le Sueur, E. B. Herbert of Chippewa, H. W. Harmer, Dodge, C. Hunt, Houston, and H. Brown, Olmsted.

In the cells to the rear of the scaffold were many well known faces of citizens. The opposite cells were likewise covered, while inside them were the telegraphic instruments of the newspaper correspondents. The crowd was orderly though not at all cast down with gloom. A good many smoked and all of them indulged freely in conversation during the interval of waiting. Naturally enough, as the minutes passed by, they began to feel more and more the solemnity of the occasion. Through the grated windows could be seen the throng outside, and occasionally the sound of noise of shouting as the shrill calls of the newsboys were heard. During the period of waiting one would never have imagined from the faces of the spectators that they were waiting there to see two men deprived of the blessings of life.

THE CROWD OUTSIDE.

Five Thousand People Assemble Around the Jail but Get Not a Sight of the Proceedings Within.

As early as 8 o'clock in the morning knots of people began to gather in the vicinity of the jail, and the number steadily increased. The early comers were very curious. They took a look at the grim building from all sides, gazed at each window in turn, and would have made an even more intimate acquaintance with affairs, but for the cordon of policemen. At 11 o'clock at least five thousand people were crowded into the street. The space from the low wall near the jail, across the street and up to the doors of the little Lutheran church, was densely packed with human beings, all with their eyes fastened intently on the narrow grating through which a partial glimpse could be obtained of the proceedings within. The crowd was composed mostly of men of the laboring class, with a very liberal leaven of curious women and a fair sprinkling of infants in arms. As the fatal hour of 11:15 arrived the people began to look nervously at their watches, gradually they pressed closer into the middle of the street and focused their eyes even more intently on the grated windows. Dark forms could be seen passing to and fro on the scaffold, and the boys in the tree tops even claimed to be able to see all the preparations for the final act. At 11:14 the policemen on the wall and the crowd nearest the jail heard the click of the traps as they fell simultaneously.

RELUCTANT TO LEAVE.

The crowd dispersed reluctantly. The teams blockading the side street first drove off, the boys in the trees dropped nimbly to the ground and went away whistling merrily, and then the main crowd of men and women began slowly to move off. But a motley throng of a few hundred of morbidly curious men remained. They were bound to get at least a glimpse of the two men, even though dead. Here they were disappointed, however, for by a clever little ruse the bodies were removed at the rear door of the jail and spirited away to Connolly's morgue, where the final disposition will be made of their remains until their shipment to Omaha. Mrs. Barrett had requested that no one be allowed to see her dead boys, and her wishes in the matter were acceded to.

Tollefson's Widow.

Mrs. Tollefson, widow of the murdered street car driver, Thomas Tollefson, made her way through the crowd and into the court house about fifteen minutes before the hanging. She expressed a wish to witness the execution. The lady's desire was communicated to a couple of detectives, who thought the idea was a remarkable one, and were rather averse to allowing her the privilege. A few personal friends of the lady, however, advised her not to visit the jail, and she withdrew from the crowd. It is stated by a deputy sheriff that Mrs. Tollefson had recently expressed the hope that her husband's murderers would not suffer the death penalty, but be given a life sentence.

Fruitless Search for Tascott.

CHICAGO, March 17.—The international chase for Tascott has ended in a failure. A. J. Stone, son-in-law of the fugitive's supposed victim, Millionaire Snell, returned empty handed to Chicago after a fruitless journey of over eight thousand miles. Mr. Stone was accompanied by Detectives McDonald and Williams. Following a clue which took them to the Canadian Northwest, the pursuit led to the Pacific coast, there a capture was made, but the prisoner like so many others proved to be the wrong man. Mr. Stone talked quite freely, but remarked with significance: "It must be understood that I choose to reserve names for various reasons, some bearing upon the future. About a month ago," said Mr. Stone, "I received from a law firm in Minneapolis a letter stating that they had a client, a resident of Winnipeg, who had some authoritative information as to what he believed to be Tascott's whereabouts. My inquiries following showed the suspect's description tallied more closely with that of Tascott than any I have yet seen. The young man was said to be employed in a tieing camp near Rat Portage, a town on the Canadian Pacific, 250 miles east of Winnipeg. I left Chicago with four others, including Ald. Badenoch, and three weeks ago to-night we then went to Winnipeg and thence to the tieing camp. We arrived there to discover that a young man such as described had worked there until about a week before. He had some time prior received a postal card from a friend, a young man in Rat Portage, stating that there was a draft there from his father, who lived in a certain town in Southern California. The contractor held back the card for two or three weeks, until the young man had worked out a debt. Upon receiving the card the young men left at once. We then bore down upon Rat Portage only to learn that both young men had moved to another tieing camp, where we again arrived to learn that they had moved on to Winnipeg, stating that the first young fellow's father in Southern California was dying, and they would hasten to his bedside. Now, we obtained some of the suspect's writing in the first tieing camp, and it was Tascott's own hand in fac simile. We hurried to Winnipeg, and there at the bank added the suspect's signature to our stock of evidence. It seemed certain that Tascott had written that name, and no doubt remained in our minds that we were on the right trail at last. Out of Winnipeg we ran the scent to a certain nameless town in the Northwest Territory near the American line. Thence we pursued it hot to Vancouver, and thence by boat to Seattle. The next jump brought us to Tacoma, and there the twain had separated. Our man," continued Mr. Stone, "went to Portland by rail, and his companion shipped for San Francisco by sea. From Portland the track ran to San Francisco, and we reached it a week late. It seemed probable then that the town in Southern California whence the draft issued was their destination, and thither I posted my companions. Suspecting that this feature might be a ruse, I remained to watch the outbound China steamer of that week, and saw her put forth without Tascott. A telegram reached me that our man was caught in the Southern California town and was in custody. I hastened thither. One glance at the prisoner sent my heart into my boots. He was not Tascott, although he resembled him in many points. He was a young fellow of good family, and we released him without the satisfaction of knowing for whom he was suspected. It was the disappointment of my life," said Mr. Stone. "We were all sure that if we could find the man who signed the Winnipeg draft, whose description we had and upon whose trail we then were, that we would have Tascott. I will not say that I think Tascott is in that country, but he may be, I have other clues of which I am hopeful."

Career of a Desperado.

Mat Zimmerman, the cowboy desperado who was captured in Utah, recently, has been delivered to the Nebraska authorities, and is now awaiting indentification and the execution of the death sentence. Zimmerman is a young man, but his record is a startling one. Seven years ago, when he was but 19, he raided the ranches in Hitchcock Co., Neb., in company with Courtney Belmont, a young Mexican, and stole a big band of ponies. With these they rode off toward the east, and were soon followed by Sheriff Jack Woods and a motley posse of cowboys. Near the hamlet of Minden, in Kearney county, the stolen ponies were found at pasture on the prairie, and, while his men were busy securing them, Woods and one deputy rode into town to look for the thieves.

They found them at supper in the Prairie Home. Woods without much thought of resistance went to the door of the dining room, gun in hand, and sung out for the desperadoes to surrender. Quick as a flash, Belmont, who had his pistol laying on his lap, made a snap shot, and poor Woods fell dead. Zimmerman, with an equally quick shot, wounded the Deputy, and then both rushed for the door. As they were leaving the room they fired another volley, as if to intimidate any one from following them, and R. B. Kelly, a guest who was trying to get his wife stowed away out of danger, was killed. On the porch they met John Collins, a mail carrier, who had just driven up, and deliberately shooting him down, they rode off toward the Kansas line.

There was a general turnout in pursuit, and even the state militia was ordered to join in the hunt. A week later Belmont was killed by a farmer named Fontz, at whose house the thieves had stopped. Zimmerman, who seemed to be completely unnerved by his partner's death, was easily captured. He was also taken back to Windem, tried, and sentenced to death, but the supreme court reversed the verdict on the ground that, Sheriff Woods had no warrant, Zimmerman and Belmont were justified in resisting arrest. A second trial was had and again conviction followed and the death sentence was imposed. Again the supreme court reversed the findings. Back Zimmermen went before the same judge, Jaslin, and for the third time he was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. The usual appeal to the supreme court was taken, and while it was pending the prisoner's lawyer hit upon a novel method of securing his client's release. He succeeded in convincing a United States commissioner that he had the right, pending the hearing, to admit Zimmerman to bail. He fixed the bonds at $10,000 straw bail was furnished and Zimmerman levanted. This was four years ago, and nothing was heard of Zimmerman until his recapture in Utah. Meantime his case has been decided against him by the supreme court, and the chances of his being hanged are very strong

Sad Story of a Ruined Man.

Herman Bernicke was arraigned in the police court at Chicago charged with burglary, having been caught in the act of stealing a box of carpenter's tools. To the magistrate he told the following story, which he declares to be as true as gospel: "Thirteen years ago I left Germany for South Australia. I had a good wife and five as pretty children as ever man was blessed with. I had some money and I put it into a sheep ranch and was very successful; and in four years I had as big a ranch as any in my country and was worth not far from £50,000. The first misfortune that came to me was the loss of three of my children, who died within a month of the Australian fever. The blow had hardly fallen, it seemed, before the other two were taken from me in the same way. With the loss of my darlings went my wife's love. She eloped with a man whom I thought to be my dearest friend on earth. I sold my farm at a sacrifice and started in pursuit. I hunted them from town to town, lost the train, almost had them at Vancouver, but they slipped away. At Boise City, Idaho, I was compelled to dismiss my detective as my money was running low. From there I followed the guilty pair through Montana and Dakota and down to St. Paul. I was on the point of arresting them there when they slipped away, having bribed the officer who was after them, and, as I thought, came to Chicago. In this, however, I was mistaken, as they went to St. Louis. When I got here I was penniless and it was to get money to continue the pursuit that I stole the tools. I'm ruined and I guess I'm nearly mad." The court thought it would be a mercy to send the man to Bridewell, as he seemed to be on the verge of a collapse. He fined Bernicke $5 and the Australian chase ended.

At a banquet in Rome Cardinal Parocchi the pope's vicar, said that if in the future it should become necessary for the pope to leave Europe he would find a sure refuge among the American bishops who would receive him with honorable hospitality.

Sensational Elopement.

One of Chief Justice Fuller's Eight Daughters Elopes With a Chicago Young Man.

MILWAUKEE, March 20.—Miss Pauline Fuller, the fifth daughter of Chief Justice Fuller, was married here last night at the Kirby house by a justice of the peace. The groom was J. Matt Aubery, Jr., of Chicago, and it was a runaway match. When the 6:30 train arrived last evening, a petite woman was helped off the steps of the parlor car by a well built young man with a smooth face. The lady was closely veiled and was escorted to a carriage by her companion. They were driven at once to the Kirby house, where they registered. No room was assigned to them, and the lady and her companion spent the early evening in the hotel parlors. About 9 o'clock the young man came down stairs and informed the clerk that he wanted a justice of the peace. Inside of fifteen minutes, Justice Gregory arrived. There was hurried consultation, and then the young man brought the blushing young lady forward. The ceremony was a brief one, and the justice, who is a very prosaic old gentleman, put on no extra frills. He did not know that the bride was the daughter of the chief justice of the United States, and neither did any of those who were present outside the contracting parties. When the ceremony was concluded the old justice called for witnesses, and two young men were captured in the billiard room and ran to affix their signatures to the necessary document. The knot was legally and firmly spliced. Mrs. Aubery, nee Pauline Fuller, is nineteen years of age, highly educated and a remarkably handsome woman. J. Matt Aubery, Jr., is twenty-three years of age. He is the son of the general Western agent of the Merchants' Despatch Fast Freight line. J. M. Aubery, Sr., has been a resident of Chicago since 1876, when he left Milwaukee. He is well known here, and Congressman Isaac Van Schaick is one of his most intimate friends. Young Aubery is employed in his father's office in Chicago. He is

A HANDSOME YOUNG FELLOW.

As near as can be learned the acquaintance of the bride and groom began about three years ago. Justice Fuller, who was then plain Lawyer Fuller, lived with his eight daughters on Lake avenue, only a short distance from the home of young Aubery. The young people first met at a party given in the neighborhood. An attachment sprung up between them, and when it became apparent it was opposed by the Fullers. Miss Pauline declared, however, that she would marry whom she pleased, and her father recognized her right to do as she pleased. Mrs. Fuller continued to oppose the match. About this time Lawyer Fuller was named as chief justice of the United States. Mrs. Fuller packed up and carried Miss Pauline away to Washington with the other Misses Fuller. About the first of last January Miss Pauline came to Chicago, and has since remained in that city visiting friends of the family. The story of the elopement of the young pair is an interesting one and demonstrated that young Aubery has cut his eye teeth. To begin with, he hired two detectives to shadow him and his affianced until they left Chicago. His object was to learn if any one was following them and to prevent the young lady being rescued. It was early in the afternoon when he met Miss Fuller, and a Chicago candy store was the trysting place. They boarded a Milwaukee & St. Paul train at the union depot at 3:30 o'clock and came direct to this city. The correspondent called on Justice Gregory early this morning and greatly astonished that gentleman by informing him that he had married a daughter of the chief justice of the United States. On looking at the marriage certificate, however, he was more surprised that the fact had not struck him before, for there before his eyes were the full names of the chief justice and his wife, as well as those of the groom's father and mother. Young Mr. Aubery proposes to remain in Milwaukee a few days.

RECEIVED CONGRATULATIONS.

Young Aubery formerly lived in Milwaukee and has many friends here who called to extend congratulations, and before noon he had received at least thirty telegrams of congratulations from friends in Chicago and elsewhere. Mrs. Aubery remained quietly in the hotel all day, and her husband says they may remain here for a few days until he can arrange a house for his bride in the office of his father, a freight line agent.

"No, I haven't heard from Washington yet," he said to-night. "In fact, there has hardly been time. Oh, I think my wife's father will look at it in a sensible way. He is a sensible man, very."

Mr. Aubery interrupted his chat with a gleeful laugh and referring to the story that he had employed Pinkerton detectives to assist in the escape of himself and his bride from Chicago, said:

I had protection, but it was not furnished by Pinkerton men. You see I know well enough that we were both old enough not to require anybody's consent to our marriage, but I was closely watched and took every precaution. You know, when a detective wants to hold a man, he can easily trump up something that will delay him long enough to spoil all his plans.

Mr. Aubery, armed with a big cane, went out to see some of his acquaintances, and was pointed out to an admiring crowd of loungers about the hotel corridors as the man who ran away with the chief justice's daughter. Mrs. Aubery preferred not to be interviewed, but a glimpse was caught of her as she passed along the corridor to her room. She is precisely five feet five inches in height, and has a great abundance of chestnut brown hair which, curling around her face and neck, makes a very pretty frame for a very pretty face. Her eyes are gray and thoughtful and her nose aquiline. Her lips are inclined to be full, and the general character expressed by her face is of resolute firmness, which would countenance but little opposition to any plan which she had made up her mind to. Her figure is excellent, her hands and feet—albeit she is from Chicago—are small, and her tailor-made traveling suit unexceptionable in fit and style. An amusing part of the interview was the fact that Mr. Aubery almost invariably spoke of his wife as "Miss Fuller," and would then look a little confused at not having become accustomed to his new relation to her, and correct himself by saying "Mrs. Aubery." Young Aubery's parents have not been opposed to the match, he says, and he anticipates no trouble from them. He is also sanguine that his wife's parents will be reconciled to the marriage now that it has taken place.

THE NEWS IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 20.—The Evening Critic has the following:

Chief Justice Fuller started for the supreme court shortly before 10 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Fuller had some shopping to do, and she took him down with her in the carriage. Mrs. Aubery had not telegraphed the fact of her marriage before her parents left. Mrs. Fuller did not return from her shopping until late this afternoon, and so she did not know of her daughter's marriage in time to say anything to the afternoon papers. Friends of the family in Chicago telegraphed the news to friends in this city and it got to be quite generally talked of this afternoon. It was the topic of most of the conversations in West end parlors, and everybody seemed disposed to sympathize with Mrs. Fuller, who cannot but be annoyed by her daughter's action. Whether she will be forgiven nobody knows, but Mr. Fuller has never been known as a family tyrant any more than he has as anything else disagreeable, and however little his new son-in-law is to his taste, his daughter will doubtless be forgiven. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller very naturally decline to have anything to say on the subject.

In the interview, Miss Maud Fuller said:

I don't believe it. I don't believe Pauline would do anything like that. Any way, if she intended to get married she would have told us so. No, we haven't received any word from her to-day, and there has been no telegram received here for my father. Of course Pauline would let us know if she had been married, and I don't believe it all. Perhaps Pauline used to be a little fond of Mr. Aubery, but that was all over, I think, long ago. I never knew of their being engaged, and Pauline and Mr. Aubery were just friends, and have been for years. Pauline was very much attached to Chicago, and this winter she went back there on a visit, and I suppose this talk about an elopement was caused by that. I shall not believe that Pauline is married until I shall hear it from herself.

Miss Pauline is not well known in Washington. She came here last October and only stayed about two and a half months, making but few acquaintances. She is only seventeen years old, and left the city before the social season had fairly commenced, it being her intention not to make her debut until next winter. She was fond of the theater and could frequently be seen at the two leading play houses. Her most intimate friend in Washington was Miss Eleanor Breckinridge, daughter of the Kentucky congressman. She did not seem to like Washington and frequently expressed her desire to be back in Chicago. The elopement overshadowed all other topics of conversation in social circles here, and much sympathy was expressed for Mrs. Fuller.

WEST FOSSTON

IS THE

☞ CHICAGO OF THE NORTHWEST. ☜

NEXT WEEK

WE WILL TELL YOU

WHY!

The committee sent to St. Paul to look after the bonding bill returned with the report that Sampson had introduced two bills, one providing for the issue of $25,000 each for two railroads, the other for $50,000 for manufacturing purposes, both so drawn as to be unavailable and evidently drawn for that very purpose. The committee conferred with Mr. S. and tried to get in amendments that would render the bills available, Mr. S. would agree to allow the amended bill to go through without his opposition then would fly the track and balk the whole business. The plain fact of the matter is that Mr. S. has set up his opinion against the will of the people and is determined that their bill shall not go through and he don't seem to care what kind of means he is obliged to employ to defeat their wishes. It is said that he claims that the people are not in favor of issuing the bonds. Well, don't he know enough to know that the passage of the bill does not issue the bonds and if the people don't want the bonds issued they will vote them down? He seems to think that he is the guardian of the people, knows more about what they want than they do, and is bound to defeat them even though he has to resort to underhanded, disreputable means to do it. How long will our people endure such nonsense before they give him such an emphatic expression of their opinion as shall warm his ear-wax? The idea of a man of that calibre sitting himself up as a dictator general is preposterous! Even a king generally consults the wishes of his subjects on matters of public interest, but Sampson assumes to act regardless of their well-known wishes and he is only a servant of the people.

The bill granting an extension of time to the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad was killed in the senate last week our own senator being one of the gang who committed the murder. It was the rich and powerful corporation, headed by Jim Hill that demanded that the bill be indeffinitely postponed and Sampson voted to indeffinitely postpone. The poor settler on his little claim in this district would have been vastly benefited by the building of this independent line of road that would furnish him a ready home market, but Sampson, by his vote said the poor settler shall not have those inestimable benefits. Whatever his reasons may have been Mr. Sampson assumed a great responsibility when he decided to stand in the way of the progress of this country by voting against the D. & W. extension bill. Mr. Sampson in this action has struck a blow at the prosperity of this country that years of his life can never repay, and has disappointed hundreds of his friends in this district.

A Mass Meeting.

A meeting of the citizens of Crookston was called at the opera house on Tuesday evening to listen to the report of the committee having in charge the matter of bonding the city to aid in the construction of a new railroad, about 500 being in attendance. Judge Montague, from the committee made a report, showing Senator Sampson's determined opposition to the measure and asked for an expression of the sentiment. Many speeches were made endorsing the efforts the committee have made, and condemning in unmeasured terms the action of Senator Sampson. A resolution was passed embodying the same sentiments and a committee consisting of two in each ward appointed to secure names to a petition asking the senate to pass the original bond bill. The committee was instructed to go ahead and secure if possible the passage of the bill. The case has reached a point where it resolves itself into the stubborn opposition of the senator against the reasonable wishes of the people who feel very indignant at his attitude in the premises. He has had time enough given him in which to pass the bill if he intends to do so, and as it has become very evident that he does not intend to if he can help it our people justly feel indignant. If the fact that our people earnestly desire that bill to pass was never before made plain it should be perfectly so after the rousing meeting of Tuesday night, and Mr. Sampson will consult his best welfare if he will withdraw his opposition to the will of the people.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication March 29th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delived by Clement A. Brown and J. F. Brown, her husband, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 19th day of April, A. D. 1887, and duly recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of April, 1887, at 1:40 o'clock p. m. in book 30 of mortgages, on pages 441 to 445 inclusive. And the said default having continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared to be due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of said default and declaration aforesaid there is claimed to be due, and is due and payable on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of sixteen hundred forty and 60-100 (1640.60) dollars, and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise have been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: Lots three (3) and four (4) of section four (4), and lot one (1) of section five (5) all in township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty-four (44), and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter (sw¼ of the sw¼) of Section thirty-three. (33). in Township one hundred and forty-eight, (148) Range forty-four, (44) containing in all one hundred and fifty-six (156) acres more or less according to the United States government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest and twenty-five (25) dollars attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage, to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 13th day of May, A. D. 1889, at the hour of two o'clock p. m., subject to redemption at any time within one year in manner provided by law.

Twine Prices Must Fall

The "Trade" to Hold a Conference in New York.

WHAT AGITATION DOES

It is Not Considered Good Policy Further to Antagonize the Farmer.

Minneapolis Journal.

New York, March 25.—It is said that a conference of the representatives of the twine trade will be held soon to consider the advisability of revising the schedule of prices in view of the feeling which is prevailing among the farmers in the West and Northwest, and which is manifesting itself in the formation of organizations for the boycotting of a supposed twine trust. A leading member of trade said that, while the present high prices were but the natural result of a limited supply and a demand of more than usual activity, yet that it might be considered good policy to make some reductions rather than antagonize the farmers in a greater degree.

The Farmer's Advantages.

Northwestern Agriculturist.

Many men look upon farming as requiring more hard work than other lines of business, without the enjoyments that other men have. Young men, particularly, are anxious to leave the farm for other pursuits, where they think they can make money faster and more easily. The many advantages of farm life are not appreciated as they should be. A writer on this subject, says: "Farming, though laborious, is one of the most healthful of avocations. This is a matter of fact, as demonstrated by tables of comparative longevity. From one of these we gather that the life of the agricultural class exceeds the general average by several years. And why should not a farmer's life be a healthy one? He is compelled to lead an active outdoor life, which keeps his blood in circulation and gives him a good appetite; for his meals he has pretty regular hours, and enjoys the best and most wholesome food, and plenty of it. He gets a full share of nature's sweet restorer—balmy sleep—nor does he have to pass through the bustle and excitement connected with many of the dwellers of our cities.

"Agriculture is one of the most honorable pursuits of men. The money made by farming is the cleanest, best money in the world. Agricultural pursuits fill the farmer's pockets at the expense of no other man. His gain is no man's loss, but the more he makes the better for the world at large.

Many look upon farming as consisting merely in the manual work of plowing, sowing, cultivating and harvesting, and in the care of stock; but this implies a great want of knowledge. Agriculture is a business that calls into requisition more varied talents and qualifications than any other profession. Education, mental strength and vigor pay as well on the farm as in every department of human labor. To get along successfully in any business or calling, business principles must be understood and carried out, and farming is no exception to the rule. At the same time it is equally necessary for the farmer to thoroughly understand all the routine duties of the farm; also the nature of his soil, and for what crops it is best adapted. Then, if he will only be practical, profit by experience, derive all the knowledge he can from books and the best agricultural journals, and be progressive, without, however, making any costly experiments, he should make farming profitable."

"It Takes a fool to Make a Fire."

The Prairie Farmer.

There is a good deal of truth in that adage. I have often seen the cook make the fire in the kitchen stove when I knew it wouldn't burn; but it always did. This same woman in some other things would correspond to the person named in the proverb. There are some men who keep cows—men not noted for brilliancy in anything else—who can get more profit out of a given amount of feed than other men who feed scientific rations, and have numerous feeding-tables at their tongue's ends. The reason of this is, that the one has a kind of feeding instinct, that teaches him what to feed, and when to feed it, while the other goes altogether by formulas, without regard to the characteristics of his cows.

This is not meant as a hint to leave feeding-table and well-balanced rations alone, but rather, to make your tables conform to your cows, and not try to make the cows conform to the tales. If one or the other is wrong, it is the feeding-table; the cow is right every time. Read your feeding-tables and your market reports at the same time; then, if you are going to buy feed you can do so in a money saving way. Because linseed-meal has more albuminoids in it than bran, it is not always best to buy it in preference to bran; you may pay too dear for your albuminoids in the linseed meal. Wheat straw is a very handy thing to have in abundance; it has a certain feeding value, and will of itself keep cattle from starving to death; but don't plume yourself on the fact that because its theoretical value is more than half as much as timothy hay, you have got a bonanza in the way of feed in that big straw-stack. You have got to balance your straw with a big pile of meal, and by that time the straw won't appear quite so valuable as you thought it to be, after reading the tables.

Right here must come in your feeding qualifications; you must use your own judgment, and not go altogether by the theoretical values of feeding stuffs. The straw will give bulk to your ration, and furnish some of the carbo-hydrates needed, and you can supply the other elements by bran, linseed and cotton-seed meals, then your straw-stack will be found to be a great help when hay and fodder are scarce; but don't count too much on the food value of the straw itself.

Clover and cows seem to be two of the best things to grow on the farm. With plenty of clover and hay, bran and linseed meal, you are well fixed for winter feeding, either for milk or butter. The more clover you grow, the more cows you can grow, and the more cows you grow, the more of other kinds of crops you can grow.

The cow business is a "growing" one in more than one sense. A. L. CROSBY.

The Twine Trust.

The Western Rural.

We are pleased to see some of our exchanges wheeling into line in defence of the grain growers against the twine trust rascality. That is much better, brethren, than to do an injustice to the farmer by opposition to the only course that is open to him to save himself from being robbed, simply because The Rural first proposed it. The Rural's rule is to advocate whatever is of benefit to the farmer, whoever may first propose it. It will not permit little jealousies to interfere with its mission. the farmer cannot afford to pay twenty-five cents for twine. He cannot afford to pay twenty cents for it. If he pays these prices he gets no profits. Now he cannot do worse if he takes some other course. But if he pays twenty-five cents this year, he will pay twenty-five cents ever after if he uses twine. If he refuse to pay it this year he will burst the trust and ruin some of the men engaged in it, thus teaching conspirators a lasting lesson, and henceforth twine will be sold at a reasonable price. If the farmer loses this opportunity to defend his rights and teach conspiracies against his interest a lesson that they never will forget, he ought not to complain again. It is a well defined battle between himself and a conspiracy. The conspiracy cannot, as so many others can, get support from other classes, and indirectly load the burden upon farmers. It must get the farmer's money or die. The farmer may refuse to burn oil, but the Standard Oil Company can say: All right; we can get along until you are tired out upon the support which we get from other classes. Gas monopolies coal monopolies, and many other combinations reach the farmer's pocket through other classes. The farmer has no good fair chance to rise in opposition to such robberies, for storekeepers and manufacturers pay the trust prices and tack the cost onto the goods that the farmers buy.

But in this twine business it is a stand up fight between the farmer and the plunderer. It is nobody else's fight directly, except that the binder men are interested. Nobody wants the twine, except the man in the harvest field; and we do not believe that he wants it at trust prices. Grain will be stacked loose this season. The enthusiasm is already great and growing. We are flooded with individual declarations and with resolutions against the contemplated twine robbery.

Our European Grain Market.

Philadelphia Textile Record.

There are some indications of the loss to this country of a considerable part of the European grain market. In 1887 we sent to Great Britain the equivalent of 98,334,584 bushels in flour and wheat. In 1888 the shipments of these two articles had fallen to 57,889,650 bushels. This is a decreaset of 40,444,934 bushels in two years, or an approximation to one-half. It is easy to see where this great trade has gone to. In the two years referred to the imports of wheat and flour to Great Britain from Russia and Roumania increased 38,704,005 bushels, or nearly as much as the whole amount of our loss. These figures deserve attentive consideration from Americans. They appear to indicate the permanent transfer of a great part of our grain trade to our rivals in the eastarn part of Europe. The only hope that we can regain it lies in the chance of failure of the crops of Eastren Europe, or in the possibility of a general war upon the Continent.

The Twine Trust

Curious Facts Brought Out by the Present Agitation.

Special to the Globe

Des Moines, Io., March 19.—The discussion of the twine trust, which is going on at every cross road in Iowa, is bringing out some thing of interest to the farmers and the general public. It seems that last season the twine manufacturers "forgot themselves," and while sisal twine was held at 13 to 14 cents per pound, one-quarter inch rope, made of exactly the same material in the same factory, by the same machinery, was sold at 8 to 10 cents per pound. This was a distinction with quite a difference, and another peculiar things is this: Dealers say that the unsold twine at the season's close, that for which they asked 14 cenes, was remanufactured—that is, by twisting say four lengths of twine together and make quarter-inch rope—and then sold at 9 cents per pound, or 5 cents less when it was called rope than when you bought it as twine. This year the manufacturers have got things fixed right, so that the wholesale price of twine and rope are the same, say 12 to 15 cents. The agitation of the twine question has already resulted in comparativly few contracts for twine for this year, either among dealers or farmers, and if the present determination is held to considerable grain will be "cut" loose and the old-fashioned cradle again used.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION

Of the Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company.

We, the undersigned, do hereby associate ourselves together for the purpose of incorporation under title one (1), of chapter thirty-four (34), of the general laws of the State of Minnesota, and the several acts of the legislature of said State, amendatory thereto, and for that purpose have adopted and signed the following articles of incorporation.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this corporation shall be

"The Duluth, Crookston and Northern Railroad Company."

The general nature of its business shall be to construct, maintain and operate for the transportation of persons and property for hire, a main line of railroad with one or more side-tracks, or lines of rails, and branch lines. The main line to commence at some point on Lake Superior at or near the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, extending thence in a westerly and northwesterly direction through the city of Crookston, to the international boundary line, at some point on the northern boundary line of Kittson County, in the State of Minnesota, with a branch line extending from said main line, at the city of Crookston, in a westerly direction through Polk County to the Red River. And also a branch line extending from the city of Crookston, in a southeasterly direction to the city of Brainerd, in Crow Wing County, Minnesota.

ART. 2. The principal place of business of said Railroad Company, shall be at Crookston, Minnesota.

ART. 3. The time of commencement of the said corporation shall be on the twelfth day of March, 1889, and the same shall continue for a period of fifty years.

ART. 4. The amount of the capital stock of the said corporation shall be five millions of dollars, ($5,000,000), and the same shall be divided into fifty thousand (50,000) shares of one hundred dollars ($100) each, and all capital stock subscribed for shall be paid in at the times and in the amounts required by resolution of the Board of Directors.

ART. 5. The highest amount of indebtedness or liability to which said corporation shall at any time be subject shall be five millions of dollars. ($5,000,000).

ART. 6. The names and places of residence of the persons forming this association for incorporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague,	Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone.	William Anglim,
John R. McKinnon,	John McLean,
John Locken.

all of whom reside at the City of Crookston, in Polk County, Minnesota.

ART. 7. The names of the first Board of Directors of said corporation are as follows:

Robert J. Montague.	Edmund M. Walsh.
Nathan P. Stone.	William Anglim.
John R. McKinnon.	John McLean.
John Locken.

The government of said corporation and the management of its affairs shall be vested in a board of seven (7) directors, to be elected by and from the stockholders annually, as hereafter provided. The annual meeting for such election shall be held at the office of the company at the City of Crookston, on the first Monday of February of each year, and until their successors are elected and qualified the said directors above named shall respectively continue to be such directors. The directors shall at their annual meeting to be held immediately after the annual meeting of the stockholders, elect a President, a Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Until the annual meeting as aforesaid:

Robert J. Montague shall be President.
John McLean, Vice-President.
Edmund M. Walsh, Secretary.
William Anglim, Treasurer.

In case of the resignation of any of said officers or directors, or their inability or refusal to act, their places shall be filled by the remainder of said Board of Directors, at any meeting called and held for that purpose. If for any cause the annual meeting for the election of the officers and directors shall not be held at the time above specified, it may be held at any other time that the directors may appoint for that purpose.

In witness whereof, the said incorporators have hereunto set their hands and seals this 16th day of February, A. D. 1889.

ROBERT J. MONTAGUE, (Seal.)

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication March 23th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delivered by Clement A. Brown and J. P. Brown, her husband, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 19th day of April, A. D. 1887, and duly recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 20th day of April, 1887, at 1:40 o'clock p. m., in book 30 of mortgages, on pages 441 to 445 inclusive. And the said default having continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared to be due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of said default and declaration aforesaid there is claimed to be due, and is due and payable on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of sixteen hundred forty and 60-100 (1640.60) dollars, and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise have been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: Lots three (3) and four (4) of section four (4), and lot one (1) of section five (5) all in township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty-four (44), and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter (sw¼ of the sw¼) of Section thirty-three, (33) in Township one hundred and forty-eight, (148) Range forty-four, (44) containing in all one hundred and fifty-six (156) acres more or less according to the United States government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest and twenty-five (25) dollars attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage, to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 13th day of May, A. D. 1889, at the hour of two o'clock p. m., subject to redemption at any time within one year in manner provided by law.

Dated Moorhead, Minnesota, March 15th, A. D. 1889.

CROOKSTON, - - MINN.

On Saturday morning, upon the assembling of the court, a memorial service was held in memory of the late Judge Reuben Reynolds. The following paper was read:

"The Honorable Reuben Reynolds, formerly a Judge of this Court, died at his home in the city of Crookston, on the 8th day of March, A. D. 1889.

Judge Reynolds was born at Covington, Genessee County, New York, on the 25th day of April, A. D. 1821. He early removed to Michigan and came to the territory of Minnesota in the year 1855, since which time he has held the offices of Judge of Probate, Clerk of District Court, Receiver of United States Land Office and Judge of District Court, in this state.

On the 23d day of March, 1889, at a fully attended meeting of the bar of Polk County, Minn., a memorial resolution was adopted and Wm. Watts was instructed to present the memorial to this District Court."

MEMORIAL.

We, the members of the Bar of Polk County, in the State of Minnesota, deem it appropriate that we should place upon record as expression of our sense of the great loss to our state and to our profession caused by the death of Hon. Reuben Reynolds, a former Judge of this court, which occurred on the eighth day of this month, after a long and painful illness.

He practiced his profession in our midst from the time court was first established in this county until his elevation to the Bench in March, 1885. He was, really, a remarkable man. Endowed with great strength and clearness of judgment, close application and a fluent, earnest and forcible speech, though he did not begin legal study until past the meridian of life, he excelled in all branches of the profession of the law and stood foremost at the bar in this part of the state. The same qualities made him one of the most effective public speakers, and he was ever ready to give his time and talents to the promotion of morality and temperance and the advancement of projects and principles that he deemed to be for the public weal.

By his natural endowments and attainments he was peculiarly fitted for judicial life. His learning and ability were quickened by a strong sense of justice and a deep love for the equity of the law, and his essentially kind nature made him courteous to all.

In his death our profession has lost one of its bright ornaments, the community a useful and upright citizen and his family a devoted husband and father.

We deeply mourn his loss and extend our sincere sympathy to his family in their sad bereavement.

We respectfully request the court to direct that this expression of our respect for our departed brother be entered upon its records with such other proceedings as may be had in connection therewith, and that a copy thereof be transmitted to his family.

Addresses were then made by Wm. Watts, H. Steenerson and P. C. Schmidt, of the bar, and by Hon. Judge Mills. By order of the court the memorial was entered upon its record, and out of respect for the memory of Judge Reynolds, court was adjourned.

The Duluth & Winnipeg.

The Lumberman has the following to say of the Duluth & Winnipeg:

The bill extending the grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg railway, which passed the Minnesota house of representatives some time ago was killed in the senate on Wednesday after an all day debate. To what extent this will effect the building of the railway remains to be seen, but Messrs Ammi Wright, C. W. Wells, T. B. Casey and the other gentlemen interested are not the kind of men to give up an enterprise as important as that promises to be very readly. If the road is not built by them it will be built by some one else sooner or later. The Duluth & Winnipeg has had a checkered career. The land grant originally given should have secured the building of the road long ago, and would have done so if the original projectors of the scheme had not fallen out among themselves. No line which has been projected is calculated to prove so important to the lumbermen, particularly the loggers, as the Duluth & Winnipeg, and there will be reason for regret if the defeat of the bill before the legislature should delay the construction of the road. The northern part of Minnesota needs and ought to have railroad facilities.

Frozen Seed Wheat.

Fargo Weekly Argus.

The farmers of Walsh county held a farmers institute at Bathgate last Wednesday and Thursday. Many question of interest to tillers of the soil where discussed, among them the question of seeding with frozen grain. A farmer by the name of Falk related his experience. Six years ago, he said, he purchased for fifteen cents per bushel, a quantity of seed wheat, in Bottineau county, which was badly frozen. He sowed the grain as an experiment, it grew splendidly and he harvested thirtyone bushels of superior grain from every acre he sowed. The testimony of Mr. Falk was corroborated by several gentlemen present, all of whom expressed the opinion that the seed wheat scare was the creature of elevator men who owned large quantities of wheat which they desired to dispose of at high prices. Seed wheat they said should be furnished farmers at one doller per bushel. The elevators were asking one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars, and they desired to frighten farmers into buying their grain.

The Land Grant.

Little Falls Transcript: The law to extend the land grant of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad has failed of passage, it being defeated in the senate yesterday by a small majority. The passage of the law would have been of great benefit to the vast section of country north of the Northern Pacific in Minnesota, as a railroad northwest from Duluth to the state line would assure the development of the territory that is naturally rich, but now is uninhabited. Such a line would greatly injure the Manitoba system, and it was through the influence of that corporation that the bill was defeated. The state at large would be benefited by the development of so large a part of the state, and it would have been good public policy to extend the land grant.

Policy as to Appointments.

Moorhead Weekly News.

Hon. S. G. Comstock arrived home from Washington this morning, having been absent nearly four weeks. He remained at the capital long enough to become somewhat familiar with the routine duties of a congressman, and to ascertain the probable policy of President Harrison with regard to appointment, and that is the question of supreme interest in the early part of the administration at least. Mr. Comstock states that the President has virtually said that in cases where the Cleveland administration appointed men to vacancies and the officers are performing their duties satisfactorily they will be allowed to serve out their term. Of course this relates to offices where a term is prescribed. In cases where the Democratic incumbent is not satisfactory in the performance of duty, or where an injustice was done to the old Republican incumbent of the office, and he was removed unceremoniously, without good cause, and for political reasons alone, it may be expected that such Cleveland appointees may have to take a dose of the same medicine. Mr. Comstock thinks the president and heads of departments will exercise a careful conservatism in making appointments. There will be no haste. Time will be taken to look carefully into the merits of applicants and nothing will be done blindly. The Republicans have good material to select from. There is a vast number of trained and tried men who are capable of filling all the offices. In this respect the Republicans have a great advantage over the Democrats. This can be said without implying that Republican are better and abler as a general rule than Democrats, because it is clearly to be seen that a party which was in possession of the national government for twenty-five years, and whose members filled most of the offices during that period, must necessarily have graduated a large number of skilled and experienced officials from all branches of the service, domestic and foreign. These were very generally put out of office during the four years of Democratic rule, and a large proportion of them are awaiting with eagerness to be "called back."

The Twine Trust.

The Northwestern Agriculturist.

The twine manufacturers have undoubtedly over-reached themselves in advancing their prices to dealers to 20 cents a pound and compelling farmers to pay 25 cents, or do without it. This twine is made at a cost of about six cents a pound. In Iowa and Nebraska the farmers are organizing against the oppression, and thousands of farmers are pledging themselves not to buy twine at trust prices. They will bind with straw, stack with binding, or use headers. Farmers owe it to themselves to resist this grasping scheme. But any combined action by farmers in any community should be taken promptly to avoid embarrassing merchants who handle twine, and have no intrest in the trusts.

Swing the Cradle.

Is the Suggestion of the Agriculturist of The Des Moines Register.

There has always been a considerable senseless blow about harvesters, reapers and binders, cheapening the farmer's harvests. It may make it easier, but instead of cheaper, it is dearer. The old-fashioned day's work of cutting grain by hand with a cradle, and another man raking and binding after, was three acres per day, but experts and others making long days, cut and bound five acres per day. Paying harvest hands at the rate of $2 per day, the cost would be 66 cents per acre for cutting or binding. The price and quantity of twine or wire to bind an acre at 25 cents per pound would be on an average at least twothirds of the cost of binding by hand. The other third would not pay for the work to be done with a binder. Whenever labor comes back to the price harvest hands received fifty years ago, when there were no reapers and binders, fifty cents per day, reapers, binders, as well as wire and twine, will be at an end. We insist, and always have contended, that it does not pay a farmer who raises from twenty to forty acres of small grain to own or use a reaper. It is cheaper, more independent, and a little more industrious to cut the harvest by hand. This may be looked upon as old fogy, but when we have the same sickle hanging overhead as we write, which we learned to cut grain with sixty-nine years ago, and having practiced that style of harvesting for thirty years, and then used various styles of reapers, rakes and binders for twenty-five years in Iowa harvest fields, we do know that the cheapest yet is the old-fashioned hand cradle, it having been a decided improvement over the sickle, the symbol for 5,000 years of man's servitude. For ease and speed the binder is superior but for cheapness and independence of trust and monopolists, give us the cradle. There is yet glory in its swing.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., APRIL 4, 1889.

'Round Home.

Did you hear anything drap?

Election day was extremely quiet.

G. M. Barber us in the city for a brief visit.

John Kops came over from Grand Forks on Monday.

Sunday school concert at the Baptist church Sunday evening.

A. P. Holand talks of returning to Fergus Falls in a few days.

Representative Roberts has had a sick spell, but is reported better.

Prof. Elford, of the Stephen high school, spent the Sabbath in the city.

Two of those Whitney baby carriages sold as soon after arrival as they could be put up.

Ladies do not fail to call and see the lovely new spring millinery goods at Mrs. I. U. Jennings.

See M. R. Brown's notice of horses and mules to trade for stock cattle, elsewhere in this issue. [49-51]

A light fall of snow on Tuesday delayed seeding a trifle and covered the convention ticket a good deal.

Mrs. A. L. Lindsley and children intend to leave for Tacoma on Monday next via Winnipeg and the C. P. R. R.

George Bucknam's mother and brother are in the city in attendance on his sick bed. George does not improve as fast as his friends could wish.

The pleasant countenance of Geo. Q. Erskine is again seen upon our streets after a winter's sojourn elsewhere.

Alderman & Co., intend to enlarge their hardware store and for that purpose have taken out the old tin shop building to make room for the new addition.

The auction sale of horses at Brown's old stables last Saturday was well attended and everything offered was sold for some price; the average price was about $100.

Don't seem to have been much seeding done this week owing to the fact that Uncle John hasn't got his grip well onto the weather yet.

Those Whitney carriages that you have read about blockaded Herb's corner on Saturday last until they could be set up and ready to run. They are going off like hot cakes.

County Attorney Williams has rented the house now occupied by conductor Copeland, corner of Ash St., and Fletcher Ave., and will occupy it as soon as soon as "Cope" goes out to his suburban villa at Church's Ferry.

The reception given on Wednesday afternoon by Mesdames W. Alexander and A. L. Lindsley, assisted by Mesdames I. U. Jennings, C. E. Sawyer, E. Wile and C. E. Dampier at the residence of Walter Alexander was a very pleasant affair.

John C. Wells left for his home in Wisconsin on Tuesday night, after having settled up matters in connection with the Reis farm. Mr. W. says he is well pleased with what he has seen of this country during his stay and intends to see it again when it is clothed in living green.

The St. Paul News, since H. P. Hall took charge has improved wonderfully, but in the matter of legislative reports it is rather deficient. With more attention paid to legislative notes, especially on bills of local interest the News would be cock of the walk among St. Paul newspapers.

Wm. Teare, an old soldier and a true blue republican was over from East Grand Forks last week interviewing the boys in relation to the E. G. F. post-office. Judging by the length of the petition he has one would judge that he is very popular in that burg and there should be no question of his success.

Peter Bauchemin a handsome and accomplished citizen of Argyle, in whom is no gyle—(as it were) was in the city last week renewing acquaintance. If hand-shaking is any indication of what would make a good pump-handle Pete's right arm would make the best kind of one. Pete is a jolly good fellow and has lots of friends in this neck of the woods.

Hon. B. Sampson introduced a bill in the senate to provide for the punishment of "White Caps," who write threatening letters but the bill does not seem to intimate how the White Caps are to be apprehended. He seems to be unduly magnifying his little episode in that line as it transpires that his White Cap letter, was written by a 15 year old boy in a spirit of mischief.

G. H. Palmer received a letter from Wm. Box Sr., who is way off in Washingtor Territory making shingles. Box says he is working hard, doing a good business and can eat salt junk equal to an old veteran. Box' many friends here wish him lots success and bushels of shekels. So far he thinks that climate agrees with him excellently and he thinks he shall like it better as time rolls on.

Jack Kivel, Marshal County's rustling sheriff passed through the city on Tuesday evening last with an insane woman for St. Peter. The Sheriff has recently returned from a trip to Kentucky, after the boy murderer, whom he had reason to suppose was south for his health. When he found his bird he discovered that it was not the boy he wanted but s'mother boy entirely so Jack had his trip all for nothing.

Conductor Copeland has had a severe attack of the homestead fever and his best friends are fearful that he will be carried off by it. In fact it is liable to carry off the whole family—to Cope's ranch near Church's Ferry, where they intend to reside during the coming summer. They expect to go about April 15th. "Cope" says he has struck a bonanza and THE JOURNAL hopes his fondest dream may be realized.

The Florida oranges is the most delicious. Found only at Herb's.

The Whitney carriage is the best. Don't fail to see it before you purchrse.

The snow storm of Tuesday don't signify—won't last—and the Whitney baby carriages will be needed just the same. To be found only at Herb's.

The railroad boys are in high feather over Conductor Copeland's project of establishing a ranch out west. Knowing his predilection for hunting, they expect to see ducks, chickens, geese, deer, and all kinds of game galore on "Cope's" ranch, and already the price of good hunting dogs has advanced in this market very materially. But the conductor is liable to fool the boys, as we expect it is "townsites" he expects to cultivate mostly.

OBSERVATIONS.

This week we observe that wheat remains in the same old notch—87 for No. 1 Hard.

That seeding is not rushing quite so lively as we supposed it would be.

That the grass, also, is not showing up in an alarming fashion.

That Doc. Henault is at home again. He says the conductor on the Fosston branch is altogether too previous when he heads for home.

That Max Ericsson talks of going to Germany soon.

That it had been commonly reported about the streets that an election was to be held on Tuesday, but owing to the storm, probably it was not much of an election.

That the Lily is a pretty good kind of a flower to "bloom in the spring," after all!

That Bro. McGrew has got 'em again—got 'em bad.

That owing to the storm (doubtless) election day was not as enjoyable (to some) as it otherwise might have been.

That the big ad of Rosenthal & Wile, elsewhere in this issue, deserves your earnest attention.

That some of the boys, while they said nothing on Tuesday, showed pretty good memories.

That the Florida orange is the boss. Found only at Herb's.

They Apreciate

The Crookston Fire Department.

The following letter shows that the efforts of our fire laddies in behalf of the city are sometimes appreciated. The letter is written to assistant chief Jack McGlogan and is as follows:

"Herewith please find our cheque for $50 which place in the hands of the proper officer of the fire department with our compliments and best wishes. We beg to assure you of our appreciation of the efforts of the boys at our recent fire and also to impress upon you that among your most staunch friends will be found

ROSENTHAL & WILE."

Hung In Effigy!

On Saturday morning, passengers for the early train were shocked by the sight of what appeared to be the body of a man suspended from the electric light wire, between the Merchants' National Bank and Van Dyke & Co's drug store. A closer inspection showed it to be but a clever reproduction of the Hon. B. Sampson's corporeal ponderosity—or, to be more exact about it, the placard thereunto attached remarked that it was all that remained of the "Senatorial Barnyard Sampson." When the lynx eye of the law, in shape of the night-watchman, "got onto" the cadaver there hanging against the peace and dignity of the State of Minnesota—and the electric wire, in such a case made and provided, he snatched the whole business bald-headed and dragged it away for interment in the Potter's field, and so but few of our citizens had a chance to see how Senatorial honors sometimes elevate a man. The perpetrators of the outrage are unknown and their action is severely condemned by all law-abiding citizens, as such little pleasantries, while they have a tendency to elevate some of the citizens, do not elevate the city in the eyes of the world. It is true that Mr. Sampson has crossed the wishes of the city, but that does not furnish the city with an excuse for thus forgetting its dignity.

W. J. Nickle, who taught all of last year in district No. 104, has been re-engaged for the spring term, which begins Monday, April 1.

Willie and Minnie Price entertained their many young friends in a pleasant manner on Saturday evening. EDNA.

A Sad Accident.

On Wednesday morning as conductor Scott's train was approaching Russia, a man was discovered on the track ahead. Before the train could be stopped he was struck and thrown into the ditch, being instantly killed. The body was brought to the city and the coroner had it taken to Wyatt's undertaking rooms, to await the inquest. A Catholic prayer book, found in one pocket, had the name of John Collins on the fly-leaf. A ticket from Warren to St. Paul was also found. It seems that he came from Warren Tuesday night. He had asked conductor Flint if he could stop over one train in Crookston, and the last known of him, until he was struck at about 5:30 Wednesday morning was when he got off at the depot in Crookston Tuesday night, at 11. Railroad boys say he was formerly section boss at Euclid, that he has recently been farming near Warren. It is said that he has no relatives in this country.

It Passed.

At last, after a great deal of wrangling, hard work and extra expense on the part of our citizens, the bond bill passed the Senate on Saturday last, Senator Sampson not objecting.

The Election.

The silent battle of the ballots on Tuesday resulted in the election of the entire convention ticket except the mayor, J. W. Lilly the people's candidate being elected. The vote on mayor by wards was as follows:

1st ward,	Lilly,	103,	Anglim,	58
2d "	"	124,	"	35
3d "	"	46,	"	34
4th "	"	129,	"	78
5th "	"	6,	"	28
		413		233

Lilly's majority 180.

Bryngel Knudson, of the town of Sletton, and Bertha Rodflod, of the town of King were united in marriage by Judge Spendley on Saturday last. Mr. Knudson was one of the original settlers of Fairfax, his claim being the place now owned by John Amundson on Sec. 28. In those days he was called Brown Knudson. He is now a well to do farmer of Sletten.

Good News, if True.

Duluth Daily Tribune,

A question which has been agitating the public mind of Duluth for a month past is "Will the road be built if the act waiving the land grant is killed?" This of course with reference to the Duluth & Winnipeg. The question has given rise to much discussion, and the almost universally accepted opinion is that it will not. The Tribune has information today, however, which leads to a different conclusion. In an interview with a Detroit reporter Mr. Aumi W. Wright, president of the road, is quoted as follows:

"It is our intention to put a large construction force at work at once and build the entire 320 miles of the road as soon as circumstances will permit."

The interviewer adds that Mr. Wright is well able to build the road or carry out any other enterprise to which he puts his hand, and that the prospects are gilt-edged for the completion of the project.

When Mr. Wright speaks he usually says something, and it may be taken as a fact that the road will not only be built but that at once.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer han the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountain. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

Twine Trust Takes Water.

The Agitation by Western Farmers Having a Salutary Effect.

St. Paul Weekly Dispatch.

New York, March 25.—It is rumored here that a special conference of representatives of the twine trade will be held within the next two weeks to consider what steps should be taken to revise the schedule of prices in view of the feeling which is prevailing among the farmers in the West and Northwest and which is manifesting itself in the formation of orgainization for the boycotting of the supposed twine trut. A leading member of the trade is responsible for the statement that while the present high prices are but the natural result of a limited supply and a demand of more than usual activity, yet that it may be considered good policy to make some reduction in present figures than antagonize the farmers in a greater degree.

Dairy and Hogs vs, Wheat.

Democrat, Chatfield, Minn: A few years ago George Kendall had 140 acres, considered the finest farm in Olmsted county. He raised wheat until he was bankrupt, and then sold out to a Mr. Craine, from Indiana, who invested in the farm and machinery $14,000, and incurred a debt of $2,000. He raised wheat like his predecessor and at the end of a few years left the State bankrupt.

Six years ago Ed. Champion purchased 160 acres, for $4,000. All he had was a span of horses and a few cows. He has raised hogs and sold cream during the six years, and today has paid the $4,000, for his farm, bought an additional 40, paying $500 for it, and has invested fully $1,000 in improvements, besides keeping his family as well as any of his neighbors.

The City Convention.

Held at city hall on Friday evening was called to order at 8 o'clock by C. O. Christianson, chairman of the city central committee. Edward George was elected temporary chairman and G. H. Palmer, secretary. The committee on credentials found the following gentlemen entitled to seats in the convention, viz:

1s Ward,	Louis Fontaine. John Alderman. John McKinnon. H. E. Cooke.
2d Ward,	Wm. Munch. Albert Jones. John Monroe. J. H. McGlogan.
3d Ward,	Edward George. G. H. Palmer.
4th Ward,	D. Jacobus. Jos. Beaudette. Frank Jerome. J. E. O'Brien. Hugh Robertson.
5th Ward,	E. Emond.

The committee on organization recommended that the temporary be made the permanent organization, which report being adopted the convention proceeded to the nomination of a candidate for mayor. There were three names presented, viz: Wm. Anglim, J. W. Lilly and Alex. McKinnon. The first ballot was informal resulting as follows: Anglim, 9; Lilly, 3; McKinnon, 3; Wm. Watts, 1. On the 1st formal ballot Mr. Anglim received 9, Mr. Lilly 3 and Mr. McKinnon 4. Mr. Anglim's nomination was then made unanimous on motion of D. Jacobus who had eloquently presented the name of J. W. Lilly to the convention. The names of John Paterson and Hugh Robertson were presented for the office of city clerk. The informal ballot resulted: Paterson 9, Robertson 7. 1st formal ballot, Paterson 11, Robertson 5. The nomination of John Paterson was then made unanimous on motion of Hugh Robertson. Three names were proposed for treasurer, A. P. Hanson, L. C. Couvrette and J. H. Locken; the contest was spirited, requiring six ballots to decide. The informal ballot stood: Hanson, 5; Couvrette, 8; Locken, 3. 1st formal,—Hanson, 7; Couvrette, 6; Locken, 3. 2d—Hanson, 7; Couvrette, 6; Locken, 3. 3d—Hanson, 5; Couvrette, 8; Locken, 3. 4th—Hanson, 6; Couvrette, 9; Locken, 1. L. C. Couvrette was declared the unanimous choice of the convention. In case of assessor, the rules were suspended and Henry Wight made the unanimous choice. For alderman at large T. H. Bjoin and C. A. Lindell were put in the field. The informal ballot resulted in 3 for Lindell, 13 for Bjoin. The 1st formal, 2 for Lindell 14 for Bjoin. Made unanimous. G. W. Lewis, C. S. Spendley and H. Shepard were in the field for justices, resulting in the choice of G. W. Lewis and C. S. Spendley on the 1st formal ballot. Geo. H. Holt, Hans Larson and H. Shepard were in the field for constables. Holt and Larson declared elected on 1st formal ballot. H. E. Cooke moved the chair appoint a city central committee consisting of five. The chair announced that time would be taken to consider the matter and the committee announced in the next issue of THE JOURNAL. Later the following names were announced as the [47-52] A. STUKE.

MY HUSBAND.

It was with a feeling of inward rage I could not repress, that I stood dressed before my mirror that night of Mrs. Irvington's ball, and saw in its depths the white muslin which had done duty so many times before. True, the scarlet flowers fastened on the shoulders and in my hair served as an excellent foil to my clear, dark skin, but when, a half an hour later, I stood in the dressing-room of our hostess, surrounded by gay laughing faces, with shimmer of satins and silk as a background, I dreaded taking off my cloak, and exposing to these merciless feminine eyes the same dress, altered only by a few fresh flowers. I, who loved the beautiful so,—who had longed all my life to gratify the taste which seemed to have been given me only to make me wretched, could only peer longingly into the future, as I gazed shuddering into the past, and see no silver lining to the cloud.

Looking back now upon my sweet, peaceful home, although I could in nowise shut out the causes of my discontent, I can recognize how little I appreciated its freedom from care or sorrow.

I was thinking only of its bitter side, wondering why my father had never possessed the means of his generous nature would have so delighted in, as I stood watching the dancers in a quiet nook, when I heard a voice say:

"Mrs. Irvington, I want you to present me to that little girl who just entered the room in white and scarlet. Her bright eyes interest me."

"Ah, Kate Reynolds! With pleasure."

Then catching sight of and approaching me, she gracefully went through the usual formal phrase:

"Mr. Bayard—Miss Reynolds. Kate, my old friend, Mr. Bayard."

My first wonderment at his having thus sought me out, gradually faded in the interest his quick words and quaint sayings awakened. The face bent upon me, seemed old in my sight, though in reality he was but fifteen years my senior, but his eyes burned with the fire of eternal youth, and redeemed what otherwise might have been called plainness.

It was a pleasant surprise when he discovered that he and my father were old friends, and so it grew a matter of course that he should come often to our house, and that he should look upon him almost as a brother. But my amazement was unbound when one day my father called me to him, and said:

"Kate, Mr. Bayard wishes to marry you."

I could not realize the words. I knew nothing of my own heart; but somehow the way seemed opened for me out of this narrow way of living. I could see the world, enjoy its beauties as God had intended I should; could share the blessings of wealth; could do for my sister—of whom I was two years the senior—what no one had ever done for me; and so I gave consent. Yet in the weeks that followed of busy preparation and excitement, in eager delight over the new and pretty things that were mine at last, in keen appreciation of the priceless Gifts Mr. Bayard actually showered upon me, I had no time to think of him as a lover. When we met it was to seek no quiet corner, to exchange no whispered confidences. His greeting was the same as ever, save that he now always kissed my brow, and that sometimes I caught his glance fixed upon me with an intensity which startled me. But a moment later he would speak in his usual calm tone, and I would forget it.

It was with a sense only of exultation that I on my bridal morn gazed with pride into the mirror, which once again reflected my form. No shabby muslin, no scarlet flowers, saw themselves here today; but all was white, pure sheeny white. The lustrous silk trailed far behind me; orange blossoms gleamed in my dark hair and fastened my bridal veil; diamonds (his gift) shone from arms and throat, and glistened in my ears. I needed not the words of others to know that I was beautiful. But when at last it was all over, when I had received the congratulations of my friends and relatives, when my vanity had been fed to its full, and I returned once again to my own room, for the first time there burst upon me the reality of what I had done.

My traveling dress lay upon the bed, my trunks were packed. We were to sail that day for Europe. My husband had business connections in England, and we were to make our homes there. I was to leave all whom I loved, and go away with this man. My sister stood watching with tearful eyes, and at last words broke forth:

"Why did I do this thing? Oh, sister save me! I do not love him! I hate him! I am too young to go away from you all! Have pity have mercy!"

Then all sensation left me, and I dropped senseless on the floor. When my eyes again opened, only the old familiar marks surrounded me. My sister sat sewing near my bed, with an anxious look on her sweet face. My bird caroled sweetly in his cage. Was it all a dream, then? No! Too vividly the scenes of the morning again came before me. I moved restlessly upon my pillow. In a moment Jean stood by my side.

"Mr. Bayard!" I questioned. "Where is he?"

"He sailed, dear, on your wedding day three weeks ago to-day. His business was imperative, and so he left you in our care. You have been very ill, Kate, and must not excite yourself. When you are stronger there is a note from him we were to give you. Try and sleep again."

I heard her words with scarcely a sensation, unless one of relief, and closing my eyes was soon lost in dreamland.

Between sleeping and waking, in a sort of stupor, the hours glided into days, and the days into weeks, during which, gradually the strain upon my brain relaxed, and strength crept back into my frame.

Almost a month passed before his letter, in obedience to my request, was in my hands. I broke the seal with languid indifference, and read the lines his hand had penned:

"Imperitive business, my dear Kate, demands my departure, but I leave you in the hands of those who will take every care of you. You will find at my banker's unlimited credit, and I beg you will use freely the funds I have placed at your disposal. Make for yourself a home where you will, and say to your father it is my desire your sister Jean should be your companion. I ask only that you may be happy.

Your husband,
PAUL BAYARD."

As I read, there crept over me only the sense of freedom—that I was unfettered to do as I would. Eagerly I called Jean, and said:

"Your every wish, darling, shall be gratified so that some day when you meet fate, young or handsome, whether he be rich or poor, you shall have no need to question."

Two years glided by. My every ambitious dream was realized. Sometimes, in my own house, surrounded by guests, a sense of the strangeness of my position would steal over me. Without a thought I ran into my drawing room, and stood amazed.

A gentleman, with hair streaked with gray, sat upon the sofa and rose upon my entrance I bowed as to a stranger. "Kate," I heard a voice say, and in another moment I recognized my husband. I welcomed him as warmly as I could, but it all seemed so strange, so new, I could not tutor my lips to say all I wished they might utter. Yet in the months that followed, I found him no curb to my freedom. My wish seemed his law. He never intruded his presence upon me, and I grew to watch for his coming, to see him mingle among our guests with a gracious word for all, with pride.

Miss Raymond was the belle with us that summer. Tall, elegant and graceful, she queened it royally. At first I watched with pleasure the sparkle in her eye, the flush upon her cheek, as my husband approached. Talking together, they would seem to forget our very existence and live in a world apart; but gradually another and a different feeling took possession of me.

I grew to watch them with a feverish eagerness, and now and then to steal beside them, and kneel, perhaps, at my husband's feet, to listen while he told her some tale or adventure or travel. At such time he would always pause to give me a smile of welcome, or pass his hand through my hair, or in some way give me token that he knew I was near. One day, laughing and talking with Mr. Coburn, one of my husband's friends, he turned suddenly, and said:

"How much we shall all regret when Mr. Bayard leaves us! How can you let him go?"

A hand of ice seemed clutching at my heart as I answered, as indifferently as I could:

"He does not, I believe, talk of leaving shortly? I have not heard him express any such determination."

"Indeed! Then I fear I have done wrong in telling you. He told me this afternoon he expected to sail next month for Europe, to remain indefinitely. I presume he dreaded letting you know his determination. I regret extremely I have unwittingly done so."

As soon as I could escape unnoticed I left the room. I returned, shifting and opening the hall door, stepped out upon the lawn. The grass was heavy with dew, the night air damp, but had rain been pouring from the clouds I should not have known it, when suddenly a voice called my name. My husband stood beside me.

"Kate, what are you doing, child, out in this damp air? Are you so wretched that you must wander off alone by yourself? Poor little girl!"

At the sound of his voice courage came to me. I sprang into his arms, and laying my head on his breast, sobbed out:

"Paul, do not leave me again. Take me with you!"

"My wife! Do you mean it?"

"Indeed, indeed I do. My life has been so empty all these years, though I knew it not. I know that I am but a child, but you shall mould me as you will; only try to love me again, only take me wherever you may go."

Closer and closer I felt myself drawn into his embrace, while upon my lips fell the first kiss my husband had ever imprinted there.

"On your wedding day, Kate, I overheard the words which told me you hated the man you married; heard you beg for mercy and for pity to save you from your fate, Child, do you think else any power could have dragged me from your side—any earthly potency induced me to put an ocean between us? There is no necessity, my darling, for my again leaving you. I had determined to go only that I might make you free; only that I could no longer look upon your fresh young beauty and keep down the rising passion of my soul. For this moment—this hour—which atones for all my years of suffering, I had no hope. Child, are you sure, sure, you know what you say?"

"Paul, my love, my husband?" was my whispered answer, "how can you generously stoop to pardon. Then I was but a child, weak and willful, who knew not her own heart; but years have taught me the value of the jewel I threw away.

As I bade my guests good night a few hours later, standing by my husbands side, my eyes reflecting the voiceless content in his, Belle Raymond, stooping to kiss me, whispered:

"You have found your happiness at last, Kate. I have read it in your face. Keep and prize it. It is priceless."

Long years have passed since then, but each year only adds to the lustre of the gem I wear nearest my heart.

"The Barring of the Door."

It is not generally known that the incident which forms the subject of the droll Scottish song; "The Barring of the Door," which also occurs in the "Nights" of Straparola, is of Eastern origin. In an Arabian tale a blockhead having married his pretty cousin, gave the customary feast to their relations and friends. When the festivites were over he conducted his guests to the door, and, from absence of mind, neglected to shut it before returning to his wife.

"Dear cousin," said his wife to him when they were alone, "go and shut the street door." "It would be strange, indeed," he replied, "if I did such a thing. Am I just made a bridegroom, clothed in silk, wearing a shawl and a dagger set with diamonds, and am I to go and shut the door? Why, my dear, you are crazy. Go and shut it yourself." "Oh, indeed!" exclaimed the wife. "Am I, young, robed in a dress of lace and precious stones, am I to go and shut the street door? No, indeed! It is you who have become crazy and not I. Come, let us make a bargain," she continued, "and let the first who speaks go and fasten the door."

"Agreed," said the husband, and immediately he became mute, and the wife, too, was silent, while they both sat down, dressed as they were in their nuptal attire, looking at each other and seated on opposite sofas. Thus they remained for two hours. thieves happened to pass by, and, seeing the door open, entered and laid hold of whatever came to their hands. The silent couple heard footsteps in the house, but opened not their mouths. The thieves came into the room and saw them seated motionless, and apparently indifferent to all that might take place. They continued their pillage, therefore, collecting together every valuble, and even dragging away the carpets from beneath them; they laid their hands on the noodle and his wife, taken from their person every article of jewelry, while they, in fear of losing the wager, said not a word. Having thus cleared the house the thieves departed quietly, but the pair continued to sit, uttering not a syllable. Towards morning a police officer came past on his tour of inspection, and seeing the door open, walked in After searching all the rooms and finding no persons, he entered their apartment and inquired the meaning of what he saw. Neither of them would condescend to reply. The officer became angry and ordered their heads to be cut off. The executioner's sword was about to perform its office when the wife cried out, "Sir, he is my husband. Do not kill him!" "Oh! oh!" exclaimed the husband, overjoyed, and clapping his hands, "you have lost the wager; go and shut the door." He then explained the whole affair to the police officer, who shrugged his shoulders and went away.—St. Louis Republic.

As Wages Used to Be.

The condition of the wage class of that day, 1800 (A. D.), may be well examined. It is full of instruction for social agitators. In the great cities unskilled workmen were hired by the day, brought their own food and found their own lodgings. But in the country, on the farms, or wherever a hand was employed on some public work, they were fed and lodged by the employer, and given a few dollars a month. On the Pennsylvania canals the diggers ate the coarest diet, were housed in the rudest sheds, and paid $6 a month from May to November, and $5 a month from November to May. Hod-carriers and mortar mixers, diggers, and choppers, who from 1793 to 1800, labored on the public buildings and cut the streets and avenues of Washington city, received $70 a year, or, if they wished, $60 for all the work they could perform form March 1 to Dec. 20.

The hours of work were invariably from sunrise to sunset. Wages at Albany and New York were 3 shillings or, as money then went, 40 cents a day; at Lancaster, $8 to $10 a month; elsewhere in Pennsylvania workmen were content with $6 in summer and $5 in winter. At Baltimore men were glad to be hired at 18 pence a day. None by the month asked more than $6. At Fredericksburg the price of labor was from $5 to $7. In Virginia white men employed by the year were given £16 currency; slaves when hired were clothed and their masters paid £1 a month. A pound, Virginia money, was in federal money, $3.33. The average rate of wages the land over was $65 a year, with food and perhaps lodging. Out of this small sum the workman must, with his wife's help, maintain his family.—McMaster's History.

Precocious Children.

No physician doubts that precocious children, fifty cases for one, are much worse for the discipline they have undergone. The mind seems to have been strained, and the foundation for insanity is laid. When the studies of mature years are stuffed into the head of a child, people do not reflect on the anatomical fact that the brain of an infant is not the brain of a man; that the one is confirmed, and can bear exertions, and the other is growing, and requires repose; that to force the attention to abstract facts, to load the memory with chronological and historical or scientific detail, in short, to expect a child's brain to bear with impunity the exertions of a man's, as irrational as it would be to hazard the same sort of experiments on its muscles.

A Philadelphia Excitement.

From the Chicago News.

"What has become of all the people?" inquired a stranger of a lonesome-looking individual in the streets of Philadelphia. "You are the first person I have seen since I came to town, four years ago."

"Yes," said the man, sadly, "and I would have gone, too, if I hadn't been left behind to sort o' keep things moving. Everybody else has gone down the river to watch for the first shad."

THE FARM.

Points for Farmers.

Separate the weak sheep from the flock and cuddle them a little.

Take plenty of time with the colt. Too much haste has spoiled lots of horses.

Cut the "water spouts" off the good trees, and cut the poor trees out altogether.

With wire and good posts an effective, durable fence can be built at comparatively low cost.

Do not waste wood ashes. They are sufficently valuable to pay for saving and applying to the soil.

Remember that one ill-tempered or slow walking horse will do much harm on a farm where colts are raised.

Keep the floor of the poultry house dry by all means. The dry earth stored last fall will now come in play.

Pigs sometimes have inflammation of the bowels; cause, too much corn or milk, either will cause it. Put them on the ground and give less and lighter food.

"If you want a cow to do her best give her just as good quarters and as good care as you do your favorite horse," advises a Pennsylvania farmer.

White fowls when dressed for market do not show pin feather marks as do the black breeds. This is a point in their favor which is worth considering.

A big growth of clover is a great weed destroyer; but it must be "thick as hair on a dog" to do this effectually. Put on plenty of seed.

When egg-production alone is your object you need no males. The hens will lay as well without them (sometimes better), and the eggs will keep longer.

Drive the little pigs for half an hour around the pens, to keep away the thumps. All dry food and all corn will tend to make crazy sows.

The fat butter is a mixture of several fats, chiefly oleine, an oily fat, palmitine and stearine, all solid fats. There are also small quantities of five other fats present.

Hog disease preventives. A dry warm bed to sleep in; not more than five in a bunch; plenty of succulent food of some sort; apples, roots, silage, clover hay, and half their food bran or middlings, oil meal every day, and salt always by them.

If turned out into the barnyard "for exercise," nineteen out of every twenty cows will stand and munch at the pile of wet straw which has passed through the horse stable, though they be well fed. And then those who use the milk will wonder what makes it "taste of the stable."

As soon as an early crop is off a piece of land, before the weeds start, plow it up and sow rye. Here is late pasture for cows this year and early feed next. Plow it under next season, if your stock feeds it past graining, and put in any crop you choose. The moisture and warmth produced by the decay of green stuff turned under is really wonderful.

When some horses lie down they strike the back part of the fore leg with the calks of their shoes and bruise it. After a while a callous comes on and a sore. The only way to prevent it is to put a thick pad around the horse when standing in the stable, to keep the shoe from bruising the place. Dress the sore with any sort of liniment, and grease it till it is healed.

A Brahma pullet requires more time to mature than a Leghorn. In a majority of cases the pullets that commence laying early do not grow to as large a size as those that may be considered as late layers. They often, therefore, commence laying before they are fully matured. In selecting eggs for breeding, as a rule, the pulets should be about a year old, in order to receive the necessary vigor and vitality with the chicks.

D. N. Kern, in Practical Farmer. Our farmers must keep abreast of the times. They must think. They must read; they must study; they must experiment; they must exert their minds to the fullest extent to drag out from mother earth her secrets of fertility. Let them do it, and she will reward them with fertile fields and good crops in abundance and they will enjoy the richest blessings of the most satisfying and noblest occupation on earth.

Should you order pure breeds, do not on their arrival, place them in the yard with other fowls, but give them time to rest and recover from their journey. A bird on the journey fails to eat, or receive water, and if placed in the poultry yard will be cowed and frightened, and thus be kept away from the troughs. Always give them time to eat, drink and rest, and if then placed among the home fowls they will be in a better condition to take care of themselves.

The Shorthorn cattle have doubtless been injured for both breeding and milking qualities by keeping breeding animals too fat. They show off well in this condition, but with this breed as with all others, the moderate flesh indicative of thrifty health is better for breeders than a superabundance of flesh, which only interferes with their destined use. This is a fact well understood by all skilful breeders, but it is a point wherein those inexperienced in the business are likely to make a mistake, and all the more so because the Shorthorn breed naturally runs to flesh and fat unless very carefully fed.

"Sweet Home."

"There is no place like home.' runs the old song, and we know how true it is.

Go where we will—encounter men in whatever circumstances we may,—we shall be apt to find that a reference to their homes will immediately secure their attention, and will give you favor in their eyes.

The impressions made in the home are lasting. A mother's words never pass from the mind. A father's counsel remains fresh so long as life lasts. The last benediction of parental love and solicitude—with what tenacity it clings to the memory when almost all else has gone.

How important, therefore, that the home be maintained intact as long as possible—a haven of loving counsel, of peace and joy to the growing children. How sad when death invades, when the fire goes out on the heartstone and the family is scattered. What the children lose by the death of a parent only those realize who have grown up without that love and advice which a parent alone can bestow.

No doubt, tens of thousands of parents have found premature graves, who might have lived years of usefulness, had they but known what was sapping their strength, and slowly but surely pushing them into the grave.

There are tens of thousands of parents to-day in agony of mind through fear of death from kidney disease, who do not know they are doctoring only symptoms—such as wakefulness, nervousness, a splendid feeling one day and an all gone one another, dropsy, weak heart action, pneumonia, neuralgia, fickle appetite, etc., while the real trouble is poisoned blood caused by diseased kidneys. Unless purified with Warner's Safe Cure they will just as surely die, as though poisoned with arsenic.

If you are suffering as described, and have been for any length of time, you are, unless you get relief right speedily, stricken with death, whether you know it or not.

Doctors publicly admit that they cannot cure advanced kidney disease; they are too bigoted to use Warner's Safe Cure because it is an advertised remedy; consequently, unless you use your own good judgment, secure and use Warner's Safe Cure, a specific, which has proved itself in tens of thousands of cases to be all it is represented, your home, through your death, will be broken up and your loved ones deprived of that which money cannot purchase or friends supply.

Already too many loving parents, noble, kind and true, have gone down to premature graves through ignorance of their condition, and the bigotry of physicians. It is time to cry a halt, and we beg of you, for the love you bear you home and the duty you owe yourself, to give this matter your careful and conscientious consideration.

MIRACULOUS RESTORATION.

That dainty lady tripping by,
How light her step, how bright her eye,
How fresh her cheek with healthful glow,
Like roses that in Maytime blow!

And yet few weeks have passed away
Since she was fading, day by day.
The doctor's skill could naught avail;
Weaker she grew, and thin and pale.

At last, while in a hopeless frame,
One day she said, "There is a name
I've often seen—a remedy—
Perhaps 'twill help; I can but try."

And so, according to direction,
She took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription,
And every baleful symptom fled,
And she was raised as from the dead.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the world-famed, invigorating tonic and nervine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. It is the only medicine for the distressing weaknesses and derangements peculiar to women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. FROM CRADLE TO COFFIN.

We rock the cradle gayly, and swing it to and fro,
A new life sleeps within. In tender tones and low,
A mother soothes to slumber, in love notes soft and mild,
While held in sleep and safety there rests an earth-born child.
As we rock the cradle gayly.

We lay aside the cradle, the bird its nest has flown,
And spread its pinions boldly to make its way alone;
To fly, to fall in sorrow, or rise and keep its way,
'Mid toils temptations, triumphs, fair fruitage of life's day,
As we lay aside the cradle.

We bend above the coffin, another soul has fled:
The earthly fight is over, is won or lost, or dead.
The babe who in the cradle first knew of earthly strife,
And there with hands close folded, lies all we know of life,
As we bend above the coffin.

—Pictorial West.

Mamie Floyd's Mistake.

Ha, Miss Floyd, nothing wrong with you, eh? You really set a magnificent example to your sex—no, no. I won't sit down; must have my constitutional you know. I hope your mother is not ill?"

"O, I guess she's feeling rather bad. She's been down stairs quite a long time; but she's got a dozen lemons, anyhow, so She'll do," was Miss Mamie G. Floyd's most unfilial reply.

Old Dr. Stewart toddled away, and Miss Mamie G. Floyd nestled back more comfortably on her deck chair, perched her pretty little head cosily on the pink hued cushion, without which she never traveled, and then gave herself up to an interesting story which possessed the delight of making her "creep like mad." She was almost alone in her glory, for the Griselda had only steamed out of New York Bay the evening before, and such ladies as were on board were too nervous or to ill to face a decidedly rough morning on deck; Miss Mamie had come to the end of her book, and, when at last she closed the volume, and had recovered from the last creep, she found herself sole occupant of the lee side, with a heavy rain soaking the awning, the long row of empty deck chairs for her only companions.

"Well, this is lively, anyhow," she mused, dismally. "How do I suppose I am going to pass the next six days? Even ma is better off than I am; she has the lemons and the uncertainty, while I"——

Miss Mamie strangled a yawn, and then all of a sudden, she was very wide awake. Away at the end of the deck she descried two figures, one slender and graceful, despite the huge mackintosh that covered it, the other a very tall, very broad-shouldered man, who was distinctly familiar to Miss Mamie, and at sight of whom she pursed up her pretty lips and emitted a soft whistle.

"Jack Dudley, by all that's queer,," she remarked to herself. "I guess ma will have a fit when she finds this out. Up to his old games, I suppose. Looks like it."

But at that moment the female figure vanished and Mr. Dudley came striding along the wet deck, his collar well turned up and his hands deep in his pockets.

"Miss Floyd! You here? I—What a surprise!"

"Quite a long time since we met, isn't it, Mr. Dudley? No, don't take off your cap; you'll get your head wet, and that will serve no purpose, anyhow!"

Jack Dudley laughed and shook himself like a big Newfoundland dog: "One wet inch more or less, what does it matter?" he said as he sat down on the empty chair next her and looked at her with much admiration expressed in his dark blue eyes; "but its a very different thing for you. Are you wise to stay out here, Miss Floyd? Your rug is soaked through."

"I like it," was the reply; and in the face of this there was nothing more to be said. Jack Dudley having learned by experience that whatever Miss Floyd desired to do, that she did.

There was considerable silence after this, broken at last by her.

"Well," she observed sharply, "have you nothing to say, Ja—Mr. Dudley?"

"Nothing at all, Ma—Miss Floyd."

Miss Mamie prodded viciously at her chair with her dainty little feet.

"Who are you fooling around with now?" was her next question.

"Am I to understand by that that you allude to our former engagement for 'fooling round?' was the reply given very mournfully. "If so, you very——"

Miss Mamie laughed. "What an actor you are, Jack, off the stage."

"How did you know I had ever been on one?" he asked, eagerly.

"I saw you in Chicago a while back, and I just enjoyed myself, I can tell you! That was the first and last time I have seen or heard of you since——" and Miss Mamie finished abruptly.

A certain look of relief flashed into Jack Dudley's eyes; then it changed to one of sadness and admiration mingled.

"You used to be kind to me once, Mamie," he murmured softly.

A bright flush covered Miss Floyd's piquant face; her brows contracted a little and her lips tightened.

"Don't you think the less we discuss the past the better?" she said; and with that she sat upright and began to unfurl her rug.

"I guess I'll go down awhile now," she observed in her easiest tones. "Will you please give me a hand here, Mr. Dudley?"

The hint conveyed in her first words was not lost on Jack Dudley, and as he carefully unwrapped her and helped her to progress along the slippery deck his manner was only that of the conventional stranger who offers assistance to a fair damsel in need of help.

Miss Mamie G. Floyd found her mother in the hands of the stewardess, uttering loud cries of alarm as the ship gave an occasional lurch, but otherwise in robust health.

"I guess I won't spring Jack on her just yet; she feels badly enough as it is, after all I am quite able to take care of myself, and I know just how much that young man is worth. If I don't, I ought to! I had experience enough for any girl!"

Miss Mamie moved her wet garments, took a farewell glance at her chestnuting bang, and walked away with an appetite that provoked a wonder in her mother's breast, a wonder accompanied with a shudder.

She cast her sharp eyes around the saloon foe that female figure who had shown herself for a moment on the deck with Mr. Dudley, but, though there were one or two of her own sex possessed of sufficient temerity to brave the luncheon table, Miss Mamie soon decided she was not there.

"It will be kind of quaint watching Jack flirt with some other girl and fool her as he fooled me," she thought, as she discussed the good things. "My! what an idiot I made myself. I guess he'll have to be very sharp to get the best of me again in a hurry. How well he wears. I wonder what he uses for his mustache? It is simply heavenly, that color."

"Are you going to venture on deck again this afternoon, Miss Floyd? If so, will you let me make you comfortable? I have found the snuggest corner in the world, where neither spray nor rain can reach," said Mr. Dudley, when lunch was over.

"That so? Then I'm there. I'll only be a minute."

Really she spent a very pleasant afternoon, and was quite astonished when the first gong went for dinner. Jack had made her cozy, and had amused her with endless anecdotes of his daily life and career since the memorable day when Mr. Hiram P. Floyd, Jr., had suddenly shown him the door of the mansion in Fifth avenue, and his position as fiance to Miss Mamie had come to a premature end. To some people this unexpected meeting with an old lover might have been both painful and disagreeable; but neither Mr. Dudley nor Miss Mamie appeared to experience any discomfort. With one mind they banished the past and gave themselves up to the more agreeable present.

It was not until Miss Floyd was safely tucked in her berth that night, where neither the mother's very audible groans nor the noise of the distant screw combined could rob her of her sleep, that she realized exactly what she had been doing.

"I suppose Hiram would just about smash me if he knew I had been even civil to Jack; but as he won't know, I needn't trouble myself about it. Seems such a pity," she mused dozily, "that Jack is such an awful black sheep. I wonder if that old story is quite true? Hiram swore it was, of course, and Jack didn't defend himself; well, but then it was an awkward thing, I guess, to have to prove you ain't a thief and haven't swindled your best friend. He does not look like a thief, especially with that lovely mustache. I half wish that I——"

But Miss Mamie's wish, what ever it was, was lost in dreamland, and when she awoke the next morning all traces of romance had left her mind.

"He will just do to carry my things and look after me. One must have somebody, and, of course, if ma will insist on crossing at this time of the year one is glad to find anybody decent, whether one knows him to be a thief or not."

Fortunate it was for Mrs. Hiram P. Floyd's peace of mind that she remained in total ignorance of who her daughter's companion was on the deck, or it is doubtful whether even the dread of a sudden and awful collapse would have restrained her from rushing up to protect her progeny.

This state of affairs continued for three days, while very bad weather raged, and during this time Miss. Mamie and Mr. Dudley had the deck almost to themselves.

On the morning of the fourth day, however, Dr. Stuart was seen gallantly assisting a fair and very evident sufferer up the companion stairs.

Quick as lightning Miss Mamie discovered Jack's companion of the first day, but beyond raising his hat Mr. Dudley evinced no further desire to leave her side and approach the other lady, although by and by he rose on some pretense of writing a letter and went below.

Miss Mamie was by nature conversational and also sympathetic. She pitied the poor creature whose pale face testified to the misery she had been and still was enduring, and when Dr. Stuart in a few confidential words informed her that he had discovered the young lady to be quite alone and evidently in great trouble. Mamie's warm heart went out to her mother and brother so frequently deplored.

In five minutes the two women were friends, and Miss Mamie decided that Dr. Stuart had not been wrong when he had said that Miss Elliott was very desolate, very sad and very poor. She did not even possess a rug, and was covered with a thin flimsy shawl, until Mamie sent the deck steward for some of her manifold wraps, and, despite Miss Elliott's protestation, had her swathed in them until she resembled nothing so much as a mummy.

When the luncheon gong sounded Mamie had determined that for the rest of the voyage, at any rate, Miss Elliott should have real care and attention. She informed Mr. Dudley of this, and tried to enlist his ready sympathy. To her surprise Jack was slow to give it.

"I don't—if you will allow me to presume to advise you, Miss Floyd—I don't think you should allow yourself to become too intimate with this lady. One never knows what that sort of thing leads to. Besides, it is rather strange, you know, traveling alone with no rugs or"——

"Perhaps if you were a poor governess who had been shamefully treated you would have to travel alone, and might not be able to afford rugs. As if that made any difference!" was Miss Mamie's retort.

Jack Dudley said no more; only he managed to express an extraordinary amount in the glance he gave his ox-afiance, which glance had the effect of discomposing Miss Mamie just a little.

"I suppose I'm doing the wrong thing in letting Jack be so intimate, but I can't help myself; it is only for one week, and it don't hurt anybody as they don't know. Funny he should not be kind about that poor thing—she's pretty enough to get any man's pity!"

Miss Elliott certainly was pretty; there was a pathetic, wistful look in her dark brown eyes that won her immediate sympathy and admiration. All the passengers had a kind word for her, and she was voted a charming, modest, simple creature.

Miss Mamie tried to awaken an interest for her protege in her mother, but this was vain. Mrs Hiram P. Floyd could think of no one but herself, and her ailments, and since the weather continued a trifle boisterous refused absolutely to stir from her comfortable berth. Miss Elliott had made several pretty little offers of assistance to the suffering lady, but Miss Mamie only shook her head.

"Best leave her alone. We can't do her any good; she would have a fit of hysterics if she were to see such big waves."

"Dr. Stuart tells me we shall be at Queenstown to-morrow," said Miss Elliott after a pause.

Miss Mamie looked at her sharply. "Are you glad or sorry?" she asked in her abrupt way.

The other gave a little sigh, tears were filling her eyes and her lips quivered. "I—I should have been glad once, but now there is no one to greet me. I am alone, not even a friend left."

"I guess you're wrong there; you've got me."

Miss Elliott turned impulsively, "Ah! how can I thank you? How good you have been! You are an angel!"

Miss Mamie tried to laugh at this, but somehow she felt wretched. It seemed to her dreadful to contemplate an existence utterly, entirely alone, then Jack's eyes would follow her, and down at the bottom of her heart there lived an uneasy sensation which was not be be clearly defined. She consoled herself whenever a qualm of conscience followed on the thought that she was deceiving her mother by remembering for the last three days she had scarcely spoken to Mr. Dudley alone, and that consequently her conduct was not so reprehensible as it might have been.

That evening she and Gladys Elliott sat together in her cabin, and with a view to amuse the English girl, prompted, it must be said by evident desire shown by Miss Elliott to be permitted a glimpse of the other's treasures, the American produced all the pretty contents of her cabin trunk and spread out her jewels.

"I guess they're pretty enough," Miss Mamie allowed as the other broke into loud exclamations of admiration, "this was a gift from Dr. Biddolph; I'm going to marry him you know. Now, I think you've had enough of this stuffy place; let us go on deck."

Miss Elliott watched her hastily throw the little leather cases into the traveling bag with deep interest. "Is that quite safe?" she asked eagerly. Miss Mamie showed her the lock. "Quaint, isn't it, and awful simple? But you see, no one could open it unless they knew just how."

Upon deck Miss Elliott and Mr. Jack Dudley came together in the dark for one minute, and it certainly was strange how much two comparative strangers—two moreover, who expressed such a strong and mutual dislike—had to say to one another before Mamie appeared.

Everything was confusion as the Griselda reached Queenstown. Miss Mamie received a perfect budget of telegrams and letters, and she went into the ladies' saloon to read them. Scarcely had she entered, however, before she became aware that some one was crouched in a corner, weeping, and looking round she discovered Miss Elliott.

In two minutes she had learned all. Gladys had expected a letter to reach her at Queenstown with some money in it. This letter did not come. Truth to tell, her account of this was so confused and broken that, had Miss Mamie been less excited and impulsive, she might have been a little doubtful, but, as it was, without a moment's hesitation, she walked down to her cabin with much determination. On the way up again she met Jack Dudley.

"I am afraid, after all, that the poor girl is in great trouble," he said, drawing Miss Mamie to one side. "I saw her face just now when the mail came in. Do you know, I believe she has not a cent to bless herself with. I—I—it's horrible, and deuced awkward, too. I should like to help her, but you see a man can't do that sort of thing without insulting. I wonder if—I mean—look here, dear"—that "dear" was a great shock to Miss Mamie—"will you help me?" I have only got my check-book with me, but I have written a check for £25; perhaps you can cash it on board, and then you can offer to lend her the money, and she will never know that I had anything to do with it."

Miss Mamie held out her hand." "Give me the check," she said, quietly; "I will cash it and put your loan with mine; for it's funny, isn't it, but I was just about to do the same thing!" There was a little pause, and then she said, softly: "I knew you had a real good heart all along, Jack," and with that she went away.

It was with some difficulty Miss Mamie induced Gladys Elliott to accept the loan of so large a sum, but by dint of coaxing, and common sense argument she succeeded at last, and the envelope inclosing the bank notes was slipped into the other's hand.

As soon as she was alone, Miss Mamie unfolded Jack's check. "For five-and twenty pounds," she read, and somehow the writing blurred all at once. "And that's the man Hiram picked out and called a thief! I guess he made a mistake, and so did I. I'll go and speak to Jack this very minute. Suppose I am going to marry Mr. Biddolph, there's no harm in saying I'm sorry to an old love." But fate, in the form of her mother, appeared at this jucture and prevented her. There must be a letter written at once to go off by the tender and catch the next steamer outward bound. Mamie must write it without delay. Despite her daughter's protests that it was too late, Miss Mamie had to obey, and then dashed on deck in time to see the tender half way to land, and to learn by the motion of the Griselda that her engines were hard at work again.

"Never mind now, I can find Jack," she determined; and away she marched on her voyage of discovery. But, though she looked ill she was tired, no sign of Mr. Dudley was visible. Gladys Elliott, too, had disappeared from the ladies' saloon, but that was nothing strange.

It was not until she was seated at dinner that Miss Mamie heard the startling intelligence that Mr. Dudley and that poor, pretty Miss Elliott were among the few passengers who had disembarked at Queenstown; and while the truth that she had been shamefully "done" was slowly but surely creeping into her mind. Miss Mamie made another discovery, one even more unpleasant to realize than the first. As she was seated in her cabin, trying to puzzle out the mystery, she was suddenly confronted with the sight of her traveling bag wide open, staring at her defiantly from the berth. In an instant she knew the worst. Every single jewel had gone, and in their place was a little note, which when she read it, left her utterly speechless and pale to the lips:

> DEAR MISS FLOYD: The smartness of your nation is proverbial, but when your brother kicks your next admirer out of doors, let him be warned as to further results. I have waited some time for my revenge; it has come at last, and, I may add, come in the pleasantest fashion possible. My wife, Gladys Elliott Dudley, and myself being decidedly reduced in circumstances, have to offer to you our most grateful thanks. Your jewels will keep us most comfortably for a long time, while the money you were kind enough to lend us will not come amiss. Alltogether you will allow that not even you yourself could have done the trick neater. Doubtless you will institute some sort of proceedings against us, but as we have nearly a day's start, we may give yot some trouble. Trusting your marriage may be a happy one, I remain your obedient servant.
> P. S. Of course, I need hardly add that I have no banking account, and that, therefore, my check is worthless.

For one hour did Miss Mamie G. Floyd sit gazing at this letter, and then with determination she tore it to atoms and threw it out of the open port. "No," she said' "I'll do nothing. It served me right, and as I don't want to hear everyone tell me so I'll hold my tongue about this affair. The paltry hundred pounds they are welcome to, though its awkward about the jewels, but I must make that all right with Paul Biddolph."

Miss Mamie paused for an instant after this. The next voyage I take," she then observed, slowly, "I guess I'll stay down with ma and the lemons."—London World.

She Was from the West.

"A conductor of a drawing-room car or a sleeping car sees lots of funny things and some things that are not so funny," said a veteran of the rail to the inquisitive reporter. "The question is often asked if it is well for a woman to travel alone. I say yes, most emphatically, provided she possesses just two qualities—self-respect and self-reliance. With these she may go anywhere nowadays, and the danger of insult or offensive attentions on the part of men will be reduced to a minimum.

"I remember a Western woman who came to the colored porter of a sleeping car in which I was once coming from Cincinnati to New York. She was handsomely dressed, and had every mark of a lady about her. She told the porter that her ticket only took her as far as Philadelphia. She wanted to go on to New York, but hadn't a cent of money with her, and her trunks had been left behind. The porter who was one of the best men in his position that I ever saw, was so confident of the woman's honesty that he became surety for her fare to New York.

"It seems that a man overheard the conversation between the lady and the porter. He was going to New York, and had a section of the sleeper all to himself. The woman in her unlucky plight had no berth. So the man went to the porter and through him offered the lower berth in his section to the lady. After some hesitation she accepted the offer and retired early.

"During the night the man got out of his berth a number of times on some pretext or other, and always managed to hit against the side of the lower berth with the evident design of awakening its occupant. He succeeded in doing this. After he had gone out to the ice-tank for the last time the lady called the porter to her berth and said: 'When that man offered me a berth I thought he was a gentleman. He has bit my berth three or four times to-night, and I know it does not happen accidentally. If he insults me I shall use this,' and she stuck out through the curtain a small revolver.

"The porter knew by the woman's hot tone that she was in earnest, and he went out the water-cooler, where the man was drinking two drops of water, and told him what she said, and also about the revolver. It scared the fellow, and he hung around and didn't dare to go back to his berth for half an hour. The woman wasn't troubled again, you bet.

"After she got to New York and her friends she made her fare all right and handsomely rewarded the porter. We learned afterward that she was the wife of a California millionaire. Now that woman had not only self-respect but self-reliance, too. And any woman having these qualities needn't fear to go anywhere nowadays. She will get along all right, never fear."—Boston Record

Shrewd Advertisers.

Readers of the newspapers of the day cannot fail to be impressed with the fact that the modern advertiser is progressive.

He is compelled to be, else competitors more active in the invention of new advertising devices, will outstrip him in public favor.

The value of printers' ink judiciously and scientifically employed cannot be overestimated; it is the medium whereby a meritoriously discovery is raised from local fame to a position in the public esteem. Hence the columns of the newspapers are daily used by hosts of advertisers and in the competition which is indulged in to attain the desired end the reader is oftentimes amused.

The greatest of American advertisers, and it may as well be said in the world, is H. H. Warner of Rochester, N. Y., whose name has been everywhere familiar in connection with Warner's Safe Cure, widely advertised because of its merit in the prevention and cure of kidney diseases.

By printer's ink this great discovery has achieved world-wide popularity and thousands feel grateful for the knowledge thus acquired of this greatest of modern remedies.

Furthermore, the public has been taught that disorders of the lungs, brain, heart and liver which have hitherto been regarded and treated by the profession as distinctive diseases are not so in fact, but are the attending symptoms of disease of the kidneys, therefore, the consumptive, the apoplectic, the paralytic, and the sufferer from nervous disorders can be restored to health by Warner's Safe Cure, which will remove the true cause of those disorders by restoring the kidneys to healthy action.

The advertising methods employed by this greatest of advertisers are invariably instructive and, although the reader may sometimes be "caught" in reading an advertisement, which was not at first supposed to be such, there is nevertheless no time lost since useful information is invarably gained concerning life's great problem.

A Mechanical Wonder.

The Metropolitan.

One of the unique spectacles at present attracting the attention of mechanics as well as ordinary observers in this city, is a five story building the machinery of which on every floor, is run apparently without motive power. One sees no shafting, no connection between the evolving wheels of lathes, punches and other forms of mechanism that are in operation, and nothing of the labyrinth of pullies and belts to which the eye has become accustomed in all factories. Electricity has taken the place of steam, wires of belts and a curious little motor supplies the power. The building referred to be used for the manufacture of all kinds of electric motors. In the cellar is a boiler and a small engine which run a dynamo of seventy-five horse power. From the latter, wires are distributed to the floors above, where are smaller motors that may be run or not according to the needs of the establishment. These wires are connected with each motor by a key which enables the workman to turn the current on or off at will. Four of these tiny mechanisms furnish work for eighty men. Electricity is found to be cheaper than steam because there is a saving in the use of coal, engine, belting, pullies, etc., and hence power. Another advantage is that electric wires may be stretched for several miles, and the moter at that distance from the dynamo will be run as well as if it were in the next room. It is said that the power of a dynamo goes about three times as far as that of an engine of equal horse power, and it is believed that this is the only establishment in the world worked in this manner, that is by wires instead of shafts and belting. Verily the revolutions of art and science are becoming more miraculous every day.

Sagacity of Shepherd Dogs.

Portland Oregonian.

A gentleman who has had considerable to do with shepherds and drovers in England and Scotland, speaking of the story published in the Oregonian a day or two since about a dog separating the ewes and wethers of a flock by noticing the ear marks, says there is no doubt but what it is true. He has known dogs to go into a drove of sheep which were marked with several different marks, and single out every one bearing his master's mark. He says the shepherds train their dogs by taking them along when puppies under their care as they mark the sheep, and the dog is thus taught to distinguish marks. He says further that at the sheep market in Islington drivers have their sheep marked with red or blue paint, and when the drives get mixed a dog will go into the band and bring out all his master's sheep, telling them by the color of the marking. Shepherd dogs are the most intelligent species of the canine family and when they are brought up among herds of sheep and trained to take charge of them, it is but reasonable to suppose that they might learn to notice marks of any kind on them.

May Pluck Opulent Americans.

In view of the present financial gloom which overshadows the people of France and especially of Paris, it is suggested for the comfort of such speculative Frenchman as have been squeezed in the Panama Canal collapse, or the copper syndicate failure, that a great many Americans are going to the Paris Exposition during the coming summer, and their presence with plenty of money to spend will enable unlucky Frenchmen to recoup themselves.

"The American tourist," the Boston Herald remarks in this connection "is the best bird that the foreigners ever had a chance to pluck, and they rarely let their opportunities pass unimproved."

Method in His Madness.

One of the most remarkable characters Cincinnati ever saw is dead. It was Dr. Joseph Garretson, of west Eighth street. For sixty-two years of his life he never drank a cup of coffee nor sipped a little tea. For fifty years of his life he ate no meat. For twenty-six years of his life he never took so much as a pinch of salt. He came of English stock, and was born in that county of long-lived people, York, Pa., Feb. 27, 1808. His ideas were very simple, but on the subject of diet he believed in a vegetarian diet. Nature, he used to say, has supplied this food, and it is against nature when a man eats meat. To those who would eat meat, however, he insisted that it should be boiled. He used to point to the Indians as proof of this, claiming that they were never sick unless from wounds. He trusted no cooks to prepare his food, but did it himself. When he went upon a journey he took his food with him, only a few weeks before his death he was in New York city, going the entire distance without his food. He claimed that everything greasy was injurious to the human system, and of all things horrible was a piece of meat fried. Dyspepsia and all the ghosts and nightmares of indegestion he attributes to frying. His only drink during his long life was water, or sometimes a lemonade. He was continually experimenting on the subject of diet, and attributed his long life entirely to his diet and habits.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

In the Spring

Nearly everybody needs a good medicine. The impurities which have accumulated in the blood during the cold months, must be expelled or when the mild days come, and the effect of bracing air is lost, the body is liable to be overcome by debility or some serious disease. The remarkable success achieved by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the many words of praise it has received, make it worthy your confidence. We ask you to give this medicine a trial. We are sure it will do you good.

"We have used Hood's Sarsaparilla for several years, and feel proud to recommend it as an excellent spring medicine or to be used at all times as a blood purifier. For children as well as grown people we consider it the best. We set aside one bottle for our boy to take in the spring. He is nine years old and has enjoyed good health ever since we began giving it to him. We are seldom without it." B. F. GROVER, Rochester, N. H.

N. B.—If you have made up your mind to get Hood's Sarsaparilla do not take any other.

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

The drum in the scouring machine in Raymond's blind factory at St. Cloud burst and a fragment struck an employ named Johnson in the side, causing serious injury.

Willie Hubbard, a young son of S. H. Hubbard of Parker's Prairie stumbled while carrying a gun and the contents entered his shoulder, nflicting perhaps, a fatal wound.

Joel Swanson, the seventeen-year-old boy arrested some time ago for stealing a horse from George Weisman at Cannon Falls, has been committed to the reform school.

Gustave John, the forger arrested at Milbank, waived examination at Mankato, and was remanded to jail to await the action of the grand jury in May. He admits that he committed the forgery.

Cornelius Van Inwager, a resident of Hastings for the past twenty years and proprietor of the Sibley street restaurant, died from general paralysis aged eighty-three. He leaves a wife.

Miss Fannie Bradford, a resident of and graduate from Spring Valley now in attendance at the Winona normal, is one of the ten young ladies selected to participate in the graduating exercises of that school this spring.

President J. J. Hill, of the Manitoba, arrived home from the East. In reference to the report that he would build northwest from West Superior, he stated that the Manitoba would not build a mile of road in Minnesota this year.

Three or four citizens of Austin who ought to have been wiser were taken in for $35 by a couple of traveling confidence men, who showed them the soap and watch trick. One of the victims subsequently made complaint to the authorities, and recovered his money.

John Brooks, a switchman in the yards at Brainerd fell off the front end of a switch engine and had his right leg crushed from his knee down. His leg was amputated just above the knee. His recovery is doubtful. He had a family.

The sheriff from Winona arrived and was well pleased to find his man, Thomas Field, in jail at Faribault. Field admitted to Chief Geiger that he took the saw into the jail which Sheriff Stewart found there. Field is a young man of pleasing address, and answers in many particulars the published description of Tascott.

Building has already actively commenced at Albert Lea, and several new buildings are now well under way. Wohlhuter & Co. commenced excavating for a large extension to their store on Broadway. A large force of men and teams are engaged in building the long bridge at the outlet of Fountain lake.

The barn and granary on the farm of H. B. Wolff near Morris were burned. Joseph Hall, the tenant, lost all his seed grain and farm machinery. The farm house of Charles Leman in the town of Baker was entirely destroyed by fire, the family waking from sleep to find the flames all about them, They were unable to save even their clothing.

Hon. J. L. MacDonald and wife have arrived from Washington in good health. They have been to New York since the inauguration. The judge says that he is out of politics and wants no office hereafter. He intends to return to the practice of law and will probably locate in St. Paul or Minneapolis.

A five-year-old son of Joe Bourassc was struck and ran over at Little Falls by a team of horses attached to a milk wagon. The boy was playing in the street, and the driver of the team did not notice him. One of the horse's hoofs struck him on the temple and the wagon wheels ran over the body. He died from the affects of the injuries within twenty minutes after he was hurt.

An employe in R. F. Walter's shoe shop at Brainerd, was run over and instantly killed near Crow Wing station on the Northern Pacific road. The remains were found by section men. Deceased left the shop on Saturday and had not been seen since until Sunday evening, when he called at Charles Shonteil's and asked shelter, saying he was sick. During the night he departed, and it is thought he wandered out on the track and was overtaken by a train while in a fit. His family lives at Deerwood.

Telegraph Operator Mavoorick of Bingham Lake was arrested by Postmaster Stedman of Windom on a charge of opening letters belonging to Miss Richmond, whom the young man intended to marry some time ago and procured a license for the purpose, but the engagement appears to have been broken off. Mavoorick was evidently in pursuit of information of some character. He admitted the offense to Mr. Stedman, and is now awaiting the arrival of the United States marshal.

Mrs. H. A. Hobart of Red Wing, state president of the W. C. T. U., in a recent article in a local paper, made charges against Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, state president of the Iowa W. C. T. U., that she refused to admit constitutionally elected delegates to their seats in the national convention because of their endorsement of the third party; that she is attempting to make it appear that there is a wide-spread disaffection in the ranks of the W. C. T. U., and, that she has been receiving a handsome salary from the national committee of the Republican party to do this kind of work. A copy of the charges was sent to Mrs. Foster, who is now in New York, who answered in an open letter to Mrs. Hobart, denying the charge and demanding proof.

Biblical Tough Things.

Modern Research Has Failed to Substantiate Scientific Slurs on Religion—Common-Sense Views of the Creation and the flood.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 24.—At the Tabernacle this morning: after expounding some passages of Scripture in regard to the mysteries: the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., gave out the hymn beginning:

How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent Word.

The subject of his sermon was, "Tough Things in the Bible," and his text, II Peter, iii., 16: "In which are some things hard to be understood." Dr. Talmage said:

The Bible is the most common-sense book in all the world. But there are many things in it which require explanation. It all depends on the mood in which you come to this grand old book. You may take hold of the handle of the sword or its sharp edge. You may employ on its mysteries the rule of multiplication or subtraction. There are things, as my text suggests, hard to be understood, but I shall solve some of them, hoping to leave upon all honest minded people the impression that if four or five of them can be explained, perhaps they may all be explained.

Hard thing the first: The Bible says the world was created in six days, while geology says it was hundreds of thousands of years in process of building. "In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth." "In the beginning." There you can roll in 10,000,000 years, if you want to. There is no particular date given—no contest between science and revelation. Though the world may have been in process of creation for millions of years suddenly and quickly, and in one week, it may have been fitted up for man's residence. Just as a great mansion may have been many years in building, and yet in one week it may be curtained and chandeliered and cushioned and upholstered for a bride and groom.

You are not compelled to believe that the world was made in our six days. It may not have been a day of twenty-four hours, the day spoken of in the first chapter; it may have been God's day, and a thousand years with him are one day. "And the evening and the morning were in the sixth day"—God's day. You and I living in the seventh day, the Sabbath of the world, the day of Gospel redemption, the grandest day of all the week, in which each day may have been made up of thousands of years. Can you tell me how a man can get his mind and soul into such a blasphemous twist as to scoff at that first chapter of Genesis, its verses billows of light surging up from sapphire seas of glory?

The Bible represents that light was created on Monday, and the sun was not created until Thursday. Just think of it! A book declaring that light was created three days before the sun shone! Why don't you know that heat and electricity emit heat and light independent of the sun? Beside that, when the earth was in process of condensation, it was surrounded by thick vapors and the discharge of many volcanoes in the primary period, and all this obscuration may have hindered the light of the sun from falling on the earth until that Thursday morning. Beside that, David Brewster and Herschel, the astronomer, and all the modern men of their class, agree in the fact that the sun is not light, that it is an opaque mass, that it is only the candlestick that holds the light, a phosphorescent atmosphere floating around it, changing and changing, so it is not to be at all wondered at that not until Thursday morning its light fell on the earth. Beside that, the rocks in crystalization emit light from a thousand surfaces, the alkalies, for instance. The metallic bases emit light. There was a time in the history of the world when there were thousands of miles of liquid granite flaming with light. Besides that, it has been found that there are burned-out volcanoes in other worlds, which, when they were in explosion and activity, must have cast forth an insufferable light, throwing a glare all over our earth. Beside that, there are the aurora borealis and the aurora anchalis. A book on physical science says: "Capt. Bonnycastle, coming up the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the 17th of September, 1826, was aroused by the mate of the vessel in great alarm from an unusual appearance. It was a starlight night, when suddenly the sky became overcast. In the direction of the high land of Cornwallis County an instantaneous and intensely vivid light, resembling the aurora, shot out from the hitherto gloomy and dark sea on the lee bow, that was so brilliant it lighted everything distinctly even to the masthead. The light spread over the whole sea between the two shores, and the waves, which before had been tranquil, became agitated. Capt. Bonnycastle describes the scene as that of a blazing sheet of awful and most brilliant light—a long and vivid line of light that showed the face of the high frowning land a breast. The sky became lowering and more intensely obscure. Long tortuous lines of light showed immense numbers of large fish darting about as if in consternation. The topsail yard and mizzen boom were lighted by the glare as if gaslights had been burned directly below them, and until just before daybreak, at 4 o'clock, the most minute objects were distinctly visible." My hearers, there are 10,000 sources of light besides the light of the sun.

Another hard thing: The story of the deluge and Noah's ark. They say that from the account there it must have rained 800 feet of water each day in order that it might be 15 cubits above the hills. They say the ark could not have been large enough to contain "two of every sort," for there would have been hundreds of thousands of creatures. They say that these creatures would have come from all lands and all zones. They say there was only one small window in the ark, and that would not have given fresh air to keep the animals inside the ark from suffocation. They say that the ark finally landed on a mountain 17,000 feet high. They say they do not believe the story. Neither do I. There is no such story in the Bible. I will tell you what the Bible story is. I must say that I have changed my mind in regard to some matters which once were to me very mysterious. They are no more mysterious. This is the key to the facts. This is the story of an eye-witness, Noah, his story incorporated afterward by Moses in the account. Noah described the scene just as it appeared to him. He saw the flood and he fathomed its depths. As far as eye could reach everything was covered up, from horizon to horizon, or, as it says, "under the whole heaven." He did not refer to the Sierra Nevadas, or to Mount Washington, for America had not been discovered, or if it had been discovered, he could not have seen so far off. He is giving the testimony of an eye-witness. God speaks after the manner of men when he says everything went under, and Noah speaks after the manner of men when he says everything did go under. An eye-witness. There is no need of thinking that the kangaroo leaped the ocean or that the polar bear came down from the ice.

Why did the deluge come? It came for the purpose of destroying the outrageous inhabitants of the then thinly populated earth, nearly all the population, probably very near the Ark before it was launched. What would have been the use of submerging North and South America, or Europe, or Africa, when they were not inhabited? And as to the skeptical suggestion that in order to have the water as deep as the Bible states, it must have rained 800 feet every day, I reply, the Bible distinctly declares that the most of the flood rose instead of falling. Before the account where it says "the windows of heaven were opened," it says, "all the fountains of the great deep were broken up." All geologists agree in saying that there are caverns in the earth filled with water, and they rushed forth, and all the lakes and rivers forsook their beds. The fountains of the great deep were broken up, and then the windows of heaven were opened. It is a strange thing that we should be asked to believe in this flood of the Bible, when geologists tell us that again and again and again the dry earth has been drowned out! Just open your geology and you will read of twenty floods. Is it not strange that infidel scientists wanting us to believe in the twenty floods of geological discovery, should, [illegible] Bible pronounce us non compos mentis.

Well, then, another thing, in regard to the size of the ark. Instead of being a mud scow, as some of those skeptic's would have us understand, it was a magnificent ship, nearly as large as the Great Eastern, three times the size of an ordinary man-of-war. At the time in the world when ship building was unknown, God had this vessel constructed, which turned out to be, almost in the same proportions as our staunchest modern vessels. After thousands of years of experimenting in naval architecture and in ship carpentery, we have at last got up to Noah's ark, that ship leading all the fleets of the world on its oceans. Well, Noah saw the animal creation going into the ark. He gave the account of an eye-witness. They were animals from the region where he lived, for the most part they were animals useful to man, and if noxious insects or poisonous reptiles went in it was only to discipline the patience and to keep alert the generations after the flood. He saw them going in. There a great number of them, and he gives the account of an eye-witness. They went in two and two of all flesh.

Years ago I was on a steamer on the River Tay, and I came to Perth, Scotland. I got off, and I saw the most wonderful agricultural show that I ever had witnessed. There were horses and cattle such as Rosa Bonheur never sketched, and there were dogs such as the loving pencil of Edwin Landseer never portrayed, and there were sheep and fowl and creatures of all sorts. Suppose that "two and two" of all the creatures of that agricultural show were put upon the Tay steamer to be transported to Dundee, and the next day I should be writing home to America and giving an account of the occurence, I would have used the same general phraseology that Noah used in regard to the embarkation of the brute creature in the ark—I would have said that they went in two and two of every sort. I would not have meant 6,000. A common-sense man myself, I would suppose that the people who read the letter were common-sense people.

"But how could you get them into the ark?" asked infidel scientists. "How could they be induced to go into the ark? He would have to pick them out and drive them in, and coax them in." Could not the same God who gave instinct to the animal inspire that instinct to seek for shelter from the storm? However, nothing more than ordinary animal instinct was necessary. Have you never been in the country when an August thunder-storm was coming up and heard the cattle moan at the bars to get in? and seen the affrighted fowl go upon the perch at noonday, and heard the affrighted dog and cat calling at the door, supplicating entrance? And are you surprised that in that age of the world, when there were fewer places of shelter for dumb beast, at the muttering and rumbling and flashing and quaking and darkening of an approaching deluge, the animal creation came moaning and bleating to the sloping embankment reaching up to the ancient Great Eastern and passed in? I have owned horses and cattle and sheep and dogs, but I never had a horse or a cow or a sheep or a dog that was so stupid it did not know enough to come in when it rained. And then, that one window in the ark which afforded such poor ventilation to the creatures that assembled—that small window in the ark which excites so much mirthfulness on the part of infidels. If they knew as much Hebrew as you could put on your little finger nail they would have known that that word translated window there means window course, a whole range of lights. Those ignorant infidels do not know a window pane from twenty windows. So if there is any criticism of the ark, there seems to be too much window for such a long storm. And as to the other charge that the windows of the ark must have been kept shut, and consequently all inside would have perished from suffocation. I have to say that there are people in this house today who, all the way from Liverpool to Barnegat Lighthouse, and for two weeks, were kept under deck, the hatches battered down because of the storm. Some of you, in the old-time sailing vessels, were kept nearly a month with the hatches down because of some long storm.

Then infidels say that the ark landed on a mountain 17,000 feet high, and that, of course, as soon as the animals came forth, they would all be frozen in the ice. That is geographical ignorance! Ararat is not merely the name for a mountain, but for a hilly district, and it may have been a hill 100 feet high, or 500, or 1,000 on which the ark alighted. Noah measured the depth of the water above the hill, and it is 15 cubits, or 27 feet. Ah! my friends, this story of the ark is no more incredible than if you should say to me: "Last summer I was among the hills of New England, and there came on the most terrific storm I ever saw, and the whole country was flooded. The waters came up over the hills; and to save our lives we got in a boat on the river, and even the dumb creatures were so affrighted they came moaning and bleating until we let them in the same boat."

We are not dependent upon the Bible for the story of the flood, entirely. All ages and all literatures have traditions, broken traditions, indistinct traditions, but still traditions. The old books of the Persians tell about the flood at the time of Ahriman, who so polluted the earth that it had to be washed by a great storm. The traditions of the Chaldeans say that in the time when Xisuthrus was king there was a great flood, and he put his family and his friends in a large vessel, and all outside of them were destroyed, and after a while the birds went forth and they came back and their claws were tinged with mud. Lucian and Ovid, celebrated writers, who had never seen the Bible, described a flood in the time of Deucalion. He took his friends into a boat, and the animals came running to him in pairs. So all lands and all ages and all literatures seem to have a broken and indistinct tradition of a calamity which Moses, here incorporating Noah's account, so grandly, so beautifully, so accurately, so solemnly records.

My prayer is that the God who created the world may create us anew in Christ Jesus; and that the God who made light three days before the sun shone may kindle in our hearts a light that will burn on long after the sun has expired; and that the God who ordered the ark built and kept open more than 100 years that the antediluvans might enter it for shelter, may graciously incline us to accept the invitation which this morning rose in music from the throne, saying: "Come thou and all thy house into the ark."

Another hard thing to be understood: The story that the sun and moon stood still to allow Joshua to complete his victory. Infidel scientists declare that an impossibility. But if a man have brain and strength enough to make a clock, can he not start it and stop it, and start it again and stop it again? If God have strength and wisdom to make the clock of the universe, the great machinery of the worlds, has he not strength enough and wisdom enough to start it and stop it, and start it again and stop it again? Or stop one wheel, or stop twenty wheels, or stop all the wheels? Is the clock stronger than the clock maker? Does the corn thresher know more than the machinist? Is the universe mightier than its God? But people ask how could the moon have been seen to stop in the daytime? Well, if you have never seen the moon in the daytime, it is because you have not been a very diligent observer of the heavens. Besides that, it was not necessary for the world literally to stop. By unusual refraction of the sun's rays the day might have been prolonged. So that, while the earth continued on its path in the heavens, it figuratively stopped. You must remember that these Bible authors used the vernacular of their own day, just as you and I say the sun went down. The sun never goes down. We simply describe what appears to the human eye. Besides that, the world, our world, could have literally stopped without throwing the universe out of balance. Our world has two motions—the one around the sun and the other on its own axis. It might have stopped on its own axis, while at the same time it kept on its path through the heavens. So their was no need of stellar confusion because our world slackened its speeds or entirely stopped in its revolution on its own axis. That is none of the business of Jupiter, or Mars, or Mercury, or Saturn, or the Dipper.

Besides that, within the memory of man there have been worlds that were born and that died. A few years ago astronomers telegraphed, through the Associated Press, to all the world—the astronomers from the city of Washington—that another world has been discovered. Within a comparatively short space of time, astronomers tell us, thirteen worlds have burned down. From their observatory they notice first that the worlds look like other worlds, then they became a deep red, showing they were on fire; then they became ashen, showing they were burned down; then they entirely disappeared, showing that even the ashes were scattered. Now, I say, if God can start a world, and swing a world, and destroy a world, he could stop one or two of them without a great deal of exertion, or he could by unusual refraction of the sun's rays continue the illumination. But infidel scientists say it would have been befitting for other worlds to stop on account of such a battle. Why, sirs, what Yorktown was for Revolutionary times, and what Gettysburg was in our civil contest, and what Sedan was in the Franco-German war, and what Waterloo was in the Napoleonic destiny—that was this battle of Joshua against the five allied armies of Gibe on. It was that battle that changed the entire course of history. It was a battle to Joshua as important as though a battle now should occur in which England and the United States and France and Germany and Italy and Turkey and Russia should fight for victory or annihilation. However much any other world, solar, lunar or stellar, might be hastened in its errand of light, it would be excusable if it lingered in the heavens for a little while and put down its sheaf of beams and gazed on such an Armageddon.

In the early part of this century there was what was called the Dark Day. Some of these aged men perhaps may remember it. It is known in history as the "Dark Day." Workmen at noon went to their houses, and courts and legislatures adjourned. No astronomers have ever been able to explain that dark day. Now, if God can advance the night earlier than its time, can he not adjourn the night until after its time? I often used to hear my father describe a night—I think he said it was in 1833—when his neighbors aroused him in great alarm. All the heavenly bodies seemed to be in motion. People thought our earth was coming to its destruction. Tens of thousands of stars shooting. No astronomers have ever been able to explain that star shooting. Now, does not your common sense teach you that if God could start and stop tens of thousands of worlds of meteors, he could start and stop two worlds? If God can engineer a train of 10,000 worlds or meteors, and stop them without accident or collision, can not he control two carriages of light; and by putting down a golden brake stop the moon? Under this explanation, instead of being skeptical about this sublime passage or the Bible, you will, when you read it, feel more like going down on your knees before God as you read: "Sun, stand thou still above Gibeon, and thou moon in the valley of Ajalon."

Then there is the Bible statement that a whale swallowed Jonah and ejected him upon dry land in three days. If you go to the museum at Nantucket, Mass., you will find the skeleton of a whale large enough to swallow a man. I said to the janitor, while I was standing in the museum. "Why it does not seem from the looks of this skeleton that that story in the Book of Jonah is so very improbable, does it?" "Oh, no," he replied, "it does not." There is a cavity in the mouth of the common whale large enough for a man to live in. There have been sharks found again and again with an entire human body in them. Besides that, the Bible says nothing about a whale. It says, "The Lord prepared a great fish;" and there are scientists who tell us that there were sea monsters in other days that make the modern whale seem very insignificant. I know in one place in the new testament it speaks of the whale as appearing in the occurrence I have just mentioned, but the word may just as well be translated "sea monster"—any kind of a sea monster. Procopius says, in the year 532, a sea monster was slain which had, for fifty years destroyed ships.

I suppose this sea monster that took care of Jonah may have been one of the great sea monsters that could have easily taken down a prophet, and he could have lived there three days if he had kept in motion so as to keep the gastric juices from taking hold of him and destroying, and at the end of three days the monster would naturally be sick enough to regurgitate Jonah. Besides that, my friends, there is one word which explains the whole thing. It says: "The Lord prepared a great fish." If a ship carpenter prepare a vessel to carry Texan beeves to Glascow, I suppose it can carry Texan beeves: if a ship carpenter prepare a vessel to carry coal to one of the Northern ports, I suppose it can carry coal; if a ship carpenter prepare a vessel to carry passengers to Liverpool; I suppose it can carry passengers to Liverpool; and if the Lord prepared a fish to carry one passenger, I suppose it could carry a passenger and the ventilation have been all right.

So all the strange things in the Bible can be explained if you wish to have them explained. And you can build them into a beautiful and healthful fire for your hearth, or you can with them put your immortal interests into conflagration. But you had better decide about the veracity of the Bible very soon. I want this morning to caution you against putting off making up your mind about this book. Ever since 1772 there has been great discussion as to who was the author of Junius' Letters, those letters so full of sarcasm and virtuperation and power. The whole English nation stirred up with it. More than 100 volumes written to discuss that question: "Who was Junius?" "Who wrote the letters of Junius?" Well, it is an interesting question to discuss, but still, after all, it makes but little practical difference to you and to me who Junius was, whether Sir Philip Francis, or Lord Chatham, or John Horne Tooke, or Horace Walpole, or Henry Grattan, or any one of the forty-four men who were seriously charged with the authorship. But it is an absorbing question, it is a practical question, it is an overwhelming question to you and to me, the authorship of this Holy Bible—whether the Lord God of heaven and earth or a pack of dupes; scoundrels or impostors. We can not afford to adjourn that question a week or a day or an hour, any more that a sea captain can afford to say: "Well, this is a very dark night. I have really lost my bearings; there is a light out there. I don't know whether it is a lighthouse or a false light on the shore; I don't know what it is; but I'll just go to sleep, and in the morning I'll find out." In the morning the vessel might be on the rocks and the beach strewn with the white faces of the dead crew. The time for that sea captain to find out about the lighthouse is before he goes to sleep. Oh, my friends, I want you to understand that in our deliberations about this Bible we are not at calm anchorage, but we are rapidly coming toward the coast, coming at the rate of seventy heart throbs a minute, and I must know whether it is going to be harbor or shipwreck.

I was so glad to read in the papers of the fact that the steamship Edam had come safely into harbor. A week before, the Persian Monarch, plowing its way toward the Narrows, a hundred miles out, saw signals of distress, bore down upon the vessel and found it was the steamship Edam. She had lost her propeller. She had 200 passengers on board. The merciful captain of the Persian Monarch endeavored to bring her in, but the tow line broke. He fastened it again, but the sea was rough and the tow line broke again. Then the night came on and the merciful captain of the Persian Monarch "lay to," thinking in the morning he could give rescue to the passengers. The morning came, but during the night the steamship Edam had disappeared, and the captain of the Persian Monarch brought his vessel into harbor saying how sad he felt because he could not give complete rescue to that lost ship. I am glad that afterward another vessel saw her and brought her into safety. But when I saw the story of that steamship Edam, drifting, drifting, drifting, I do not know where, but with no rudder, no lighthouse, no harbor, no help, I said: "That is a skeptic, that is an infidel, drifting, drifting, drifting, not knowing where he drifts." And then, when I thought of the Persian Monarch anchored in harbor, I said: "That is a Christian, that is a man who does all he can on the way, crossing the sea to help others, coming perhaps through a very rough voyage into the harbor, there safe and safe forever."

Would God that there might be some one to-day who would go forth and bring in these souls that are drifting. In this assemblage, how many score shall I say, a hundred or a thousand?—not quite certain about the truth of the Bible, not certain about anything. Drifting, drifting, drifting. Oh, how I would like to tow them in. I throw you this cable. Lay hold of that cable of the Gospel. Lay hold of it. I invite you all in. The harbor is wide enough, large enough for all the shipping. Come in, oh you wanderers on the deep. Drift no more, drift no more. Come into the harbor. See the glorious lighthouse of the Gospel, "Peace on earth, good will to men." Come into the harbor. God grant it may be said of all of you who are now drifting in your unbelief as it might have been said of the passengers of the steamship Edam, and as it was said centuries ago of the wrecked corn ship of Alexandria, "It came to pass that they all escaped safe to land."

The north-bound passenger train from the City of Mexico, on the Mexican National railway, was wrecked at Malvato, and the engineer and fireman instantly killed. It is believed that the disaster was caused by train wreckers, as a large pile of stones was found on the track.

HOUSEHOLD.

Hints for the House.

Prof. Porter says plants in the house are not injurious, except in sleeping rooms.

Knives and forks should be carefully washed, polished and dried immediately after using.

Plan how to have a good garden. With a proper arrangement at least two good crops can be grown on most soil in the garden.

Old table-clothes, after they can be no longer darned and used for table coverings, may be cut into squares, hemmed and used for bread, cake and pastry cloths.

For chapped hands make camphor ice of one and one-half ounces of spermaceti tallow, four teaspoonfulls of oil sweet almonds and three-fourths of an ounce of gum-camphor pulverized fine. Put on back of stove until dissolved, stirring constantly, using just enough heat to melt the ingredients together.

Many disease germs enter through an open mouth. The mouth was not made for breathing, but for eating and speaking. The nose was made for breathing, and air, passing through the long, moist, nasal passage, is purified, and leaves behind dust, disease germs and various impurities, while the air is warmed and tempered for the lungs. But when the mouth is left open, dust, dirt and disease rush down into the lungs, and fastening there, develope and destroy the whole system.

Good paste for pies is easily made by mixing a bowl for chopping tray, a quart of pastry flower, a tablespoonful of sugar and a teaspoonful of salt. Chop into it two cups of butter, or one each of lard and butter, until it is thoroughly mixed, then add a scant cupful of ice water, and continue chopping. When well mixed sprinkle the board with flour, turn the paste on it and roll. Place in a pan on the ice, or in a cold place for an hour before using. It will be lighter, easier handled, and require less flour in the rolling out if made very cold.

The baby's fever and the rash and the bowel trouble (starting in the brain) will be found in the majority of cases due to the suffocation or irritation of the skin by the popular knit wool skirts; however, soft these may feel to the hand, every fibre of wool is set with tiny hooks, which continually catch and let go of the exquisitely sensitive skin of the sides and back as the baby breathes. It reminds me of Edmonds About's tale of the man who died under the hands of Italian brigands, merely by having hairs pulled from his head one by one, his hands being bound. That is just the helpless condition of a baby.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Many persons are acquainted with the virtues of the hot water bag, but a sand bag is still better. Get some clean, fine sand, dry it thoroughly in a kettle on the stove; make a bag about eight inches square of flannel, fill it with dry sand, sew the opening carefully together and cover the bag with cotton or linen cloth. This will prevent the sand from sifting out and also enable you to heat the bag quickly by placing it in the oven or on top of the stove. After once using this you will never again attempt to warm the feet or hands of a sick person with a bottle or a brick. The sand holds the heat for a long time, and the bag can be tucked up to the back without hurting an invalid.

"Lady."

There is something ludicrous and irresistibly comic, says The Household, in the way and manner in which the word "lady" has come to be used. "Woman" has almost disappeared, and to call any one of the female sex a "woman" is to insult her.

"Lady" is from an old Saxon word, which meant a "loaf giver," or one who went about giving bread to the hungry. As only the rich women were able to do this, the term "lady" was gradually applied to one rich enough to give alms. Still later it was appiled to all females who were rich enough to live without labor. It was a mark of distinction. But when it was broadened in its use and applied to every female it lost all of its significance. An advertisment long ago appeared in a New York paber asking for a position as "saleswoman." It was refreshing to read it, for the want columns are full of such words as "forelady," "saleslady," "washlady," etc.

In the old days, a girls was not ashamed to be called a "saleswoman," a "needlewoman," and so on. No one talks of a "salesgentleman" or a "foregentleman." No; "man" is used for the male sex. Is not "woman" as honorable a distinction as "man?" Let us get rid of these snobbish and silly words, and let any woman be proud of the cognomen. There is something old-fashioned but grand in the simple word, "Woman."

It is a very common mistake which men make when registering at hotels, to write "John Jones and Lady." No gentleman should ever make such a ridiculous blunder. "John Jones and Wife" is the proper designation.

A Dyspeptic Who Cured Himself.

Some one asks for a cure for indigestion. There is no cure. Medicine is useless in most cases. The following rules, however, will be found good. They are given by Dr. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek (Mich.) Sanitarium: Eat slowly, masticating the food thoroughly,—even more so, if possible than is required in health. The more time the food spends in the mouth the less time it will spend in the stomach. Avoid drinks at meals; at most take a few sips of warm drink at the close of the meal, if it is very dry in character. In general, dyspeptic stomachs manage dry food better than that which contain much fluid. Eat neither very hot nor very cold food. The best temperature is about that of the body. Avoid exposure to cold after eating. Be careful to avoid excess in eating. Eat no more than the system requires. Sometimes less than is really needed must be taken when the digestion is very weak. Strength depends, not on what is eaten, but on what is digested. Never take violent exercise, either mental or physical, just before or just after a meal. It is not good to sleep immediately after eating, nor within four hours of a meal. Never eat more than three times a day, and make the last meal very light. For many two meals are better than three. Never eat a morsel of any kind between meals. Never eat when very tired, whether exhausted from mental or physical labor. Never eat when the mind is worried or the temper ruffled, if possible to avoid doing so. Eat only food that is easy of digestion; avoid complicated and indigestible dishes, and take but one to three kinds of food at a meal. Most persons will be benefited by the use of oat meal, wheat meal, graham flour, cracked wheat, and other whole grain preparations. Many will find it necessary to avoid vegetables, especially when fruits are taken. The foregoing rules together with the avoidance of every thing that disagrees with me, abstinence from tea, coffee, sugar and all very starchy foods, taking cream in place of butter and eating two meals a day, have nearly cured me when all other means failed.

A Quick Courtship.

Jacob Strawn, of Jacksonville, Ill., was during his life-time the largest farmer in Illinois, and a very eccentric man. The circumstances of his marriage were as follows:

Outside of Jacksonville, a couple of miles, perhaps, there lived quite a respectable family. This family employed a servant girl. Graceful and neat in the extreme, and possessing a very fair share of entelligence, this girl was a match for whomsoever might take her unto himself. Jacob saw this flower, and determined to possess it. One day he rode to the door of the residence of the fair maid, alighted from his horse, and knocked with the butt end of his whip. The lady of the house answered his summons, and immediately upon her making her appearance, asked for the servant girl.

The servant girl came. Jacob said:

"I want a wife and I have picked you out as the most proper person for that position I can possible find. I've never spoken to you before, but then that makes no difference. I'll give you one week to decide."

The girl blushed and was dumfounded. Jacob mounted his horse and rode away. The girl inquired into Mr. Strawn's character and standing, and was advised by those with whom she lived to accept the offer of his hand. Punctually, a week later, Jacob rode up to the door and knocked again with his whip and asked:

"Is it no or yes?"

Blushingly the girl answered in a low tone, but quite distinctly:

"Yes."

"Well," said Jacob, "let's set; we'll get married the day after to-morrow, Wednesday. Here's some money to buy a wedding outfit," and he threw her a purse containing a thousand dollars.

The couple did get married on Wednesday, and no happier pair, during their life-time, was to be met with in the State of Illinois.

A Red-Hot Firm.

Boston Budget.

A friend narrates the following rather jocose incident: Proceeding down Joy street not long since, his attention was called to a little negro boy who was crying piteously, and alternating his outbursts by munching a glowing-hued red pepper. The tears were streaming down his ebony cheeks, and he was bellowing loudly about the burning sensation in his mouth and throat, totally oblivious to the fact that the pepper was the cause of his trouble and that he was continually aggravating the pain by endeavoring to masticate the pungent article. The narrator, noticing his trouble and its cause, stepped forward and snatched the pepper from his hands and threw it into the street, whereupon the black urchin set up a most vociferous howl and dashed after his treasure, while a burly negress rushed out of a doorway, evidently thinking her child had been abused. The well-meaning pedestrain did not linger to explain. As he departed he caught a glimpse of the ebonized gamin again in possession of the pepper and yelling and munching as before. Adapting a fragment of a common quotation, it was a case where ignorance was bliss.

It Got There.

Canal City Dispatch.

A traveling curiosity was received at this postoffice in the shape of a letter postmarked Gainesville, Tex., and addressed:

"Mr. John Brady, Esq., Percel, I. T., or elsewhere on the Santafee up or down from Cansas City to Galveston, Texas a hand on the railroad ? ? ? of inquiry."

On its back are various inscriptions received during its travels from the different postmasters and mail clerks such as: "Lost, strayed, or stolen," "I would like to get to my destination, I have been on the road a long time." "Ox," "please search for him. P. F." "Mt," "not here, pass it along," and "We found him at Arkansas City." "Ox," and "Mt" are probably the "official signs of some of the clerks.

The Opportunity of Science.

Up to this time nobody has ventured to say what fate will overtake the human race when all the coal is consumed and gone. Of course economies will be introduced, but the annual draft on the mines increases from year to year. The annual draft increased in England at the rate of 3 per cent per anum from 1865 to 1875. It has been reduced to 1 3-4 per cent, but it is an increase still. More tons are required every year than the year before. Natural gas, petroleum, and shale, where they exist will serve the turn to eke out the coal supply, but these too are exhaustible. They are all scraps of the sun's radiant energy, imprsoned by chance or by Divine Providence in the earth's shell. They are, all told, but a fraction of the radiant energy which the sun pours over the earth every day, and this is an inappreciable fraction of what the sun pours into illimitable space. Will the genius of man ever contrive means to capture and impound the fraction which our globe intercepts as it rushes through the sun-lit space? Here, says the New York Evening Post, is the greatest question ever presented to the human species, for unless this feat be accomplished population must eventually be reduced to the number who can be supplied with fuel from the cultivation of trees. Power may be obtained from falling water and from the ocean tides, and this may be converted into heat, but it is a pitiful and poor substitute for coal, and would not begin to maintain the world's present population in the present scale of civilization and comfort.

The prize of greatest magnitude ever offered to men of science—the honor of rescuing the entire race from misery unspeakable—awaits the man or men who shall grasp and hold and render serviceable the rays of the all powerful sun. No one can say this problem will not be solved. We now know that light and heat are manifestations of one and the same thing. We know that light is abundant and superabundant. We do not know whether it can be concentrated and converted into heat so as to take the place of coal in the economies of the world. According to our present knowledge we are living in the world's golden age. Those who went before us knew not the civilization that we enjoy, because they knew not the uses of coal. Those who follow us, after the coal is burned up and gone, will have to resign that civilization—a much harder fate than never to have known it—unless the great sun problem can be solved. Nobody who is now alive need concern himself with the hard destiny, but in the history of the planet, even the written history, the age of coal will be comparatively a short one.

An Absent Minded Shopper.

"I had a curious experience not long ago," says the superintendent of one of the departments of a N. Y., dry goods establishment. "A fashionably dressed lady came in early, and in the course of her bargaining put her parasol on the counter near a large feather duster which one of the clerks had been using. After making some purchases the lady caught up the duster instead of the parasol, and went out hurriedly. As soon as I discovered the mistake I sent a boy after her with the parasol, but he did not overtake her until she had made quite a journey. In fact, she flourished that duster along the street, flourished it about as she went into another store, and put it down on the counter, still under the impression that it was her parasol. When her purchases in the second store were made, she turned to pick up her parasol, and seeing the duster, asked for her parasol. The clerk explained that she had not brought any parasol in, but had come in carrying that duster. She was supremely indignant at such an intimation, and was delivering the young man a sharp lecture on the subject, when in came our boy with her parasol and an explanation. She was so overcome that she had to be sent home in a carriage.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Who Want Office?

The list of office-seekers, as it swells from day to day, contains names of a good many able men Some are rich and want official honors for social reasons. This class is few. It should be quickly and easily gratified by the bestowal of unsalary positions as far as possible. The rest of the list embraces men who are not rich, but consider themselves able to earn a good living. Many of them would scorn to admit that they could not command an income much larger than they will receive if they succeed in their desire to get into office. Why they should prefer an official salary to their independent earnings is one of the inscrutable idiosyncracies of human nature. There should be sympathy and compassion for this class of fellow creatures. They are victims of their weakest traits of character, like the chain that is no stronger than its feeblest link. They become beggars and prisoners, when they might be as free and independent as kings.—Washington Star.

A New Flag Called For.

There are now too many stars on the national flag to be artistic, and now that four more are to be added the blue corner will be uncomfortably crowded. More stars are coming too. Congress may have to consider a change in the flag. Perhaps it would be a good idea to return to the original thirteen stars. Or, why not put the great American bird in the blue field and the stars all around the edge of either that or the flag itself.—San Francisco Report.

NEWS NUNCIATURE.

A General Review of the News of the Day Condensed from Associated Press Dispatches.

Doings at Washington.

Secretary of State Blaine has received a report from the consul of the United States at Colon stating that work along the Panama canal has entirely ceased and that the West India negros are returning to their home; up to March 16, fully 5,000 of the latter had already left. The consul reports great depression in business. The Panama Railroad company is suffering from the crisis, owing to the loss on local traffic. Two unsuccessful attempts have been made to burn Colon.

President Harrison issued his proclamation opening to settlement on April 22 the Oklahoma lands, the metes and bounds of which have already been described in these dispatches. The proclamation designates those whom the statute permits to enter lands in the territory in question, describes its boundaries, prescribes that each entry shall be in square form as nearly as possible, and that no person shall be permitted to enter more that one-quarter section. The document concludes as follows: "Warning is hereby again expressly given that no person entering upon and occupying said lands before said hour of 12 o'clock noon of the 22d day of April, A. D. 1889, hereinbefore fixed, will ever be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any rights; and that the officers of the United States will be required to strictly enforce the provision of the act of congress to the above effect."

Minor Casualties.

Reports of Dakota prairie fires are beginning to come in. The fire in every direction swept over vast tracts from Cavour to within half a mile of the east bank of the Jim river. Between the Northwestern and Manitoba tracks the country is almost entirely burned over. The settlers in that locality suffer more than elsewhere, their greatest loss being in hay, grain and stock sheds. J. W. Barrett's house together with most of its contents, and John Gardner's house were destroyed. South and west of Huron, a strip several miles wide, and nearly twelve miles long, was burned over. I. J. L. Dubois' fine farm residence, also his granary and a large quantity of seed wheat were burned. The fire is the most extensive one experienced in this country for several years. It is feared the worst has not yet been learned.

William Drake and his wife were killed at La Crosse, as they left a railroad train They could not go up the street because a freight train was going in the opposite direction from the passenger with one track ntervening, on which Drake and wife and two men stood. The noise of the trains prevented their hearing the switch engine backing down on them until Mrs. Drake was struck and carried down under the footboard and Mr. Drake was thrown senseless away from the track. His scream caused the two other men to jump and save themselves. The engine was stopped as soon as possible. The body of Mrs. Drake was lying under the ash box so crushed that it was necessary to jack the engine up to removeit. The top of the head was crushed in, her back broken, one leg severed and the body otherwise mangled. Mr. Drake was lying unconscious with a dreadful gash across the right side of his face. His spine is injured, and there are probably internal injuries. He was partially conscious for a few moments, but did not know of his wife's injuries. The doctors give little hope of recovery.

The Ways of the Wicked.

Word was received that Constable Mantague was killed at Milmore Colorado by three cowboys whom he attempted to arrest for disturbing the quiet of the town. The cowboys belong near Barela, and were drunk when the shooting occurred. Sheriff Burns at once organized a posse and started after the murderers, who had skipped out.

John R. West, aged fifty, and his son, aged eighteen, living on Stone Coal creek in Lewis county, W. Va., were brutally murdered on Dec. 23. 1875. Richard Dowell was convicted of the murder and sentenced to be hanged, but escaped Oct. 9, 1876. His has been captured by the chiefs of police of Grand Forks, Dak., who telegraphs that Dowell will be turned over to the authorities of West Virginia as soon as the reward of $400 offered thirteen years ago is paid over.

Jed Prichett, who outraged a small white girl near Danville, Va., in June last, was hanged at Chatham. He was a stout, strong negro, about thirty years old, and when the officers attempted to spring the trap on him he fought like a tiger. Four deputies were called on to assist in the awful deed. The prisoner fell down and lay prostrate on the scaffold, clinging to the frame work. The trap was finally sprung, and by main force the deputies pushed him off the scaffold, after the rope had been tied around his neck. The struggles of the condemned man lasted fully 11 minutes. Under the new statute, the body was shipped to the University of Virginia for dissection.

Four Americans from El Paso shot and killed two American policemen in Juarez, Mex. The Americans were in Juarez raising considerable disturbance by firing off their pistols and overturning apple and meat stands when the police attempted to arrest them. One of the Americans opened fire on the officers, shooting one dead. A second shot brought down the second policeman fatally wounded. The American rowdies then made a break for the river, closely pursued by Mexican soldiers. Three of them jumped into the Rio Grande and swam across while the fourth crossed on the bridge and was fired at three times by the Mexican guards. Fully 200 Mexicans came over to El Paso to demand the arrest of the guilty persons.

A venerable-looking, well dressed man, apparently about fifty years of age, went to the Hotel Parle, at St. Louis accompanied by a good-looking, neatly-dressed woman, registered as S. M. Waite and wife of Florida, and the couple were assigned a room. During the night Waite drank a good deal of beer and had supper served in his room. Next morning the woman left the hotel and did not return. Later Waite was found in a dying condition with a bottle of morphine near him. The morphine was put up by Bowers & Weightman of Philadelphia. Soon after being taken to the city hospital Waite died. The police are looking for the mysterious woman, and the body of S. M. Waite of Florida lies on a slab in the morgue, unidentified.

A telegram was received by Marshal Gross at Louisville, from United States Commissioner R. S. Friend at Prestonburg, Ky., announcing the murder of Deputy United States Russell Wireman. The murder occurred thirteen miles southwest of Hindman, Ky. Wireman made a raid in Berry and Leslie counties after the moonshiners. The country is very wild and mountainous, filled with ravines and cliffs. They had only gotten a short distance when confronted by twelve men armed with Winchester rifles. The party had been hiding behind the rocks, and when the deputy marshal and his assistants approached with the prisoners they stepped out from their waiting places. Without a moment's warning they opened fire on Wireman, their bullets being apparently directed at him alone. The officer returned the fire with his rifle, as also did the special bailiffs, and several rounds were exchanged. One of the bullets struck Wireman in the breast, and penetrated his heart killing him instantly.

At Blocton a small mining village on the Birmingham Alabama, railroad, B. M. Huey, Jr., the Southern express agent, received a package containing $7,000 to be used by the Coahoba Coal Mining company in paying off the employes. It being too late for delivery Mr. Huey desposited the money in his safe Soon afterward he was started by a voice from behind exclaiming, "Hold up your hand." The expressman turned to behold two men with blackened faces presenting revolvers at him. Mr. Huey grabbed his revolver near by, and the shots from the foremost revolver and his own were simultaneous. Huey staggered back and the robbers fled. The firing brought citizens of the village to the depot. Not fifty miles from the depot the dead body of one of the would-be robbers was found. He was a large white man, roughly dressed, wearing two coats, and there was nothing about his person to establish indentity. Huey will probably recover.

The body of the man who registered at the Hotel Pearle at St. Louis as S. M. Waite, of Florida, and took poison to climax a spree, was identified as that of Samuel M. Woolsey, a married man, whose home, where his wife and two adult daughters live, was at 2139 Caroline street, St. Louis. He was a member of Dr. Adams' church, and stood high in religious circles. He was at one time, a long time ago, addicted to the use of morphine then whenever he drank beer, but had not done so lately. This was the first spree witness' father had been on in two years. She knew of no reason why her father should have committed suicide. His domestic relations were pleasant and his financial condition fair. The unknown, dark-haired woman, with whom Woolsey stopped at the hotel and spent the night drinking, kept her identity from the detectives and the corner. The coroner returned a verdict of suicide.

Personal Gossip.

George H. Piatt, a prominent resident of Helena, Montana and a relative of Col. Don Piatt, broke the bone in his right leg by falling down the elevator shaft in Lang's hardware store. The shaft was open, and he stepped in unawares.

From Foreign Shores.

The new Vienna Tagblatt publishes a story of the narrow escape the czar and czarina had while traveling from St. Petersburg to Gatchina. It is said that an obstruction was found on the line over which the imperial train was to pass, and that several persons have been arrested for connection with the alleged plot against the czar's life. The story is not confirmed.

Miscellaneous News Items.

Two strangers came to Smith's Creek, a small station about twelve miles from Port Huron, Mich., and engaged rooms at the Lindsey house. One of the men was about fifty years of age and the other considerably younger. The latter left the hotel early in the evening. The elder man did not appear next morning, and the room was broken into. He was found lying across the bed with his throat cut from ear to ear, dead. No knife was found near, but some broken crockery found in the room was covered with blood, and it is thought that with the latter the deed was committed. In the pockets was found $162 in cash, but nothing to identify the dead man. In case it proves to have been murder, it is very evident the object was not plunder.

Capt. Samuel Pedrick, of the schooner James H. Gordon, which arrived at Baltimore from Charleston, reports that on March 24, when about seventy-five miles east-southeast of Cape Henry, a school of whales was met. They came so close to the vessel that pieces of wood were dropped on their backs, which they acknowledged by squirting fountains of water in the air. At one time the sea appeared like a mass of confused fire from the gamboling of the creatures. Lines of phosphorescent light, sometimes as far as the eye could reach, were visible from the ship's deck as the whales, one after another, raced through the water. All that night the mighty fish played around the vessel without accident. At 6:30 o'clock on the morning of the 25th the Gordon suddenly "brought up," shook from stem to stern. Looking over the bow, it was seen that the vessel had struck a monster whale. The water was discolored and bloody, showing that the Gordon had struck the fish a terrible blow. The whales disappeared from about the vessel shortly after the collision. Capt. Pedrick is confident that there were one hundred whales in the school, all of which the first mate, an old whaler, says were sperm whales. It is supposed they were attracted in shore by following the schools of mackerel now off the coast.

A Tough Indian Story.

News of a terrible tragedy has reached Washburn, Dak. Ever since McLean county had a settler it has been the habit of some few of her citizens to go up the Missouri in the spring, to trap beaver. Among the many who have trapped beaver up and down the river for the past eleven years were M. A. Williams and his brother, Tom R. Williams. Those veteran trappers of McLean recently packed up a few necessary articles and started on one of their hunts and trapping expeditions. They had been gone two weeks before anything at all was heard from them. It seemed that the boys, encouraged by their goodluck in trapping beaver, kept on up the river until they came to the point where the the Little Missouri empties into the Great Muddy. Up to this time they had in their possession something near fifty beaver skins, and they concluded, from what they could see, that beavers were plenty up the Little Missouri. After a three days' journey up that little tributary to the great Missouri, they found an old deserted cabin and went into camp. Upon the following morning they put out about thirty beaver traps, and found upon going their rounds the following morning twenty-five beavers, making in all seventy-five first-class beaver skins. The traps were set again. They were set in Indian territory, and the boys knew it. On the second morning after the traps were set it was found they had been visited and the game taken out. One of the boys resolved to watch and see what became of the game. The traps were set again, and Tom volunteered to act as spy. His brother, who was an old cowboy and Indian fighter, was alarmed at first, but thinking there was little danger from the Rees, who had always been peaceful, went off to the cabin, leaving his brother on the banks of the stream. Some time during the night he was awakened by several shots fired in close proximity to the cabin, and sprung out of bed to see his brother fall across the doorway a corpse. The cabin was surrounded at once by the redskins to the number of fifteen. William saw at a glance that his brother was dead, and what he wanted was revenge. The Rees, knowing that but one man stood between them and a big catch of beaver pelts, rushed up to the cabin door firing at random. Williams remained unhurt, and, taking a Colt's navy in either hand, opened upon the dastardly reds. His aim was sure, and every shot spoke the death of a redskin. Ten shots had been fired by the lone man and ten Indians lay dead. A panic seemed to seize the five who remained and they turned to beat a hasty retreat. Close by the door stood a double-barreled shotgun, heavily loaded with buckshot, and as the five Indians ran down the river bank both barrels were emptied in their midst. One fell mortally wounded, but the other four got away, carrying buckshot in their red skins. Williams, severely wounded as he was, managed to bury his brother on the banks of the Little Missouri, and to drift down the river amid the ice to Fort Stevenson.

National Thanksgiving.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—The following telegram sent to-day explains itself; Hon. Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States, Washington, D C.: The committee on the centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington as president of the United States respectfully ask that you issue a proclamation calling upon clergymen to hold a special service of thanksgiving in the churches throughout the country at 9 o'clock on the morning of April 30, the same hour in which services of prayer were held in the churches of this city on the morning of Washington's inauguration one hundred years ago. The clergyman of New York, through a special committee, have issued an address to the clergymen of the United States suggesting that a religious service be held similar to the services on April 30, 1789. Our committee would respectfully ask you in-as-much as the day is a national holiday to suggest in your proclamation that the day be made memorable throughout the United States by the decorations of buildings, the display of fireworks and the meeting of patriotic citizens.

WRECKED AT SAMOA

The American and German Gunboats Destroyed by a Violent South Pacific Hurricane.

AUCKLAND, March 29.—Dispatches from Samoa state that the American men-of-war Trenton, Vandalia and Nipsic and the German men-of-war Adler, Olga and Eber were driven on a reef during a violent storm and totally wrecked. Of the American crews four officers and forty-six men were drowned and of the German crews nine officers and eighty-seven men lost their lives.

THE NIPSIC'S OFFICERS.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, March 29.—Commander Denis W. Mullen, the commander of the Nipsic, was ordered to that duty Oct. 1, 1887. Commander Mullen while not regarded as one of the brilliant men of the navy, was a good fighting officer. He was a native of Massachusetts and was of Irish parentage. The executive officer of the Nipsic, in the absence of Lieut. Hawley, was Richard G. Davenport. His reputation as a first-class officer in every respect was vouched for by all the navy people here. He was a son of the late Capt. Davenport of the nay who was one of the most distinguished navel officers of the late war and who commanded the Congress during the battle of Mobile Bay. The other officers attached to the Nipsic were Lieut. John R. Sherman, Ensigns William P. White, John L. Purcell, Harry A. Field, and Harry P. Jones, Passed Assistant Surgeon Ferr, Passed Assistant Paymaster John Corwin, Chief Engineer George W. Hall, Passed Assistant Engineer Horace E. Fink and First Lieutenant of Marines T. Clover Fillette. The complement of the Nipsic was 174 marines and blue jackets, although some of her short time men were sent home from Samoa when the Adams left for Samoa when the Adams left for San Francisco in January last. The Nipsic was a wooden vessel and was built in 1873. Her displacement was 1,365 tons and indicated speed ten knots. Her battery consisted of one 8-inch muzzle-loading rifle, four 9-inch smooth bores, one 60-pounder breech-loading rifle. In the secondary battery there was one three-inch rifled howitzer, one twelve-pounder and one short gatling gun. In addition to these there were sixty Hotchkiss rifles of the latest improved pattern in the armory, besides the usual number of pistols and side arms allowed by regulation for vessels of the Nipsic class.

THE VESSELS.

The Trenton and Vandalia were larger than the Nipsic. The Trenton was a ship-rigged wooden cruiser of ten guns and 3,900 tons displacement. The Vandalia was a bark-rigged wooden cruiser of 2,100 tons displacement, with a battery of eight guns mostly smooth bores. As far as known the Olga was the most formidable of the German vessels at Apia. She was unarmored and unprotected single deck cruiser of 2,200 tons. Her principal battery consisted of eight-inch Krupp rifles and a number of Hotchkiss revolving cannon. She carried about half a dozen Schwartz-Kopf torpedoes, which are similar to the Whitehead torpedoes in that they are projected from tubes beneath the water line. The speed of the Olga was somewhat superior to that of the Vandalia, her maximum trial speed having been fourteen. The Adler and the Eber were not as large or as strong as the Olga, the Adler carrying four and the Eber three Krupp rifles. The great strength of the German fleet from a fighting standpoint lay in its possession of torpedoes.

BOLD BANK ROBBERY.

One of the Most Daring Bank Robberies Ever Committed, Successfully Worked at Denver.

DENVER, Colo., March 29.—The boldest and most successful bank robbery ever reported in the West was perpetrated upon the First National bank to-day. The robber succeeded in getting away with $20,000. The cashier of the bank gives the following account of the affair: Yesterday morning immediately after the opening of the bank a well dressed man with light moustache and complexion and of medium height walked into the bank and asked Assistant Cashier Ross Lewin where he could see Mr. Moffatt, president of the bank. Mr. Lewin informed him that he could see Mr. Moffatt, who is also president of the Denver & Rio Grande railway, at the president's office in the Cheesman block. Nothing more was seen or heard of the stranger until this morning, when he entered the railway office and asked to see Mr. Moffatt on important business. He was admitted to his private room, and briefly stated that he had discovered a conspiracy whereby the First National bank was to be robbed of a large amount of money. Mr. Moffatt told the man he was very busy at that moment, but would be pleased to meet him at his private office in the bank at 1 o'clock. With this the man left the building. A few minutes after the hour appointed he called at the bank and was shown into

THE PRESIDENT'S OFFICE.

While remaining standing, he inquired if the cashier, S. N. Wood, was in, and was told that he was at lunch. He then asked for a blank check for the purpose of showing how the robbery was to be perpetrated. The check was handed him; he laid it upon the desk in front of Mr. Moffatt and said: "I will have to do this myself," and pulling a large revolver from his coat placed it at Mr. Moffatt's head, and in a decidedly earnest but unexcited manner said:

I want $21,000, and am going to have it; I have considered this matter and the chances I am running and the consequences if I fail and am arrested. I am penniless and a desperate man, and have been driven during the past week to that point where I have considered suicide as the only means of escape from the poverty and misery in which I exist. You have millions. I am determined to have what I have asked for. If you make a noise, call a man or ring a bell, I will blow your brains out and then blow up the building and myself with this bottle of glycerine.

He at that moment pulled the explosive out of another pocket and concluded: "Now take your choice." Moffatt started to argue with the man, but was stopped with the information that it was useless, and that he had but two minutes to fill out the check before him for $21,000 if he desired to live. Moffatt, seeing no other alternative, filled out the check, and was then ordered to take it to the paying teller and get it cashed. Mr. Moffatt left his office and, with the man behind him with the revolver partially concealed under his overcoat, and with the muzzle almost against Moffatt's back, marched him behind the counter and up to Paying Teller Keeley, with the request that the check

BE IMMEDIATELY CASHED.

They then remarched into Moffatt's office without attracting the attention of the fifteen or twenty clerks who were busy at work within two feet of where they passed. After they had remained in the private office three or four minutes, the robber informed Mr. Moffatt that they were wasting time, and that he had better step to the door and motion his teller to come to him, which he did. Moffatt instructed him to bring the money into his office, and as the teller turned to go away the robber told him he wanted twenty $1,000 bills and $1,000 in gold. The money was brought in and handed over to the gentleman who, waiting until the teller had reached his desk, backed out to the front door, making Mr. Moffatt remain standing in his door until he had reached the curbstone. He then raised his hat and walked around the corner and has not yet been heard of. Mr. Moffatt is completely prostrated with the shock. Detectives are out after the man, but no trace of him has been found. A moment after the alarm was given by Mr. Moffatt a man started rapidly up Sixteenth street from the bank, followed by a crowd and several officers. He was followed to a room, where he and two companions were arrested. Mr. Moffatt arrived at police headquarters, and, after a glance at the prisoner, said he was not the man, and he was immediately released. The prisoner proved to be a well known business man named Clark. The chief of police has offered a reward of $2,500 for the arrest of the robber.

IN JOHN BRIGHT'S MEMORY.

Eloquent and Impressive Tribute From William E. Gladstone—Lord Hartington's Fitting Words—Justin McCarthy Speaks for Ireland.

LONDON, March 29.—The sessions of the house of commons this evening was devoted to eulogies of the late John Bright. When the Right Hon. William Henry Smith, who was the first speaker, rose to address the house all the members doffed their hats. Mr. Smith, in a short speech, described Mr. Bright as a man of thorough honesty of purpose and great energy of character. Mr. Gladstone, upon rising, was received with cheers. He said:

Mr. Bright has been, to a very remarkable degree, happy in the moment of his removal from among us. He lived to see the triumph of almost every great cause to which he specially devoted his heart and mind. He has established a special claim to the admiration of those from whom he differed through his long political life by marked concurrence with them upon the prominent and dominant question of the hour. While he has in that way opened the minds and hearts of those with whom he differed to appreciation of his merits, he has lost nothing by that concord with them on the particular subject we so much represent. Though Mr. Bright came to be separated from the great bulk of the Liberals on the Irish question, on no single occasion has there been any word of disparagement. I acknowledge that I have not through my whole political life fully embraced the character of Mr. Bright, and the value of that character to the country. I say this because it was at the particular epoch of the Crimean war that I came more to understand than before the position held by him and some of his friends, and the hold they had laid upon the confidence of the people. I was one of those who did not agree with the particular views he took of the Crimean contest, but felt profoundly and never ceased to think what must have been the moral elevation of men who, nurtured all their lives in the temple of popular approval, could at a moment's notice consent to part with the whole of that favor they enjoyed, which opponents might think the very breath of their nostrils. They accepted undoubted unpopularity, for that war commanded the enormous approval of the people. It was at that time that, although we had known much of Mr. Bright, we learned more. We had known of his great mental gifts, his courage, his consistency and his splendid eloquence. We had not known how high was the moral tone of those popular leaders, and what splendid examples they could set their contemporaries. Amongst other gifts, Mr. Bright was delegated to be one of the chief guardians of the purity of

THE ENGLISH TONGUE.

He knew how the character of a nation is associated with its language. He was enabled, as an Englishman profoundly attached to his country, the tongue of the people being to turn almost an object of worship, to preserve the purity of the language of Shakespeare and Milton. Another circumstance of his career is better known to me than to any other person present. Everybody is aware that office had no attractions for him. But few can be aware what extra efforts were required to induce him to become a servant of the crown. In the crisis of 1868, when the fate of the Irish church hung in the balance, it was my duty to propose to Mr. Bright that he become a minister. I never undertook so difficult a task. From 11 o'clock at night until 1 o'clock in the morning we steadily debated the subject. It was only at the last moment that he found it possible to set aside the repugnance he felt at doing anything that might in the eye of any one, even of the more ignorant class of his countrymen, appear to detract in the slightest degree from that lofty independence of character which I have mentioned, and which never throughout his career was held in doubt. It was a happy lot to unite so many attractive qualities. If I had to dwell upon them alone, I should present a dazzling picture to the world. It was a happier lot to teach moral lessons by simplicity, consistency, unfailing courage and constancy of life, thus presenting a combination of qualities that carried us to a higher atmosphere. His sympathies were not strong only, but active; not sympathies awaiting calls to be made upon them, but sympathies of a man seeking objects upon which to bestow the inestimable advantages of eloquence and courage. In Ireland, when support of the Irish cause was rare; in India, when support of the native cause was rarer still; in America, at the time when Mr. Bright, foreseeing the ultimate issue of the great struggle of 1861, stood as the representative of an exceedingly small portion of the educated community of the country, although undoubtedly representing a large part of the national sentiment—in all these cases Mr. Bright went far outside the necessities of his calling. Whatever touched him as whatever touched him as a subject, obtained unasked, his sincere, earnest and enthusiastic aid. All causes having his powerful advocacy made a distinct advance in the estimation of the world and distinct progress toward triumphant success. Thus it has come about that he is entitled to a higher eulogy than is due to success. Of mere success, indeed, he was a conspicuous example. In intellect he might claim a most distinguished place. But his character lies deeper than intellect, deeper than eloquence, deeper than anything that can be described or that can be seen upon the surface. The supreme eulogy that is his due is that he elevated political life to the highest point—to a loftier standard than it had ever reached. He has bequeathed to his country a character that cannot only be made a subject for admiration and gratitude; but—and I do not exaggerate when I say it—that can become an object of reverential contemplation. In the encomiums that come from every quarter there is not a note of dissonance. I do not know of any statesman of my time who had the happiness of receiving, on removal from this passing world, the honor of approval at once so enthusiastic, so universal, and so unbroken. Yet none could better dispense with the tributes of the moment, because the triumphs of his life were triumphs recorded in the advance of his country and of its people. His name is indelibly written in the annals of time and on the hearts of the great and overspreading race to which he belonged, whose wide extension he rejoiced to see, and whose power and prominence he believed to be full of promise and glory for the best interests of mankind.

Mr. Gladstone resumed his seat amid much subdued cheering.

THE UNEXPECTED.

The Son of Abraham Lincoln Nominated to Be Minister to the Court of St. James.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 27.—Illinois has received the honor of the highest diplomatic appointment in the gift of the president, and every son of the state is justly proud. The appointment is none the less welcome because unexpected. The greatest surprise to the politicians in the long list of nominations thus far was that of Robert T. Lincoln to be minister to England. And possibly the men who were the most surprised were the two senators from Illinois. They had not asked for the appointment. They had not been consulted about it, except that last night they each received a note from the president's private secretary, requesting them to call at the White House, if convenient, at 10 o'clock this morning. They went, presuming that they were to be consulted as to appointments in Washington for which they have made application. It had been reported in newspaper circles that Robert Lincoln was under consideration by the president in connection with the English mission, but the Illinois politicians did not care to believe it. The politicians are forced to admit that this appointment, more, perhaps, than any yet made, indicates that the president is determined to make his individual selections for the important offices. The president senators from some of the Eastern states as to the nomination of Mr. Lincoln for this place. At least he has gone so far as to make inquiry as to their views of the fitness of Mr. Lincoln for this place, and of the manner in which the appointment would be received. The Illinois senators, there is reason to believe, were not consulted by the president until this morning, and then only after the president had decided to send in the name of Mr. Lincoln. Then they were probably asked whether they would endorse the appointment of the son of Abraham Lincoln to the position of minister to England. Of course they could not object, however surprised they may have been. A state is not in the habit of declining so great an honor. But it is not so certain that Mr. Lincoln will not decline the office. Some of his nearest friends here say that he was not consulted as to the appointment. His latest public utterance on the subject of office holding is found in a letter written about the time of the Chicago national Republican convention. In that letter he said that he was not a candidate for any office; that he was engaged in the practice of his profession and was intent upon it, and that he desired no public position. And this letter was in relation then to a higher office than that of minister to England. It indicated his position with respect to the nomination as president of the United States.

HAS CONSULTED

THE NOMINATIONS

WASHINGTON, March 27.—The president sent the following nominations to the senate to-day:

Robert T. Lincoln of Illinois, minister to Great Britain; Murat Halstead of Ohio, minister to Germany; Allen Thorndyke Rice of New York, minister to Russia. Patrick Egan of Nebraska, minister to Chili; Thomas Ryan of Kansas, minister to Mexico; John Hicks of Wisconsin, minister to Peru; George B. Loring of Massachusetts, minister resident and consul general to Portugal. Postmasters—Ole E. Wangsild at Rice Lake, Wis.; John H. Welch at Winnebago City, Minn.; Jeremiah P. Easton at Warren City, Minn.

Robert Todd Lincoln, who was to-day nominated to be minister to England, is forty-five years of age, and is the son of Abraham Lincoln. He graduated from Harvard college, practiced law in Chicago, and became secretary of war under President Garfield, remaining in that post under President Arthur. Since his retirement in 1885 he has been practicing law in Chicago.

Murat Halstead, nominated for United States minister to Germany, was born in 1829 at Ross, Butler county, Ohio, and spent his minority on a farm. In 1851 he finished his schooling at Farmers college, near Cincinnati, and then decided to study law, of which he soon tired. He did local newspaper reporting on several Cincinnati papers, and in 1853 became manager of a department on the Cincinnati Commercial. The following year he acquired a small interest in the paper, and it began rapidly to increase in circulation and influence, so that in 1860 it was considered one of the most potent newspapers in the West. In 1870 the paper experienced a check, and for sometime Mr. Halstead's lines did not always fall in pleasant places. He pushed his paper forward again to its old place as a leader of Western thought and ideas, and the Commercial combining with the Gazette, its rival, as an exponent of the principles of the Republican party in Ohio, the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette immediately became the recognized organ of Ohio Republicans. Mr. Halstead then found time to devote himself more to social affairs and also to travel abroad. He has always been a Republican of a very pronounced type.

Allen Thorndyke Rice, nominated to be minister to Russia, was born in Massachusetts in 1853. He is a graduate of Oxford university, England, and since 1876 has been editor and proprietor of the North American Review. He also holds a controlling interest in a prominent Parisian newspaper, Le Matin, and has contributed largely to literature, while taking an active part in politics.

George Bailey Loring of Massachusetts, nominated to be resident and consul general to Portugal is best known because of his connection with the department of agriculture, of which he was commissioner from 1881 to 1885. He is seventy-two years of age, and is a Harvard graduate.

Thomas Ryan of Kansas, who has been named as minister to Mexico, is a native of New York, where he was born in 1837. He served during the war as a volunteer, was severely wounded and emerged as a captain in 1861. Since that time he has held various legal positions in Kansas and has been a representative in congress in six successive congresses.

Patrick Egan, the nomiuee for minister to Chili, has for many years been well known as a leader of the Irish people. He was born at Ballymahon, County Longford, Ireland, in 1841. He was one of the organizers and a member of the council of the Home Rule league formed in 1871.

John Hicks, who will go to Peru as minister of the United States, is a native American, forty-two years of age. He comes from Oshkosh, the home of Senator Sawyer, and is proprietor and editor of the Oshkosh Northwestern. He has several times been elected president of the Wisconsin State Press association, but has never before held a public office.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

CHICAGO, Special Telegram, March 27.—As soon as the dispatch announcing Mr. Lincoln's appointment as minister to England was received a reporter saw that gentleman and imparted the information to him.

"What is that you say?" he asked, as if he did not understand the statement.

"Your name has been sent to the senate by President Harrison as minister to England."

"It is news to me. I have never heard a word about it."

"Were you a candidate for the position?"

"Not in any way. I never thought of such a thing. I was not a candidate for that or any other position. How the appointment came to me beyond my knowledge, information or belief. I have not yet been officially notified of it, and have no other information than that you bring me."

"Will you accept?"

"Oh, I would not care to discuss that at present. I would not care even to take the matter of whether I would accept or not into serious consideration until I am notified of my appointment in the regular way. I would not now discuss the matter in any way."

What the Northwest is Getting in the Way of Appointments by the President.

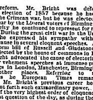
WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 27.—Territorial matters are moving very slowly just now, and it is doubtful if many more changes will be made before the senate adjourns. Idaho will probably get her territorial offices to-morrow, headed by Col. George A. Shape for governor. Montana will get a secretary on Friday. Dakota has a few changes to expect. The receivership of the land office at Mitchell, Dak., is vacant, and it is the only place of the kind likely to be filled before the senate adjourns. Ralph W. Wheelock, editor of the Mitchell Republican, filed his papers to-day, and, in company with Delegate Mathews, called upon Secretary Noble, who expressed himself pleased with Wheelock, and promised to take up the case in a few days. Mathews will call upon President Harrison with Mr. Wheelock to-morrow with a view to getting the matter settled at once in order to secure confirmation by the senate. There is not likely to be any changes in judgeships. The Huron bar has adopted resolutions asking for Judge Spencer's retention. This has caused something of a smile here, where Spencer is known to have purchased real estate in Huron. However, as there are no applications for Spencer's place, he is not likely to be disturbed. None of the Dakota lawyers seem to care to take any of the judgeships for the short terms, which are likely to run out in November, and there is no scramble. R. M. Evans, Minnesota's member of the national committee, and other Minnesota lawyers have letters on file at the department of justice recommending Justice Edgerton of Mitchell for any judgeship that may become vacant; but as the judge has no application on file himself it is possible he knows nothing of it. Frank O. Parsons, editor of the Estelline Bell, was appointed postmaster at Estelline to-day, and B. T. Cords at Oldham, Dak.

JOHN BRIGHT DEAD.

The Great English Statesman Dies in London

LONDON, March 27.—John Bright died to-day. His end was peaceful and painless. He had lain in a comatose condition since yesterday. All of his family were present at his death-bed. The funeral will take place on Saturday. The interment will be in the Quaker's burying ground at Rochdale. The ceremonies will be as private as possible. The sculptor, Bruce Joy, has taken a cast of Mr. Bright's face. Political deputations will follow the funeral. Only personal friends will be admitted to the meeting in the house. At political meetings throughout the country last evening sympathetic references were made to Mr. Bright. Sir William Vernon Harcourt, speaking at Bradford, said that no greater or purer man ever adorned political life in England. Lords Harris and Spencer, addressing a popular meeting at Stagord, paid high tributes to Mr. Bright.

John Bright was born near Rochdale, England, Nov. 16, 1811. About 1840 he became a personal and political friend of Richard Cobden and gained distinction as an orator of the anti-corn law league, in advocacy of which he addressed many public meetings. He was elected a member of parliament for the city of Dunham in 1843, and was returned for Manchester in 1847. Cobden and Bright became the principal leaders of the Manchester school, or party, which was not identified with either of the great political parties, but advocated a pacific foreign policy and electoral reform. Mr. Bright was defeated in the election of 1857 because he had opposed the Crimean war, but he was elected the same year by the Liberal voters of Birmingham, which city he continued to represent for many years. During the great civil war in the United States he expressed his sympathy with the Union cause in several eloquent speeches. After the reform bill of Russell and Gladstone had been rejected by the house of commons in 1866, Mr. Bright advocated the cause of electoral reform by vehement speeches at immense public meetings in London, Manchester, Birmingham, and other places. Referring to these speeches the European Times remarked: "In all Mr. Bright's previous career he has never put forth such extraordinary power, such floods of the very highest order of eloquence on the great question of the day, as during the last four months. In 1887 the friends of reform triumphed, and procured the passage of a bill granting the right of suffrage to every householder in a borough. Mr. Bright entered the cabinet formed by Mr. Gladstone in 1868 as president of the board of trade, and retired from office on account of ill-health in May, 1871. When Gladstone returned to power in 1880, Mr. Bright became chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, but resigned in 1882, when the government began war in Egypt. His separation from the bulk of the Liberal party on the Irish question is the only incident in his career which really dimmed its splendor. He had always been an uncompromising champion of Irish wrongs and justified Irish turbulence and disorder in view of the treatment of the nation by the government until the franchise bill brought eighty-six Irish members into the house, when he became completely alienated from the cause and proved one of the most powerful opponents to Mr. Gladstone's scheme of home rule. Mr. Bright was married in 1839 to Elizabeth Priestman of Newcastle. His wife died in 1841, and he was afterward married, in 1849, to Margaret Leatham, daughter of a banker of Wakefield. He leaves four sons and three daughters.



Somewhat Gossipy.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 27.—In the public printer contest a point has been secured in favor of Capt. Meredith. The New York candidate, Hart, has withdrawn from the race, and the New York Republicans are giving their support to Mr. Meredith. When application was made recently on behalf of Chauncey B. Filley of Missouri for the position of consul general at Liverpool it was announced that the place had been promised to an Eastern man. It was said yesterday that it is to be given to Thomas Sherman of Maine, who has for several years occupied a comparatively unimportant position in the state department. Mr. Sherman was Mr. Blaine's private secretary for many years. The Liverpool consulship is one of the best of the consular offices. Ex-Gov. T. C. Fletcher of Missouri is the latest candidate mentioned for commissioner of Indian affairs. Col. Holloway of Indiana denies the statement that the president told him that he could not appoint any more Indianans to office for some time. Charges against Mr. New have been lodged with the committee on commerce. These are said to involve circumstances connected with his national bank and also a personal difficulty between his son and some other enthusiastic Republican. It is not believed, however, that these allegations are of sufficient consequence to have any effect upon his confirmation. Senator Voorhees, who has thus far refrained from making a call at the White House, expressed the opinion to-day that the senate would not adjourn this week as anticipated. "There are a number of important nominations yet to be made, and I would not be surprised if we are kept at work for a week or ten days yet. The president is going too slow to suit partisans, but he is a careful man and will not take any step until he has thoroughly considered the consequences that are likely to ensue."

A Precedent.

SCRANTON, Pa., March 27.—Daniel W. Connolly, who was appointed postmaster of Scranton in May, 1885, and commissioned by the president and then confirmed by the senate in January, 1886, and recommissioned for four years, has been removed on charges of incompetency. Hon. D. M. Jones has been appointed in his place. Mr. Connolly was given an opportunity by Congressman Scranton to resign when the four years, dating from his first commission, had expired, May 15, 1889. He felt, however, that he could hold over until January 20, 1890. Congressman Scranton then concluded to see what could be done for the Republican candidate for the office and left on Monday afternoon for Washington, saw the postmaster general early on Tuesday morning, had the matter before a cabinet meeting at noon, and in the afternoon left Washington knowing that Mr. Connolly's removal was an assured fact. The postmaster general, it seems, was not at all sanguine of the congressman's success in having the postmaster removed, but said he would lay the matter before the president at a cabinet meeting to be held at noon of that day. This was the first case of the kind that has been brought to the notice of the administration and would be of wide interest as a test case, and that he was doubtful as to whether the president would comply with Mr. Scranton's request. The president, however, sustained the member from this district, fixing this precedent. It is claimed here—that charges made by a member of congress over his signature concerning an official in his district were a sufficient cause for his removal.

Fought a Duel.

VIENNA, March 27.—Count Hoyos, the trusted friend of the late Crown Prince Rudolph, is said to have fought a duel with and shot Count Baltazze, the uncle of the late Baroness Vetzera, whose death was associated with that of the crown prince. The duel is said to have been fought at a village in the south of France.

Narrow Escape of the Czar.

LONDON, March 28.—The new Vienna Tagblatt publishes a story of the narrow escape the czar and czarina had while traveling from St. Petersburg to Gatchina. It is said that an obstruction was found on the line over which the imperial train was to pass, and that several persons have been arrested for connection with the alleged plot against the czar's life. The story is not confirmed.

Wide Awake for April is a model number, whether for home reading or for supplementary reading in school.

For instance, there is an extremely interesting article by John Burroughs—his own story of his boyhood—that will be read with equal pleasure by young and old. And the same may be said of the historical article entitled "Ralegh and Potato."

A novel and graceful Easter game for young people, "The Cascaroni Dance," is beautifully illustrated by Edmund H. Garrett.

The short stories are of unusual interest; especially "A Dash for a Flag," a story of the Civil War, thrillingly illustrated by Sandham.

The poems are particularly good, really for children—several very funny, too. Mr. Bridgman's "Court Calender" is a decidingly amusing conceit.

The helpful series of Public School cookery articles treats this time of "marketing," with diagrams of the various "cuti" of beef.

The serials, "Five Little Peppers Midway," by Margaret Sidney, and "David Vane and David Crane," by J. T. Trowbridge, are jolly reading. The index page shows a list of over thirty different contributors to this number, and fifty illustrations.

The publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston, send a sample (back number) for five cents. The price is 20 cents a number, $2.40 a year.

Holstein-Friesians in Canada.

SMITH BROS., OF CHURCHVILLE, REPLY TO MR. JOHN LEYS, M. P. P.

Toronto World.

Kindly allow us space in your paper to answer some remarks made by Mr. Leys, seeks, as a lawyer does when he has a weak case, to draw the attention from the main issue to something else. In this instance he says: "Smith Bros. know very little about the breed," and seeks to get us into a discussion on that, whilst the question at issue is, "whether dairy or beefy qualities of Holstein-Friesian cattle are the more important?" We said before: "Pure bred Holsteins do not take on flesh as readily as common animals." This had reference to dairy cows when giving milk. When not giving milk they take on flesh very rapidly, as we previously said in our catalogue. We still believe that the foregoing statement is true, and will prove it by the very men that were mentioned or quoted by Mr. Leys in his first letter. We may be permitted first to say that we know that our best cows do not take on flesh when giving milk and that the judges at the Toronto exhibition in 1887 said the only reason that we did not get a first prize on one of our best cows was because she was too thin in flesh. This year a similar idea was expressed by the judges, so that it is easily seen that fat was of great importance in the eyes of the judges.

Mr. Leys gave in his last letter a quotation from Mr. Hoxie, we will also quote from him because we know him to be a very intelligent man and a most successful breeder of Holsteins. He is now superintendent of the Holstein-Friesian Advanced Registry. Mr. Hoxie says: "The best strains of Holstein-Friesian cows will not take on flesh when giving milk. I do not consider size as very important in first-class milk cows. I think the milk qualities of these cattle of more importance than their beef qualities." Our opinion may not be of much importance, but we are glad to think it is precisely the same as that of so eminent and successful a breeder as Mr. Hoxie, and not the same as the self-assumed wise breeder, Mr. John Leys. Mr. Leys also quotes from Smith, Powell & Lamb. They are intelligent breeders of Holsteins and have one of the largest and finest herds in the world. They say: "No superior dairy cow, which gives a flow of rich milk, will readily take on flesh when in milking condition. The extra food will go to milk not flesh. This is a characteristic of Holstein-Friesian cows. Dairy qualities are of ten times the importance to this breed that beef is." Our opinion agrees exactly with that of these well known, experienced, and successful breeders and not with that of Mr. John Leys, who sticks to his own narrow little opinion with all the tenacity of a leech. We will further remark about selections of cattle and compare his manner of selecting with our own.

An Englishman coming out to Canada thought he could pay expenses by bringing from Holland a herd of Holstein cattle. He bought, a very natural thing in a man without experience, fleshy cattle, brought them to Canada, tried to sell them to parties in Kingston, then put them up at auction in Toronto, but in both cases failed to sell, why? Because they were not registered in the American Holstein-Friesian herd book and were not eligible to be registered in it. Secondly to those who knew this breed they were too beefy and therefore inferior. The aforesaid Englishman thus found himself in a rather a bad predicament. He had calculated that Canadians were easily fooled, but he was badly mistaken. Just then he met Mr. John Leys, who had the experience of having bought a properly registered Holstein heifer, and, of course, was a judge of these cattle. Mr. Leys made him an offer for the whole herd. The Englishman, perceiving generosity and benevolence beaming from the face of the self-esteemed breeder and (knowing that he could not sell them to any other person) accepted the liberal (?) offer and went on his way not rejoicing very much.

Our herd, on the other hand, was selected very differently from his. One of our best cows was selected in Holland by the Unadilla S. B. asscietion. This association was composed of such men as S. Hoxie (previously quoted,) Hinkley, Langworthy, Crandall, etc., all well known as successful breeders. This cow, when a yearling heifer, was selected by Mr. W. A. Rowley, out of 66 head, he paying $350 for her. She took first prize as a dairy cow three years in succession in Michigan (as high as 24 competing) and was registered in the Advanced Registry when only three years old, yet this cow was beaten at Toronto show by a fatter cow, the judges giving as the only reason that she was not fat enough. We have ten head descended from her. We have six head from the famous milk and butter herd of Thomas B. Wales, a man who had 17 years' experience and who claimed to have the best butter herd in America. His whole herd of 66 head averaged $455 at the sale last May. We have two half-sisters and two half-brothers of Tritomia's Mercedes Prince, who sold for $2,050, and of Imkje's Mercedes, who sold for $1,060. She has a two-year-old butter record of 21 lbs. 8 ozs. in seven days, and a three-year-old butter record of 25 lbs. 15¼ ozs. in seven days. Five other two-year-old half-sisters averaged more than 17 lbs. of unsalted butter in seven days.

The other breeders from whom we bought smaller numbers have always been noted for being great prize takers in the states.

To sum up: Mr. Leys' herd was bought by a man not in the business, inexperienced and no speculation, and hence of the beefy and inferior kind. Mr. Leys bought the whole herd from the Englishman because he got them cheap. Ours, on the other hand, were selected or bred by some of the best breeders of America, men of experience and intelligence and who had the development and improvement of the breed at heart. From such men, we are glad to say, we got our cattle.

The American Holstein-Friesian Association was formed and the Holstein-Friesian herd book was started to prevent inferior animals coming into the country and hence would not register animals brought in by speculators. While they encouraged the bringing in and breeding of good animals, they discouraged the same of inferior ones. A few persons who were buying and selling these cattle on speculation became dissatisfied with this because their inferior animals could not be registered. They, together with some who had animals unfit or ineligible for registration, started a little herd book on their own account. In this they registered their stock and in this Mr. John Leys has at last, so we are informed, succeeded in getting his registered. There is not in America a noted breeder who belongs to that association, nor is there a cow with a noted record registered in that herd book.

This herd book, called the branch of the N. Holland H. B., is scarcely ever heard of in the states and never was in Canada, as far as we can find out, until Mr. John Leys gave it out that there was such a herd book and that he had his cattle registered in it.

The Northwestern Agriculturst: The successful farmer must be a Jack-at-all-trades to a considerable extent. His great point must be to sell a good deal and buy little. The farm must be the source of most of his supplies, and he must have the knack of selling his surplus products where they will bring the most ready money. To save money, he must be a fair carpenter and blacksmith in order to make repairs. A knowledge of these trades will often save time, not only money, but more time than the repairs require in goeing to town to get the repairing done. So the farmer ought to be farmer mechanic merchant all in one.

Holstein Beef.

To the Northwestern Agriculturist.

Several months I noticed in your columns advice which I thought was good and proceeded to act on it. The advice was to make young beef or veal out of steers of dairy breeds, before they began to grow coarse. I had a fine high grade Holstein calf which I concluded to experiment on. I kept him growing on good feed so that he never lost his "calf-fat," and at fourteen months he was slaughtered. To all outward appearance he was very fat, and yet the carcass was all lean meat, the fat being distributed through the muscles, and not in layers. A part of the meat was used fresh and was like mature veal, and pronounced by all delicious. A part was made into corned beef and a part into dried beef, with the best results in both cases. I have never seen better dried beef. The corned beef was not quite as firm as mature beef, but in flavor and quality was the best. Any doubts I may have had about the success of the experiment in the beginning, have been dispelled. I have never seen more thrifty calves or better feeders than the Holsteins. They are hearty, easily taught to drink and, when old enough, to eat, and they are easily kept in fine flesh for that reason. I do not think that calves of any breed surpass them for veal, and for beef at one to two years, do not think anything can be better. As experiment has shown that more pounds can be made before two years with the same feed than after that age, the question is left as to quality only, and in this case the quality was all that could be desired.

DAKOTA.

The advice referred to was based on experience, and well established facts. Steers of dairy breeds begin to grow coarse, after they reach a year to a year and a half old. Holstein calves are very handsome, plump, well-rounded, and smooth-coated. They keep this handsome form until they pass a year old and it of families that mature slowly, until near two years old. From that time on feed seems to go to growth, and they become coarse in appearance. Steers should never be allowed to pass two years old. They should be well fed and slaughtered before the coarse stage. One of the large breeders of Holsteins, near Philadelphia, adopts this plan, and sells this Holstein beef to certain restaurants in that city which make special mention of it in their bills of fare, as many patrons prefer it to mature beef.

The Northwestern Agriculturist: The old country idea of land, that it is family property, to be preserved, improved, developed and handed down from generation to generation is a good one. In America we value property at the price it will sell for only. Land that a wise man has made into a farm, has an intrinsic value far beyond its selling value, for that depends largely on the price of neighbor's farm and neighbors are not always wise farmers.

Profits of Farming.

The Northwestern Agriculturist.

There is a good deal of talk among farmers and others that farming does not pay as a business. This is doubtless a fact, some season, and sometimes a succession of seasons are poor and that makes a long hard pull, but those who depreciate farming forget that all other kind of business has its ups and downs, and that only about five per cent. of the business men of towns and cities succeed permanently. In the large cities of Minnesota, many of the men who are now the richest have failed at least once in their business careers. The fact is that while farming does not make quick or large fortunes, it pays better on the average than any other occupation. The wages of mechanics seem high in proportion to those of the laborer on a farm, and yet, at the end of the year, a prudent farm laborer will have saved more money than the mechanic whose idle days have consumed all the wages earned when employed, while on the farm every day counts, and expenses trifling. It is not what a man earns, but what he saves, that measures his success. The cities are full of men who left farms because the business did not pay, only to find that other callings pay even less, and are subject to more worry and perplexity. The farmer who owns his farm and improves it year by year, while making a living for himself and family, is laying up a little fortune in the best of saving banks. Increased fertility gives year by year better crops and better profits, and then a better house and better barn is possible. A better barn means more stock and more fertility, and more crops again, a constant increase in comfort and wealth.

It Will Work Right.

Iowa State Register: We are getting rid of lots of poor cattle and of poor cattle men, that is one consolation. It will be a long time before this bear movement will be forgotten by people who speculate in cattle. The millions from Europe, and the East, from men who do not own land, will soon be out of cattle. Then business will be downe for a long time on correct basis. We must suffer till the exporters get entirely out. They have been catching it. The two year's drought compelled us to help them get out by selling our worst in large numbers. What a riddance of poor stuff.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication March 22th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delivered by Clement A. Brown and J. F. Brown, her husband, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 18th day of April, A. D. 1887, and duly recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 20th day of April, 1887, at 1:40 o'clock p. m., in book 35 of mortgages, on pages 441 to 445 inclusive. And the said default having continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared to be due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage, in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of said default and declaration aforesaid there is claimed to be due, and is due and payable on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of sixteen hundred forty and 60-100 (1640.60) dollars, and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise have been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: Lots three (3) and four (4) of Section four (4), and lot one (1) of section five (5) all in township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty-four (44), and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter (sw¼ of the sw¼) of Section thirty-three, (33) in Township one hundred and forty-eight, (148) Range forty-four, (44) containing in all one hundred and fifty-six (156) acres more or less according to the United States government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest and twenty-five (25) dollars attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage, to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 13th day of May, A. D. 1889, at the hour of two o'clock p. m., subject to redemption at any time within one year in manner provided by law.

Dated Moorhead, Minnesota, March 15th, A. D. 1889.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., April 3d, 1889.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U S. Land office, at Crookston, Minn., on June 17, 1889, viz: GEORGE JONES, H'd 8006, for the w½ ne¼ and w½ se¼ Sec. 19, T. 149, R. 44. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Rhesa Godfrey, Cyrus Morris, John Forsythe and D. T. Mitchell, all of Tilden, Polk Co., Minn. Any person who desires to protest against the allowance of such proof, or who knows of any substantial reason, under the law and the regulations of the Interior Department, why such proof should not be allowed, will be given an opportunity at the above mentioned time and place to cross-examine the witnesses of said claimant, and to offer evidence in rebuttal of that submitted by claimant.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 8, 1889.

Registers and Receivers of United States Land Offices:

GENTLEMEN: Your attention is called to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to withdraw certain public lands from private entry and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, a copy of which is hereto attached, containing eight sections.

The first section of said act provides that from and after its passage "no public lands of the United States, except those in the State of Missouri, shall be subject to private entry." This relates to the private sale or entry of "offered" lands under sections 2354 and 2357, U. S. R. S. See pages 4 to 8, 90 and 91, general circular, January 1, 1889. No sale or location, at private entry, will be admissible, under said first section, except in Missouri, but disposals of this class of "offered" lands under the pre-emption, homestead, or other laws, are not otherwise affected thereby.

The second section of the act allows in general terms any party who has heretofore made a homestead entry and who has not perfected title thereunder to make another homestead entry, while denying such right to any party who perfects title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws already initiated, and specifically provides that parties who have existing pre-emption rights may transmute them to homestead entries and perfect title to the lands under the homestead laws, although they may have heretofore had the benefit thereof.

Therefore you will not reject a homestead application on the ground that the applicant cannot make the prescribed oath that he has not previously made such an entry, but he will be required to show by affidavit, designating the entry formerly made by description of the land, number and date of entry, or other sufficient data, that it was made prior to the date of said act, and also that he has not since perfected a pre-emption or homestead title initiated prior to that date. In cases when the former entry was made subsequent to the date of the act, the rule remains unchanged, as given on page 17 of the general circular of January 1, 1889.

The third section provides for permission to be granted in certain cases by the register and receiver of the proper district land office for parties claiming public land as settlers under existing laws to leave and be absent from the land settled upon for a specified period, not to exceed one year at any one time. The applicant for such permission will be required to submit testimony to consist of his own affidavit, corroborated by the affidavits of disinterested witnesses, executed before the register or receiver or some officer in the land district, using a seal and authorized to administer oaths, setting forth in detail the facts on which he relies to support his application, and which must be sufficient to satisfy the register and receiver, who are enjoined to exercise their best and most careful judgment in the matter, that he is unable by reason of a total or partial destruction or failure of crops, sickness, or other unavoidable casualty to secure a support for himself or those dependent upon him upon the land settled upon. In case a leave of absence is granted the register and receiver will enter such action on their records, indicating the period for which granted, and promptly report the fact to this office, transmitting the testimony on which their action is based. In case of refusal the applicant will be allowed the right of appeal on the usual conditions.

By reference to section 4 you will observe that it simply fixes at $1.25 per acre the price of certain lands within the limits of railroad grants which had been increased by law to the double minimum price.

The 5th and 6th sections both provide that parties who made homestead entries prior to the date of the act, of less than 160 acres, shall have the right to make an additional entry of a quantity sufficient with the original entry to complete the maximum quantity of 160 acres, without affecting the existing rights of soldiers—see pages 26, 27 of circular of Jan. 1, 1889—or of settlers within railroad limits—see pages 21, 22, and 23 idem.

1. The fifth section provides for an additional entry of land which shall be contiguous to the land embraced in the original entry, for which the final proof of residence and cultivation made on the original entry shall be sufficient, but of which no party shall have the benefit who does not, at the date of his application therefor, own and occupy the land covered by his original entry, and which shall not be permitted, or if permitted, shall be canceled, if the original entry should fail, for any reason, prior to patent, or should appear to be illegal or fraudulent. Applicants for additional entries under this section will be required to produce evidence that they own and occupy the land embraced in their original entries, to be properly described by legal subdivisions and by reference to the number and date of the original entry, and the evidence to consist of their own affidavits, corroborated by the affidavits of disinterested witnesses, executed before the register or receiver or some officer in the land district using a seal and authorized to administer oaths. In addition to this, the proper homestead application and affidavit must be filed, which may be on the forms prescribed under the act of March 3, 1879 (4-018 and 4-086), properly modified so as to show the section and act under which application is made and the affidavit modified by striking out the portion that refers to military services, which is not required under this act.

2. The sixth section admits of an additional entry of land, which need not be contiguous to the land embraced in the original, by parties who have complied with the conditions of the law with regard to the original entry, and have had the final papers issued therefor, and with the condition of residence and cultivation of the land embraced in the additional entry, to be made and proved as in ordinary homestead entries.

Application and affidavit will be required in entries under this section (6) and the same forms (4-018 and 4-086) may be used as above stated in reference to entries under the 5th section.

In additional entries under both sections the usual homestead fees and commissions will be required to be paid, and receipts will be issued therefor. Notes will be made on the entry papers and opposite the entries on the monthly abstracts referring to the section and the act under which allowed.

The 7th section of the act prescribes a rule of construction for the act of March 3, 1879, in accordance with which you will receive and properly act upon any evidence which parties desiring to avail themselves thereof may see proper to submit, showing that accident or unavoidable delays have prevented them from making proof on the date specified in the public notice, in cases in which the proof was taken within ten days following that date. But this will not be necessary when continuances are made, as provided for in subdivision 13, on pages 43 and 44, of circular of January 1, 1889, to which you are referred.

The 8th section does not appear to call for remark in this communication.

Very respectfully,
S. M. STOCKSLAGER, Commissioner.
Approved:
JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

[PUBLIC—No. 124.]

AN ACT to withdraw certain public lands from private entry, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act no public lands of the United States, except those in the State of Missouri, shall be subject to private entry.

SEC. 2. That any person who has not heretofore perfected title to a tract of land of which he has made entry under the homestead entry of not exceeding one-quarter section of public land subject to such entry, such previous filing or entry to the contrary notwithstanding; but this right shall not apply to persons who perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws already initiated: Provided, That all pre-emption settlers upon the public lands whose claims have been initiated prior to the passage of this act may charge such entries to homestead entries and proceed to perfect their titles to their respective claims under the homestead entries and proceed to perfect their titles to their respective claims under the homestead law notwithstanding they may have heretofore had the benefit of such law; but such settlers who perfect title to such claims under the homestead law shall not thereafter be entitled to enter other lands under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the register and receiver of any public land office, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, that any settler upon the public domain under existing law is unable by reason of a total or partial destruction or failure of crops, sickness, or other unavoidable casualty, to secure a support for himself, herself, or those dependent upon him or her upon the lands settled upon, then such register and receiver may grant to such a settler a leave of absence from the claim upon which he or she has filed for a period not exceeding one year at any one time, and such settler so granted leave of absence shall forfeit no rights by reason of such absence: Provided, That the time of such actual absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law.

SEC. 4. That the price of all sections and parts of sections of the public lands within the limits of the portions of the several grants of lands to aid in the construction of railroads which have been heretofore and which may hereafter be forfeited, which were by the act making such grants or have since been increased to the double minimum price, and also of all lands within the limits of any such railroad grant, but not embraced in such grant, lying adjacent to and coterminous with the portions of the line of any such railroad which shall not be completed at the date of this act, is hereby fixed at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

SEC. 5. That any homestead settler who has heretofore entered less than one-quarter section of land may enter other and additional land lying contiguous to the original entry which shall not, with the land first entered and occupied, exceed in the aggregate one hundred and sixty acres, without proof of residence upon and cultivation of the additional entry; and if final proof of settlement and cultivation has been made for the original entry when the additional entry is made, then the patent shall issue without further proof: Provided, That this section shall not apply to or for the benefit of any person who at the date of making application for entry hereunder does not own and occupy the lands covered by his original entry: And provided, That if the original entry should fail for any reason prior to patent, or should appear to be illegal or fraudulent, the additional entry shall not be permitted, or, if having been initiated, shall be canceled.

SEC. 6. That every person entitled, under the provisions of the homestead laws, to enter a homestead, who has heretofore complied with or who shall hereafter comply with the conditions of said laws, and who shall have made his final proof thereunder for a quantity of land less than one hundred and sixty acres and received the receiver's final receipt therefor, shall be entitled under said laws to enter as a personal right, and not assignable, by legal subdivisions of the public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry, so much additional land as added to the quantity previously so entered by him shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres: Provided, That in no case shall patent issue for the land covered by such additional entry until the person making such additional entry shall have actually and in conformity with the homestead laws resided upon and cultivated the lands so additionally entered, and otherwise fully complied with such laws: Provided, also, That this section shall not be construed as affecting any rights as to location of soldiers' certificates heretofore issued under section two thousand three hundred and six of the revised statutes.

SEC. 7. That the "act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands," approved March third, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, shall not be construed to forbid the taking of testimony for final proof within ten days following the day advertised as upon which such final proof shall be made in cases where accident or unavoidable delays have prevented the applicant or witnesses from making such proof on the date specified.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed as suspending, repealing, or in any way rendering inoperative the provisions of the act entitled, "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations," approved July fifth, eighteen hundred and eighty-four.

Approved, March 2d, 1889.

A Sad Case of Suicide.

Norman County Herald.

Our citizens were shocked last Wensday about noon by the report which was quickly circulated that Mrs. Fred Andrist had hung hirself. It seems that Mrs. Andrist has been some what depressed in mind since the sickness of her children last winter but it was thought by husband and neighbors that she acted more cheerful that morning than she had since her return to Ada a few weeks ago. Mr. Andrist left the house about half past ten and on his return in less than an hour found his wife hanging in a closet. He immediately cut the rope but life was extinct. A double clothes line had been attached to a high loose shelf in the closet and it was evident to all that the deed was committed under a temporary derangement of mind. Mrs. Anerist whose maiden name was Anna Ginsberg, was born in Mantorville, Dodge county in 1861 and was well known in that village. She leaves a husband and three small children to mourn the loss of a kind wife and mother. Her mother, Mrs. Ginsberg, her brother Charley, and sisters Mrs. D. C. Lightbourn and Mrs. Louis Pfund are all residents of this place. Nothing has happened in this community in many years that has so shocked the people, and the relatives have the sincere sympathy of the entire community. An inquest was held and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts.

Moorhead Weekly News: Hon. S. G. Comstock is receving from 25 to 40 letters daily from persons who desire to serve Uncle Sam in positions in the state and at Washington. It keeps him very busily employed reading and answering his correspondence, and doubtless gives exercise for a great deal of sagacity and wisdom to satify even partially the claims of so many applicants. Mr. Comstock has an honorable and conscientious desire to do the best he can, with fairness to applicants and justice to the government, and will make just as few mistakes as possible. It would be strange indeed if some are not disappointed for the reason that the unsuccessful applicant cannot be made to see why his claims are not just as strong as those of the applicant who is appointed.

Red Lake Fall's Whoop.

She Says Crookston is Jealous--Merriam County Opposed.

Special to Minneapolis Journal.

RED LAKE FALLS, April 5.—The council has deputed four citizens to go to St. Paul to oppose the further success of the Merriam County bill which provides for a new county out of the southeast portion of Polk and a part of Beltrami. This city has long had a county seat bee in its bonnet and this bill is greatly disturbing the citizens. The new county would cut off a tier of townships a couple of miles south of here, depriving Red Lake Falls of all hope of the county seat. A vigorous fight will be made for the defeat of the bill, and if it should carry, a still harder fight would ensue at the election. The scheme has its birth at Crookston. A jealousy has long existed between this city and that and the extensive improvements going on here now have awakened Crookston's jealousy.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., APRIL 11, 1889.

'Round Home.

Mr. L. Davis has returned from Louisiana.

Try the new soda fountain at F. E. Hertz & Co.

Ed. Wile went to Minneapolis last week for a brief call.

"Such lovely weather" is the general exclamation this week.

A. N. Hixson says he had 200 acres sowed before the freeze.

Extensive prairie fires were raging in South Dakota last week.

The latest fad is to fill your pockets with chewing gum, go down to the river and fish.

Hon. H. Steenerson went over to Dakota this week to attend an important suit.

The band was out serenading the successful candidates on Thursday evening of last week.

M. Gleason, the genial traveling man for Averill, Carpenter & Co., was in the city on Saturday last.

Hundreds of acres will be seeded this week, and the work nearly completed next with good weather.

Ben. Clements has purchased the R. Smith grocery stock and moved it into his store on Second street.

Just the thing for these hot days—a cool, refreshing drink of the pure juice of the grape—Catawba grape—at Herb's.

On April 1st the wife of Ole Hoven presented him with a bouncing baby girl. Ole says it was not an "April fool."

A 12½ pound boy on Saturday last was the occasion of policeman Gonyea setting up the cigars to his numerous friends.

Don't forget the lecture at the M. E. church on Saturday evening. Go and hear the gifted speaker and enjoy a rare literary treat.

Harry Attix found his lost colt last week. Harry says that colt has speed, and P. J. LaChapelle will have to look to his laurels.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Reed came up from Chicago last Thursday and will spend the summer with their daughter, Mrs. M. C. Perrin.

The Rev. T. McClary will lecture at the M. E. church on Saturday evening. Subject—"The Genius of America." Admission 25 cents.

The new council seems to be a business council and the city may expect a judicious and economical administration of its affairs.

Peter O. Onstad, of Ada, was in the city on Tuesday attending to business before the Probate Court in the matter of the Shefloe estate.

On our first page will be found the new law relating to homestead entries and the instructions sent to the land offices in relation thereto.

Andrew Nelson has moved his marble works into the LePage block, on Broadway, in the room recently occupied by LeDue's wholesale meat market.

The flour mill starts up this week. It was intended to start up Tuesday, but it was found that some of the machinery needed repairs that would delay a day or so.

Fred Hall has moved into the Scott house on Houston avenue. D. D. Williams has moved into the Copeland house, on the corner of Ash street and Fletcher avenue.

Sheriff Paulsrud has bought the Showeiler residence just across the bridge on Sampson's Woodland Addition. The sheriff thus secures a fine residence in a lovely spot.

Herb uses none of the cheap extracts for his soda fountain—nothing but the best and most expensive fruit juices of every kind in existence. Herb says he proposes not only to keep up with the procession, but just a huckleberry ahead.

C. H. Saake has rented the building adjoining the Boston Clothing Store on Robert St., recently vacated by Swan Hovik and will put in a branch jewelry store as soon as the building, now undergoing repairs can be completed and made ready.

L. G. Theurer, a brother-in-law of Pete Misgen, arrived in the city this week to take charge of the bottling works for the summer. Pete talks of going to Oklahoma to join the other boomers. G. H. Palmer says he shall go along to keep Pete out of mischief.

Col. Topping was over from Grand Forks on Tuesday. He has given up his contemplated removal to Midway, and will remain in this upper country. We know of no landlord in the Northwest who would be missed more than "Top," should he leave.

Bro. McGrew seems greatly disturbed at his failure to obtain some appointment and unjustly blames his friends for his failures. His boyish attacks on Auditor McGuire will not injure that official as much as it will McGrew and even if they should wherein would McGuire's ruin benefit McGrew?

R. J. Montague returned from St. Paul on Monday morning with the report that the bond bill has passed both branches of the legislature, and is now all right. He says that W. F. Zwickey rendered valuable assistance in getting the bill through the senate and deserves great credit for his efforts in behalf of the bill. Mr. Anglim brings the same report.

The fire department was called out on Saturday afternoon on account of a bit of blaze in a sawdust pile near I. Simmon's residence. A pail of water or so judiciously applied would have extinguished the incipient blaze and saved the city $50 or so. A similar case was the fire in rear of the laundry a few days since. In neither case was it necessary to summon the department. There might be some excuse in the night when the conflagration could not readily be ascertained but there is none for such things in the daytime.

Frank T. Hasemne returned on Thursday last from his annual visit to Madison, Wis. Frank says the Crookston Nurseries will boom this year as he intends to make business hum from this on. He is prepared for orders for everything in his line for the spring trade.

Judge F. Ives returned from a pleasant trip to Washington, New York, Boston and other eastern cities on Wednesday last. He was in Washington March 5th and spent a few days there in attendance on a land case. His opinion, after an extensive journey throughout the east is that we have no reason to kick at hard times up here as our condition is vastly better than hundreds in the east.

Frank Vettleson was in from Bransvold last week reporting the loss of his residence, by fire, on April 1st. The building cost over $800, insured for $500 in the Minnesota Fire Association Co., of Minneapolis. Everything the house contained was destroyed, the family barely escaping. The loss is a very severe blow to Mr. Vettleson and a number of his friends here chipped in to help him out a little.

C. A. Johnson and John Hendrickson came down from St. Hilaire way on Saturday and spent the Sabbath in the city. On Monday morning when they went down to take the train for home they found the train a few minutes previous and had the sensation of seeing it disappear over the hill. Upon investigation they found they were a few minutes late so they procured a rig and made the journey overland.

Dr. A. Nelson was up from Fertile last week, greeting old friends. The doctor reports his business excellent this spring and prospects good for a season of general prosperity. By the way the doctor is an applicant for the position of consul to Copenhagen, Denmark, and his many friends here would rejoice to see him appointed, knowing well that he would creditably perform the duties of the office and that hsi services to his party justly entitles him to recognition.

In its issue of April 2d, the Chronicle made a wholly uncalled for attack upon P. J. McGuire, E. M. Walsh, Andrew Eiken and D. D. Williams because they did not sign his petition for postmaster, and was particularly bitter against P. J. McGuire, calling him "the great Irish boss of Polk County." In the light of all of the facts this was a wholly uncalled for attack upon one of the most faithful public servants that Polk County has ever had—a man who took the auditor's office by appointment and brought it up to such a state of perfection that it now has the reputation of being one of the best managed offices of the state, a man who by his faithfulness, by his gentlemanly demeanor, has been re-elected time and again to the office with no opposition at all to speak of, simply because he has proved to be just the man for the position, a man whose praises Mr. McGrew has justly sung in his paper time and again, but now, all of a sudden, calls a great "Irish boss," simply because Mr. McGuire fails to sign a petition to appoint him, (McGrew,) as postmaster. Soon after election Mr. Dawley began to talk up the postoffice business, asked for that and nothing else, while Mr. McGrew aspired to be railroad commissioner. In this he received the most hearty support of all of his republican friends, including "the great Irish boss," Mr. McGuire, but after all they could do for him he failed. He was then given everything the boys had in the shop, patronage worth hundreds, and the boys held themselves in readiness to back him up for anything that might present itself. Mr. McGrew says: "When our petition was first talked of Mr. A. D. Stephens took it and went to Mr. P. J. McGuire and asked him to sign it; this he refused to do," &c. At the time Mr. McGrew's petition appeared Mr. Dawley had been promised the support of many republicans, and no doubt had received that of Mr. McGuire with the others, then where is there anything surprising in the fact that Mr. McGuire declined to sign Mr. McGrew's? How could he go back on his promises to Mr. Dawley, simply because Mr. McGrew happened, at the last moment, to think that he would like it? Is it not true that Mr. McGrew, as soon as he failed in his efforts to obtain the railroad commissionership, turned his eye upon the position of register? Is it not true that he soon learned that Mr. McGuire had had some thoughts of that office for himself and did he (McGrew) not then and there open out on McGuire in an abusive style, even before he knew whether McGuire had any chance or not? What kind of a country is this if any man has no right to aspire to an office even, without being subject to the charge of "bossism," &c., &c. When Mr. McGrew learned that Mr. McGuire's name had been mentioned for register, he talked as though it was the veriest presumption in Mr. McGuire to dare to think of such a thing. It is true that Mr. McGrew faithfully served his country as a brave soldier, and for that is deserving of great credit, but it is also true that many another man did just as much. But in his every day life now, is he doing more for his country than others? Are his services so valuable as to entitle him to first choice of any or all appointments, so that he has only to ask for an office and it is his by right? There is such a thing as being unreasonable and we think that Mr. McGrew occupies that very position. He looks at his past services in the army as worthy of all recognition—and it is true they are, but he entirely overlooks every other consideration, the fact that his friends have always stood by him in everything consistent, and the fact that those same friends are every day doing as much for their party and the country as he is, and are for that reason entitled to some recognition for their services. The idea that P. J. McGuire sets himself up as a boss in any way, shape or manner is ridiculous to all who know him. If being a thoroughly competent, faithful official is to be a boss, he is. If hard work in the service of the county constitutes a boss, he is. If gentlemanly and courteous treatment of everybody who comes to that office to do business with him constitutes a boss, then he is the greatest boss any country ever had, for such is P. J. McGuire. If he never committed a single error in his life he would be more than human—a better man than even Mr. McGrew—and the fact that he has rested patiently under such bitter attacks as have been made upon him proves him to be far more of a man than Mr. McGrew would have it appear. In the nature of the case we consider the attack of Mr. McGrew wholly uncalled for, wholly unjustifiable.

OBSERVATIONS.

This week we observe that seeding is being pushed vigorously all along the line.

That the engineers of that "great victory" of last week are searching diligently to find out what they got for their money. A victory obtained by the expenditure of vast sums where there was no opposition seems a very thin affair.

That the land proposition is now before the people for their action. Let that action be judicious.

That with two important lines of railway Crookston has now some inducements to offer for the establishments of manufacturers.

That J. E. Morrisey takes hold of his aldermanic duties like an old stager. He is a good debater.

That Herb says that the way to be healthy and wealthy and wise is to get your summer drinks at Herb's place—and take no other.

That "farmer" Copeland begins to talk "small grains" and stock like an old stager. By next fall we expect to see him return with his hair full of hayseed.

Sampson's Woodchuck.

The Hon. B. Sampson introduced a bill into the Senate providing for bonding the floating indebtedness of the city to the extent of $50,000, got it passed, and sent it to the House. The bill was discovered by one of our citizens, Judge Montague, who procured a copy at an expense of $3.50 and brought it up to lay before the council. The council was called on Monday evening to discuss the measure, at which meeting was present a large number of our leading citizens, and a general discussion of the bill was invited. P. C. Schmidt took the ground that the bill was unconstitutional and pernicious, as it says one thing and means quite another; it provides for bonding an indebtedness that we have not, and is really intended to aid manufacturing enterprises which the council is not empowered to do. Many spoke upon the bill and all but one or two against it. The impression was general that Mr. Sampson should have consulted the council before attempting to pass this bill, and the president was authorized to request representative Roberts to secure the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Plain Sewing.

Mrs. Hathaway is prepared to do all kinds of plain sewing at the most reasonable rates. Will also make boys' clothing. Residence on Broadway.

Conductor Copeland sent one carload of goods out to the farm this week. The family will go Saturday. No family could be more missed from Crookston society and their return in the fall will be looked forward to with much anticipation. All wish them good luck and a pleasant summer upon the farm.

N. C. Hendricks was up from Fertile on Monday. Mr. H. has been postmaster at Fertile for some time, as deputy under Otto Kankel and later as postmaster by appointment upon the resignation of Mr. K. Mr. H. would be willing to continue in the position and as he has always been a faithful subject, prompt and efficient he will no doubt meet with no serious opposition. He is an old Crookston boy and has lots of warm friends in this city,

Senator Kellar was appointed a committee to "investigate" the twine trust and reported that "no trust exists." The house might appoint a committee to "investigate" Senator Kellar; that committee might report that "no Senator Kellar exists" but the state would still be paying Senator Kellar's per diem all the same. Senator Kellar is a stubborn fact and so is the twine trust despite all "reports" to the contrary.

The inquest on the body of John Collins, killed on Wednesday morning resulted in a verdict of suicide. The engineer's testimony points conclusively to this theory. He says he saw Collins walking along on the track ahead and supposed of course that he would step off. As he failed to do so he blew the whistle and put on the brakes to stop whereupon Collins ran directly in front of the engine and throwing himself upon his knees was struck squarely in the face and thrown into the ditch. THE JOURNAL was misinformed last week as to the conductor. It was reported to be Scott's but it was Ward's train. Scott was a passenger on board and thus the mistake arose. None of the train men can be blamed as every effort possible was made to save the man. It is evident from his actions that he was insane. His home was near Warren where he had a farm. He was unmarried and had no relatives in this country.

A. Sture was in the city from Black River last week. He brought in a twine protest from the town of Sanders signed by 88 prominent farmers. This movement is becoming so general that the twine trust is begining to get uneasy and the result will probably be that the price will not be as high as it would if farmers had not vigorously protested. We are surprised to learn that there were some who worked against the signing of these protests on town meeting day claiming that if the farmers generally signed them the result would be that no twine could be had at all. This is wholly erroneous but wherein would the farmer be benefitted by obtaining all the twine he wanted if the price was put so high that he would make no money on his crop? It would be far better for him to suffer a slight loss for one season than that the twine trust should make its millions this year and thus be encouraged to exact greater blood-money next year. If every town in Polk County had sent in a protest the result would have been largely to our advantage. Last year, as near as we can ascertain, over $85,000 was paid out for twine. Now if every farmer who used twine last year should say to this giant trust: "We will not use a pound of your twine unless we can get it at a reasonable figure," it would certainly have its weight, taken in connection with the thousands who have said this very thing and who actually mean just what they say. It is a fact that the attitude of the farmers upon the question has caused the would-be twine robbers to pause and ask themselves the question: "Where shall we find a market for our twine if this agitation continues?" This agitation should not stop until the good work is completed. Keep the ball rolling. If you have not seen a copy of the remonstrance send to THE JOURNAL office and a copy will be sent you if you will secure signers to it.

Free the first day. Soda water from that elegant fountain, F. E. Hertz & Co.

Frank Benoit spent a day or so visiting his brothers and friends in the city.

Pete Misgan departed for Helena last Monday with a carload of eggs.

L. D. Marshall, who has been confined to the house with pneumonia is able to be around again.

Fred Date came in from Mentor on Tuesday afternoon. Says the summer resort will be all ready for visitors when wanted.

The appointment of E. W. Wile as comptroller is a good selection. Ed. will make a good one if confirmed which he doubtless will be.

Got to please our customers even though the best of everything costs big money. Try our soda fountain, the best in the city, F. E. Hertz & Co.

While out for a hunt on Tuesday I. Fortier got into a misunderstanding with his team over a bog, one whiffletree broke, striking one of the horses a sharp cut which so excited the team that they lit out. The pole dropped and was snapped into kindling wood. In attempting to stop the team Mr. Fortier broke the third finger of his right hand and now has to wear it in an eave trough.

By the result of the recent election Mr. Anglim feels that he was placed in an awkward position. By his seeming acceptance it is made to appear that he was an aspirant for the position while the fact is that he was not, that he did not desire the position, had declined to accept before he went to St. Paul, and upon receipt of the telegram asking him if he would accept replied that he would not. It seems that he did not receive the telegram until after the nomination had been made. When he learned this, he, at the urgent request of some of our people who were down there, decided to let matters take their course, and should he be elected to attend to the duties of the office to the best of his ability. His friends, relying upon his business record solely were confident of his success and did not spend money right and left to secure his election, but depended his record as an upright, substantial business man to carry him through. Neither Mr. Anglim nor his friends need have anything to regret in this matter—save only his defeat for had he been elected no one can say that we would not have had a thorough business man at the helm—one of the best in the city.

Horses and Mules.

For the past few weeks M. R. Brown had advertised a carload of horses and mules to trade for stock cattle, but he is obliged to disappoint the people because the stock went off so rapidly that he has none left. He advertised them in THE JOURNAL.

H. Dickman, Jr., started for Oklahoma, last week.

The requisite number of names calling an election on the bond question has been handed to the city council and on Tuesday next the election will doubtless be ordered. This week we have not time nor space to fully discuss the merits of the question; we can only say that the opportunity the city has so long sought for has presented itself and if now neglected will never again be offered. We have no fears but that the proposition will carry by a large majority as it certainly ought to.

A Free Blow Out.

On Wednesday morning as Frank Hertz was getting that elegant new fountain ready for business the safety valve blew off drenching Frank and deluging the store. For a minute Frank thought he was scattered all over the city and he began to feel around in the dense mist to pick up the pieces. Fortunately no one was hurt and no damage done save a few hours delay. They hope to open out this morning.

Board of Canvassers.

Moved by alderman Steenerson, seconded by alderman Marlette that the resolution passed by the board of canvassers be adopted. Carried.

On motion council adjourned.

JOHN PATERSON, Clerk.

TUESDAY, April 9.

The new council met at 8. After the oath had been administered to the new members the council organized by electing Wm. Watts temporary chairman. On motion Wm. Watts was elected president for the ensuing year and H. Steenerson vice president. The president appointed the following committees:

On finance:—Alds. Childs, Lally and Morrisey.

Fire:—Alds. Jennings, Buhn and Marlette.

On ways and means:—Jerome, Walter and Bjoin.

The mayor's address was listened to with wrapt attention and was a fine effort full of wise hints and good suggestions. A petition for a sidewalk from the depot to the bridge to Sampson's Woodland Addition, along north Broadway. Withdrawn pending discussion of a resolution presented by Ald. Childs that one alderman in each ward be appointed to act as advising committee with the street commissioner to have control of improvement on streets, sidewalks and lanes. Quite a discussion ensued and the resolution was temporarily tabled, afterwards taken from the table and adopted only two, Alds. Morrisey and Walter objecting. Bonds of Justices Spendley and Lewis, Constables Holt and Larson, Clerk Paterson, Treasurer Couvrette and Assessor Wight presented and approved. Reports of Justice Spendley and Lewis read and adopted. Bids of banks as city repository presented. each bid being at 3 per cent. a motion was made and carried that the city's funds be equally distributed among the three. At the close of the mayor's address his Honor sent in the following nominations, viz:

For chief of police, M. B. Hayes.
For policeman, Louis Gonyea.
" " Geo. Holt.
" " Dan McDonald.
For comptroller, Ed. W. Wile.
For city attorney, D. E. Hatlestad.
For city engineer, Ole L. Hamery.

Action on the nominations was deferred until the close of business. At 10 o'clock the council adjourned until Tuesday April 16th at 8 p. m.

Pretty Miss Grandison.

She came to us in the full glory of autumn's richest coloring, when "October" was written on every hill and vale in the red and yellow tints of fallen leaves, and the deepened richness of the Indian summer atmosphere bathing all in golden splendor.

Brother Ralph and I stood on the veranda to welcome her as she came up the broad white steps the mellow autumn sunlight dashing back from her golden hair and hiding itself in the dark depths of wondrous brown eyes she became associated in my mind with the rich, dusky beauty, the still glowing splendor of that incomparable month—October; so I always thought of her, and so I think of her to-day.

I took her small gloved hand in mine a moment with a few pleasant words of welcome, then Ralph did the same.

And, ere he released it, which was not quite as soon as she should have done, I noticed an unusual flush mount to his handsome, fair face, and I feared that he was in danger of losing his heart at the outset to our fair governess.

Yes, this rare creature was to be our governess. Not mine nor Ralph's for we were long past our school days, but we had two troublesome young sisters, to take charge of whom Miss Grandison had travelled a long way. Her's was a singular beauty, the like of which I had never seen before. Her complexion, one would think, should be fair to match the bright, dazzling gold of her hair, but it was not; instead, it suited her deep brown eyes and was [illegible] I can only describe as a creamy olive, with a spot of richest crimson is either cheek.

She was tall and graceful, with an air that was half commanding and a look, a something about her, as I have said before, which reminded me of all the deep passion of intensity of October's warmth veiled under her stillest haze.

Such was Flora Grandison when she came to us, and it was not surprizing that Ralph's eyes lingered on her lovely face until he was compelled to turn them away for shame's sake. Time passed very pleasantly. We lived in the country, or rather, just outside of a stirring town, and we could therefore combine the pleasures of both city and country life.

How Miss Grandison enjoyed her out door rambles with the children in the brilliantly tinted autumn woods! Ralph frequently accompanied them much to her annoyance, it seemed to me, who watched with jealous eyes every movement that indicated his growing interest in the charming stranger.

We knew nothing of her save that she was from a southern city, and was thrown upon her own resources for support. But her beauty spoke for itself, and I felt convinced the moment that Ralph first set his eyes upon her, that sooner or later she would break his heart, I wonder why the thought never struck me that she, a poor governess, would be glad to win him for a husband. But it never did.

There was not the least sign of coquetry about her, nor did she seem to care at all for his attentions. She accepted them quietly, smilingly, when she could not evade them, yet I always felt she would rather he did not offer them, I liked her for it, though I couldn't get over the idea that she would be his fate.

One day very late in November, the sun shone radiantly and almost a summer warmth prevaded the atmosphere. Tempted by the beauty of the scene I donned my hat and cloak and went for a stroll in the leafless woods. I had not gone far when the sound of Ralph's voice struck my ear. It was strained and despairing, and he was saying, oh! how earnestly:

"For God's sake, Flora, give me a little hope!"

"Have I not told you there is none?" I heard her answer, almost desperately; "I desire that you never mention this subject again, Mr. Percival.

Not caring to play the eavesdropper, I walked away and joined the children who were playing some distance further on. Miss Grandison and Ralph had not seen me. But my blood was boiling at the thought of Ralph suffering through her. When I saw him again the poor boy looked as white and miserable as any ghost. The next day he left us for an indefinite time pleading some business excuse, but I knew well what had driven him away. I loved him dearly and could hardly bear the loneliness of the hour after he had gone.

At last, exasperated at her calm, queenly loveliness, when my own heart was aching so, I vented my sorrow and displeasure upon Miss Gradison. She was sitting by the window reading, and she just raised her eyes to give me one long, steady look, slightly mingled with surprise, and then dropped them to her book again without a word. I then told her what I had overheard, and repeated angrily that it was her fault that Ralph had gone away.

"I am sorry," she said quietly, "that you heard what you did. No one would ever have known of your brother's disappointment from me. But surely, Miss Percival, you cannot say that I have ever encouraged his unfortunate love either by word or look."

I was forced to acknowledge that she had not.

"But since he did love, you in spite of all, why should you have refused him, Miss Grandison? Is not Ralph young, rich, handsome and good enough for any woman on earth?"

"He is all that, Miss Percival," she replied sadly.

"Then why——"

"I have no love to give," she interrupted hastily; "and even could I love any one, I have not the right."

"Not the right?" I repeated. "Then you are engaged to some other?"

"No," she said quietly, but I saw the crimson in her cheeks begin to deepen. "Because I am already a wife."

"A wife!" I cried in amazemet. "You?"

"Yes, Miss Percival, I!"

Already angry with her before this admission, her words drove me quite beside my power of self control, and my voice was full of bitter scorn. Yet it was no match to the quiet, intense scorn in hers, as she rose to her full queenly height, her dark eyes glittering like stars, and the crimson spots in her cream cheeks glowing like the burning heart of the richest, reddest rose.

In all our acquaintance I had never admired her so much as I did at this moment. But, remembering the wrong she had done my brother, I felt no kindness toward her.

"Pray explain if you can, Miss Grandison," I said in my coldest tone, "why you entered this house under a false character, in which you won my brother's heart only to break it. What have you to say to that?"

"Nothing, except that your brother knows all I have to tell, and I don't feel called upon to disclose my troubles to the whole world. If you deem me unfit for the position I hold in your house, Miss Percival, I will go elsewhere."

"You may," I answered coldly:

I was ashamed of my unkindness, even as I spoke, but not believing her just then to be a designing woman, the calm composure of her manner angered me until I neither spoke nor acted like myself.

"Very well," she said, and my heart smote me at the deathly pallor of her face as she turned to leave the room.

At that instant a servant handed me a letter from Ralph, and I tore it open and read it where I stood. Such a letter—explaining why he had gone away, and declaring that Miss Grandison, whom he pronounced the best and noblest of women, was not to blame for his folly. He ended by begging me to be kind to her and not allow her to leave our home so long as she needed such a position.

Half penitently, I placed the letter in her hand, remarking that Ralph's wishes were law to me, and that I hoped she would forget my words and do what was best for her happiness.

She hesitated a minute or so, with open letter in hand, and I knew that, a great struggle was going on beneath that calm, beautiful exterior.

"It is humiliating," she said at length, with a little quivering smile, "to remain here under the circumstances: but I am poor, Miss Percival, and I must not think too much of my dignity. Besides, I was sure if you had known the truth, you would not have been so unjust."

And so she stayed.

Months after, when I had grown to love and esteem her for the "best and noblest of women," as Ralph had called her, she told her story.

Briefly, she had a large fortune willed to her by an uncle of her husband, whose other heirs through jealcusy and greed, had blasted her life by cruel slanders. In the bitterness of their hatred they had estranged her husband from her, and he had deserted her, believing her to be false.

Her enemies had been successful in all their plots against her, and she had borne prosecutions and insults which, as I listened to their pathetic recital, made me wonder that a woman like her could have endured them and lived.

Abandoned by the husband whom she still loved better than her own life, and thrown friendless upon the world, she had kept her history to herself, simply dropping her married title for the sake of being less exposed to curious questioning.

When, winter came around again we were expecting Ralph, who wrote that he was heart whole once more, and intended to bring a friend to help him enjoy his welcome home.

How handsome Ralph looked as he walked, smiling and happy, into the midst of our family circle, and what a splendid looking man was the stranger who walked close behind him.

As Miss Grandison's dark, beautiful eyes glanced up at them a shriek that I shall never forget rang through the room, and she fell faint into the stranger's arms.

What need to say more. Ralph had constituted himself a modern Don Quixote, and had secretly pledged himself to right the wrong of the woman who had refused him.

He had found Paul Grandison, had told him where his wife was, and what a true, pure woman she had proven herself.

And Paul had come with him to kneel at Flora's feet (as he afterward told me) and crave her pardon.

I think Ralph was almost as happy when Flora turned her beautiful brown eyes upon him and murmured, "God bless you, my noble friend," as he would have been could his own dream of winning her have been fulfilled.

An Appreciated Georgia Girl.

The young girl in Anderson county who, by her own efforts, made two bales of cotton last fall in order to pay for her schooling, is worth her weight in gold. If there was more work and less dress parade about our girls in town and country there would be less complaint of hard times. Working girls are the jewels of the country. Lazy and trifling women, young and old, are drones and positively evils to society.—Augusta Chronicle.

Iron Pig.

Fifty-eight horse shoe nails, twenty-seven pieces of iron, a piece of a horse shoe and a link from a heavy trace chain, an iron bolt, several iron nuts and eighteen pieces of stone were found in the stomach of a hog killed at West Union, Ohio. The honest farmer who sold it at live weight certainly got the worth of his money.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

His First Detective Job.

When I was a lad of fifteen I was office boy for Cavan's private detective agency in Boston, and was just wild, of course, to be sent out on a case. Every time the Captain got a new job I would slide up to him and say; "Cap'n you'd better let me go out on that," and he would answer, with a quizzical grin, "Not this time, Harry. Wait till the next case."

Along in December of that year there was a great rush of business at our office. We had fifteen detectives, all old, experienced hands and they were on the jump night and day. We could not handle the business that was coming in and the Captain was wishing we had some more men. I remember as well as can be sitting in my chair by the door and the Captain calling out in fun from his private office, "I guess we'll have to let you take the next case, Harry."

Hardly had he said the words when the door opened and a raw old countryman entered. He proved to be Jabe Baylis, a selectman of Swansea, near Boston, and he wanted the Captain to send a man down with him to attend to a ghost who was cutting didoes there. The Captain told him he would send a man to Swansea as soon as he had one at his disposal. The old fellow left and I jumped to my feet and finally talked the captain into sending me on the case.

The Captain gave me money and away I went to swansea forthwith. I felt pretty brave for it was Bright daylight then, but there were times when I wished myself well out of the thing. I got to the little town about three o'clock and inquired the way to the haunted house from the station agent. I found it on a hill about half a mile from the town and looked it over with interest and apprehension. It was an old white frame mansion standing in park-like grounds with plenty of outhouses about it. Some countrymen whom I met told me that the ghost was in the habit of standing on top of the broad stone wall that skirted the roadway. There was an outhouse so situated that a person concealed in it could overlook the whole sketch of wall from end to end, and I made up my mind that this was the place for me to get into before the ghost made its appearance. Then I went back to the hotel, took my supper and chatted with the waiters and a few loungers about the ghost. I learned that it first appeared about three weeks before my arrival. A man named McTavish, an ignorant farm hand, was the first person to encounter it. He was coming to town one night, from the grist mill with a sack of meal on his back and paused for a minute in front of the old house to set the bag down on a stump and rest his shoulder. He heard a noise behind him, and turning round saw, standing on a wall, a figure he afterward said was thirteen feet high at least. He did not stop to observe the figure very carefully, though, but ran as hard as he could down the road. Next night a party of men saw the ghost and they also ran. They said the ghost made after them breathing fire and brimstone and acting in a peculiarly weird and unholy manner.

About dusk I stole down to the deserted house and it was dark when I got there. I slid along the wall to the outhouse, crept cautiously in and shut the door again. Hardly had I shut the door when I knew that there was some other presence in that outhouse. I felt sure there was somebody close by my elbow. I was trembling like a leaf but I managed to pull a match from my pocket and strike it. I held it up. It showed me a big white muffled figure not two feet away. Then the match went out.

Was I scared?

Well, now, I should say so. There are some people who laugh at the idea of a man's hair standing on end. They say it is a physical impossibility, but I know better. I could feel my hair rise right up and lift my hat, and my flesh crept. But I had no time to think. I jumped. I had to jump. I shut my eyes and grabbed for the ghost. I was so frightened I seemed to lose consciousness for a moment, but grabbed something and held on. When the first shock passed I felt the ghost tugging and pulling to get away from me. It seem as badly frightened as I was, and its hands were soft and warm.

"Don't hurt me," it said in a terrified girl's voice.

I had no voice to reply with. I was choking but I pulled my captive out on the lawn and looked at it in the moonlight. The sheet that had been muffled about the figure fell to the ground—a pretty girl of fifteen was disclosed. I was in a cold perspiration and shaking as if recovering from a shock of electricity but when I saw that I had caught a real genuine flesh and blood girl and no ghost and that I could lick her with one hand I began to feel better and presently was able to talk.

"Who are you?" I asked.

"Jennie Baylis."

"What? The daughter of Jabe Baylis?"

"Yes sir."

"What are you doing this for?"

The girl began to cry. She said she had not meant any harm. She and her sister had played ghost just to have some fun. Her sister was usually with her but did not come this night as she was too busy. She had heard from her father that a detective was coming from Boston to catch the ghost, but thought he was not due for a day or two, and resolved to make one last appearance and then give up the performance till things calmed down.

"Who are you?" she asked.

"I'm the Boston detective," I said.

"What are you going to do with me?"

"I will have to expose you."

The girl cried again and begged to be released and allowed to go home, but that did not suit me at all. I said she was my prisoner and as such I must deliver her up to the authorities and after a good deal of waiting she suggested that I had better give her up to her own father. I agreed to that and picking up her sheet I held her arm and took her with me to her father's house about a mile distant.

When we got to the farmhouse where Jennie lived it was half-past nine o'clock. Everybody was in bed and the lights were all out, but I boldly knocked at the door. A window opened and a man's voice said:

"Who's there?"

"Me."

"Who's me?"

"The Boston detective."

"You're rather late. Why did you not wait until to-morrow? Better come around and see me in the morning."

"I want to see you now. I have the ghost."

At this the window was closed with a bang and I heard hurried steps on the stairs. The door opened and old Baylis stood in the doorway. He was drapad in a very long and old fashioned white gown and wore a tall steeple shaped night cap. One hand held up a tin candle stick and the other shaded the light. A circle of beard sweeping under his chin from ear to ear made him look very comical. He looked at me in astonishment and when he saw his daughter and the sheet I thought he was going into convulsions.

"You, Jennie?" he asked at length.

"Yes, father," said Jennie very humbly.

Old Baylis sighed and said, "Come in."

He sent for the selectmen of the town immediately. I don't know what was said at their meeting, for I was not admitted to it, but old Baylis gave me a letter to the captain, and packed me off on the midnight train. Next morning I reached the office early and found all the men present, waiting for the captain to detail them. The men grinned at me and passed the time of day pleasantly enough. They all knew where I had been and anticipated a wonderful tale of disaster and defeat, which they were ready to laugh at, although I was a favorite with them, having done many a little piece of extra work for every man there.

"I thought I sent you to Swansea, Harry?" said the captain.

"Yes, sir."

"Made an ass of yourself, I suppose?"

"There's a letter, sir."

While the captain read the letter the men guyed me.

"This is a very nice letter, Harry," said the captain. "Boys, the youngster captured the ghost."

"Did he?" said the men.

"Yes, sir, he did. Boy is a credit to us," and then the captain read the letter of the selectmen out loud. At every sentence I grew a foot.

"Well, now, how did you do it?" several inquired.

I told the story and you can be sure I did not refrain from giving myself plenty of credit. My tale was very highly colored. When it was concluded Long Jim Langdon drawled out:

"Harry, tell the honest truth. Was you frightened when that match went out?"

"Naw! Course not," said I. And everybody chorused:

"Oh, no."

Puss Is All Right.

The cat has ever been regarded as a mysterous creature and has of a consequence been shunned, as amateur swimmers avoid deep holes, by the youth of our land in their literary efforts. The dog and the horse are notoriously what are termed "old stand bys" as subjects for composition, but it is noteworthy that the cat, though even more familiar to all than either of the aforementioned animals, is neglected in all Friday afternoon literature. The kitten is much beloved by reason of its frivolous and gay nature. Its propensity to amuse itself with any light object or, in default of other movables, its own fleeting tail endears it to all young persons, but there is an unnatural gravity and air of absorption in deep philosophical matters about the mature cat which is forbidding, not to say awe insparing. It may be that its uncanny nature has caused it to be associated with witches. Certainly its habit of being out at all hours of the night gives color to the suspicion that it is a baleful beast. A cat acts as if it knew that the disclosure of its secrets would result in death to all its kind at the hands of an enlarged humanity. Now there is something frank and open hearted about a dog. He may bite an enemy, but a cat will scratch his dearest friend. A dog cannot keep a secret. A cat never tells one.—Chicago Mail.

A Man Trap in 'Frisco.

A three story building on Broadway close to the water front, which has been occupied by L. David as a seaman's outfitting store, was recently vacated. Workmen are now cleaning and they have discovered a trap for decoying unwary seamen. Behind the nefarious traffic. On the side of one room a door opens upon a long passage in the other room is a closet which, from the exterior, resembles a cupboard. The floor of the closet is a trap door, operated by a spring. Below the door is a cellar, which adjoins the old water front line, affording ample facilities for taking men off in a boat after they had been dropped through the trap. The place is in every way well adapted for the purpose of shanghaing men, as any one dropped through the trap would have no chance at all to get away.—San Francisco Chronicle.

"What effect has kissing on the lips?" asks a correspondent of the Lowell Citizen. Same effect that candy has on children. Makes 'em want more.—Burlington Free Press.

A Famous Battle Ground.

On the banks of the Tippecanoe, a small stream which enters the Wabash River in Indiana, was fought the terrific battle of Tipppecanoe.

In this great struggle of frontier times, the allied western Indians under the chieftainship of Elkswarawa, the "Prophet" were defeated in November, 1811, by the Americans under the command of Gen. Wm. H. Harrison.

It was a desperate, hard fought battle, and much depended upon the result.

Had the Indians been successful, all barriers of defence for the early settlers would have been overthrown and the deadly tomahawk would have been active in the rapid extermination of the remaining pioneers. On the other hand the fortunate termination of the contest can put an end to further attempts at open warfare by the Indians. The rich territory, so long overrun by hostile savages, was thrown open for settlement, which, rapidly occurred as soon as the news of the great victory became widespread.

Naturally great praise was rendered to the success and intrepid bravery of Gen. Harrison and he was honored in many ways. He afterwards served as Commander of the Army of the Northwest, and when Indiana was admitted to statehood, he was selected to represent the state in the United States senate. In 1840 he was elected President and his unfortunate demise occurred shortly after being inaugurated.

The forty-second anniversary of the Battle of Tippecanoe found the gallant grand-son of "Old Tip" leading his forces to a great political victory which resulted in the selection of Gen. Ben. Harrison as President of the United States.

The Harrisons have been a hardy race of men, sprung from old log cabin stock, which is a sufficient guarantee of its genuineness wherever found. Realizing the truth of this, great effort has been made to re-discover some of the secrets contained in the old log cabin stock of useful articles, and as the result, the famous Old Log Cabin Sarsaparilla, universally regarded as the best Spring tonic and blood cleanser has been found. Not satisfied with the world wide esteem which is held for Warner's Safe Cure, the only cure for kidney diseases, the proprietor is willing to do all that is possible to establish Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla as foremost among household articles on account of its purity and effectiveness.

After all, each individual has, at all times, the great battle of life or death to fight, and for security attention must necessarily be given to the best weapons which science can offer humanity in the great contest.

For two years I had rheumatism so bad that it disabled me for work and confined me to my bed for a whole year, during which time I could not even raise my hands to my head, and for 3 months could not move myself in bed, was reduced in flesh from 192 to 86 lbs. Was treated by best physicians, only to grow worse. Finally I took Swift's Specific, and soon began to improve. After a while was at my work, and for the past five months have been as well as I ever was—all from the effects of Swift's Specific.

THE FIRST FOLIO.

My uncle was rich. My cousins, though neither saints nor perhaps even models of propriety, were none of them bad fellows. One of them was in the foreign office, another was making his way slowly at the bar, and a third was, like myself, a soldier. The others possessed small private means, sufficient to enable them to live decently, and one of them at least increased his income considerably by whist at his club and by pigeon shooting. I had gone to an army crammer's when only a lad, and after leaving Sandhurst went with my regiment to India, so that my uncle had seen very little of me, which ultimately proved a fortunate circumstance. The first communication which I had with my uncle was made by me with considerable diffidence, and was not of a kind to recommend me to him. I had lost two charges, and not possessing the means to replace them, I wrote to my uncle explaining the matter and asking him for a loan. In reply he sent me a check for the sum required. I was very grateful and economizing till I had saved the money lent me, I repaid it to him. Soon afterward I returned with my regiment to England, and on my arrival in London I had an invitation from my uncle asking me to dine with him. I found him very taciturn and apparently unsociable. During dinner I noticed that he frequently looked at me furtively, as though he found in my appearance some cause for surprise. When we reached the desert, however, the interest that he had been manifesting in me was explained, for he said, almost as if he were soliloquizing.

"You were the last of my nephews to borrow of me, and you are the first who has ever repaid a loan."

After delivering this verdict, which appeared to give his mind relief, my uncle became quite talkative, and amused me very much by relating the various causes which had led to his disinheriting his different heirs. While he spoke, I could tell by his indignant snorts, and by the fire in his eyes, that he must be a terribly irascible old fellow. The barrister, who was a conveyancer and equity draughtsman, had proposed that he should examine all the title deeds of the real property, which he had learned he was some day to inherit, and, when he had finished his investigation, had hinted that a fee of 100 guineas would be acceptable. This sum had been handed to him, and his name forthwith struck out of the will. The way in which my uncle told this story was very comical. My cousin, who was the crack shot, had bored him, it seemed, one night by telling of the coming pigeon shooting matches in which he was engaged, and had afterward won from him £25 at whist. What a fool the fellow must have been! Still more foolish, if possible, had been that cousin who, on seeing my uncle's splendid collection of rare books and first editions, had said that if they were his he would soon turn them into cash. Finally he told me that his niece was now his heiress, and I could see that he was not altogether satisfied with this arrangement. After dinner my uncle offered to show me his library, and I willingly assented. Apart from my desire to gratify my host, I had a genuine interest in rare books, and was eager to see his valuable collection of which I had often heard but had been too young to appreciate when, as a boy, I had last been in his house. My admiration on beholding his treasures was not feigned, and my uncle was sharp enough to understand that. We spent the remainder of the evening in the library, and so well did we get on together that before I left the house my uncle proposed that I should resign my commission and become his secretary. I did not understand the full significance of this proposal; I knew that I was not asked to give up my profession without a better equivalent than a private secretaryship being in store for me. I was the only one of his nephews whom he had never appointed his heir. On the other hand, what guarantee had I that I should not meet the same fate as my cousins, or rather a worse, seeing that I might be cast adrift on the world without money or means of earning a livelihood. Observing my hesitation, my uncle said:

"Think over the matter until tomorrow, and give me your answer then."

This I agreed to do and then I bade him good night. I found myself face to face with a very puzzling dilemma. But the stake I might win was a big one, so I decided to run the risk. The result was that a week later I was installed in my uncle's house as his secretary, and was also in the possesion of the comforting knowledge that his will had been altered in my favor. I did feel many qualms, both at heart and conscience, on account of my pretty cousin, whom I had supplanted, but it was not for me to interfere with my uncle's right to bequeath his property as he choose.

My uncle was very well read, and was a man of considerable refinement and culture. He was a Shakespearian scholar of great learning; and his collection of books pertaining to the greatest Elizabethan dramas was most extensive.

The most valuable or at least the most highly prized book in his collection was a "first folio," for which if I remember rightly, he had given £750, though he would not have parted with it for ten times that sum. The rare book was not merely as a curiosity by its owner, as he was able to put it in critical use; its state of preservation was so perfect as to render it a unique copy. I was considerably surprised one day when he told me that he had promised to lend it for a short time to a distinguished member of parliament, whom he had almost won over to his own views regarding the authorship of the plays. I was commissioned to convey the precious book to its destination, and my uncle gratified me by saying that he could trust it for that purpose in the hands of no one else. He was going out to dine that night, and as I saw him into the carriage the last thing he said to me was that, as the distance which I should have to go was not great, he would prefer that I should walk instead of taking a cab, being I suppose, of the opinion that the book would run a greater risk of being injured or lost if I used a conveyance. I promised, therefore, to carry it. An hour later, when I left the house with the valuable book in my hand, I found myself in the midst of the densest London fog I had ever experienced. Not only was it suffocating and blinding, but as it drifted along and met my face the heavy vapor seemed almost tangible. To add to the discomfort caused by the fog the night was bitterly cold and the pavement was slippery. I had not gone many steps when I began to deliberate whether I ought not to return, but as I knew that my uncle's friend was staying at home this evening in order to receive the book, I thought it better that he should not be disappointed. I had proceeded on my way not more than a few hundred yards when, on turning a corner, I ran against some one who was coming in the opposite direction. The collision was a sharp one, and we both slipped and fell. With mutual apologies we scrambled to our feet, and the stranger politely lifted the copy of Shakespeare which had fallen from my hand and returned it to me. We were standing right under a lamp, and I could see, though indistinctly, the manner of man it was with whom I had come in contact. He was a middle aged, short, spare and dressed shabby genteelly in black, apparently a second rate solicitor's or barrister's clerk, or perhaps a copy-ist for a law stationer. After expressing a hope that I was not hurt he moved away, and I remained standing, somewhat dazed by my tumble. As I still had about half a mile to go I resolved to run the risk of no more accidents, so I turned and began to retrace my steps. In a few minutes I was again within my uncle's house. I went at once to the library in order to restore the "First Folio" to its place.

How warm and comfortable the room seemed after the miserable weather to which I had been exposed. The fire was blazing brightly, and I warmed my cold hands. As soon as a lamp was brought in I approached a table; where I had laid the "Shakespear," as I was anxious to know if it had received any slight damage through falling. I lifted the book, and suddenly felt faint, while the room seemed to spin around me. The book I held in my hand was not the "First Folio," but a law book of the same size and appearance! Ere I opened it I saw by the printing on the back of the binding that it was "Robins on Contracts!" The truth flashed on me instantaneously. That miserable lawyer's clerk in the darkness and fog had inadvertantly handed me this wretched book he was carrying and had taken away the Shakespeare" in its stead. I was convinced that never again would I behold the "First Folio." It is true that my uncle's name and address were written on a slip of paper which was gummed to the cover, but from the momentary glimpse I had of this man I felt sure he would not return it. The temptation by which he found himself assailed would be too great for him to resist, when he learnt that he had in his possesion a book which, if sold, would procure him a comfortable annuity for the remainder of his life. He would know some wealthy collector, who, he would imagine, could afford to purchase another. Though his conduct would be morally as culpable as theft, I knew that many a man, who was incapable of deliberately stealing, would be unable to withstand the temptation of appropriating that which came into his possession unwittingly, and, in a manner, might seem to have been thrust upon him, especially if he were in needy circumstances, as the man whom I had encountered in the fog undoubtedly was. There would be no use in advertising the loss, as my uncle's name would be seen, and the book restored if it had fallen into the hands of an honest person. I had a strong conviction, however, that the book would never be brought back. I did not doubt for a moment the consequences which my carelessness would entail upon myself. Not only would I lose my fortune but I would be banished from my uncle's house, and be thrown upon the world without means and without the ability to earn my living. I knew that he had disinherited my cousins for reasons which would seem only trivial to him when compared to the enormity of my offense. This would be more intelligible to the reader if I could explain the inordinate value which he placed upon the book, and the veneration in which he held it, or could describe his irascible, crochety, temperament or the contempt in which he held such remissness as that of which I had been guilty. I knew it would be useless to urge that as he had made me resign my profession he ought in justice to give me an allowance, as he would think. I was only being justly punished in being consigned to penury.

When he returned that night I was thankful that he made no reference to the book. I did not dare look him in the face. I am aware that if I had acted rightly I should have made a confession to him of my faults, and that my behavior will be pronounced by some to have been cowardly. But "cowardice" is a very ugly word to use in reference to one who had just ceased to be a soldier, and I wish, therefore, it to be known that it was in action that I had lost the two charges of which I have made mention, and that on that occasion my name appeared in the dispatches. But I would rather have faced a battery, and have ten charges shot under me, with the loss of a limb to boot, than I would have told my uncle that I had in the fog exchanged his "First Folio" for "Robbins on Contracts." Discovery could not long be delayed, as the book was only to have been lent for three days. I was in constant dread lest my uncle should receive some communication from his friend and thus learn that the "Shakespere" had never reached him.

It was the fourth day after my mishap that my uncle said to me in a highly dissatisfied tone:

"I can't understand what A. means by keeping my "First Folio" so long. I told him distinctly that I could not spare it for more than three days. I trust he has taken good care of it; but I heartily wish now that I had never lent it at all. I wish you to go and fetch it. Hunt him up wherever he may be, and don't return without it. I am going out for a few hours and shall expect to see it when I come back."

As soon as my uncle left the house I resolved, that ere he returned, I should have taken my departure for good. I knew it was useless to expect forgiveness, and frankly, I had not the courage to face his anger. So I determined to write and inform him of his loss and request a small sum sufficient to allow me to emigrate. I was arranging my plans when a servant came to tell me that a man had called respecting a book which I wished my uncle to see. My uncle was well known as a collector, and thinking this might be a messenger from some dealer, I said that I would see the man. On entering the room where he was, I saw a tall, fair young man of about twenty-seven. His clothes were somewhat worn, and he had a delicate expression. He held in his hand a brown paper parcel.

"I have a book here," he said, which I should like Mr. Morgan to see, as he has been mentioned to me as a party who might be willing to buy it."

Having said this, he took from the brown paper my uncle's "First Folio" and placed it in my trembling hands.

"Thank heaven!" I exclaimed in an excited tone, while the young man looked at me in surprise.

This is Mr. Morgan's own copy," I continued: "it was lost three days ago, and I was afraid it had been stolen. When you spoke of selling it, you wished, of course, to see whether I would identify it. I do, and so will Morgan. But you shall have your reward; stay till I return."

And off I went with the "Shakespeare," nor was I content till I had locked it in the cabinet, where it was usually kept. I then went to get some money and returned to give it to the man. To my astonishment I found he was gone, and a servant told me that he had left the house very hurriedly. He certainly did not appear to be an individual who would be above accepting a reward. That, however, was a trivial matter, and gave me little concern in the midst of my intense elation.

"As soon as my uncle came I put the "First Folio" into his hands. The time had not yet come when I thought it proper that he should learn the truth. I noticed that my uncle was examining the book very carefully, fearful, I supposed, lest it had received any injury. At last he looked at me with a cunning expression, and said in a low tone:

"Do you know this isn't my copy?"

"Not yours?" I exclaimed in surprise and alarm.

"No," replied my uncle, "It is not the one I bought, and is a still more perfect copy. The title page in my 'Shakespeare' was torn in one corner; in this it is absolutely without a flaw. The first pages of 'Hamlet' were 'foxed' in my copy, but here they are as clean as when they were printed. I know what has happened," continued my uncle with another cunning glance toward me, "Ah——and his friends have been comparing my 'Shakespeare' with some others and my name has become detached, so they have been mixed. The man who has got mine is probably none the wiser, and will be just as well satisfied with it as with this, and I, of course, won't complain."

Now, although the reader may have formed a contrary opinion, my uncle when in the city was famed for uprightness and for the probity of all his dealings. It was only as a collector, and when dealing in scarce books, that he sometimes displayed a laxity of honor which distressed me. What had occurred was clear to me. The book which was now in my uncle's possession had been stolen, and not the actual theif, but a resetter, or messenger had come to dispose of it. Concluding from my words that the book had been stolen from my uncle, and under the belief that I had gone for a policeman, the fellow had made his escape.

I am sorry to relate that my uncle's interest in this fresh copy of the "First Folio," coupled with his devotion to the Shakespearan question, proved injurious to his health, and several weeks later he was seized with a stroke of apoplexy, which proved fatal. I inherited all his property, including his valuable collection of rare books. From the time when I first conjectured the truth regarding the stolen book I resolved that ultimately it would be restored to its owner. I am preserving it carefully, and I make this opportunity of stating that it will be delivered to any one who identifies it and is able to prove his claim; or, if he prefers it, I shall have the book valued by Mr. Quaritch and purchase it at his estimate.

There is another act of restitution which remains for me to do. I have said that I was distressed by the thought of having supplanted my fair cousin in my uncle's will; but she has at least consented to accept that reparation which will give me the greatest satisfaction to bestow. So it is probable that soon people will once more be making free of my name; and my friends will again find occasion to say that my luck is far beyond my deserts.—J. Crawford Scott in Belgravia.

THE FARM.

Short Notes.

During the past ten years, 6,480,745 tons of sugar beet for manufacture of sugar have been grown in Germany, from which have been extracted 647,858 tons of sugar.

The whole world don't eat half as much milk, cream, butter, cheese and buttermilk as it ought to; and a cow can be kept in good working condition on half the land for half the money she was twenty years ago, besides, we are to see dairy products produced more cheaply and millions more of people reveling in the greater consumption of dairy products, ere long.—Hoard's Dairyman.

John Boyd says that refrigeration prevents the formation of acidity in the cream, especially if submerged; while stirring merely interrupts and retards, but does not prevent acidity. In fact the bad effects of stirring are so apparent that it astonishes him to hear me advocate the practice who claim to be not only practical, observant workers, but who lay claims to be in the first rank.

It takes very little arithmetic, says Major Alvord, to prove that 200lbs. extra weight of cow kept alive for five years, while returning no profit during this, will actually cost as much as the fatted carcass of the animal is likely th bring in the end. Unnecessary size or weight in a milch cow is a source of constant loss to her owner. The profit of the cow should come, all of it, while she is productive in the dairy.

Two weeks before the sow is due to farrow she should be separated from others that she may be keeping company with, and placed in an apartment or lot to herself, where she may be absolutely free from any molestation whatever by other stock. She should be provided with warm and dry quarters, and opportunity given her to take exercise daily. Exercise and proper feeding is the key note to success.

Mr. Kibby, of Brookfield, Vt., says that he keeps his Summer butter by putting it into cloth bags, about the sise of the tub he wishes to fill, and keeping it submerged in a tank of strong brine. He takes it up and packs it in clean tubs or boxes at any time the market is good, and he thinks it comes out as fresh as newly-made butter. At any rate he gets better peices than he could in Summer and the butter gives good satisfaction.—New England Farmer.

On a farm where milk or butter is produced in winter the outlay for feed and care is much the largest item of the year's expenses. The question of what feed to buy, and in what proportion it shyuld be used with the fodder he has on hand, is a question of prime importance to such a farmer. If he fails to secure the feed which will give the best returns in dairy products, in the condition of the stock and the value of his manure pile, some of his money and labor wasted.

It sometimes seems like a waste to dispose of the inferior animals at the small price they will sell for, but better far to destroy them outright and without return than to keep them when they do not pay their way, and are only a tax on the owner. With every animal on the farm a good one of its kind, and if cared for and fed in conformity with the best practices of the day, there is no trouble about the profits. Young farmer, if you are in debt and desire to make the farm pay, see to it that no inferior animal is fed at your expense. Weed them out.—Maine Farmer.

Early Spring Planting.

The ground is cold early in the season, and a much lighter covering is needed than seeds will bear later, after the sun has warmed the ground to greater depth. The rotting of seed is more apt to be due to deep covering than to any other cause. Some of the earliest small seeds that are very hardy, as onions, carrots and parsnips, may be planted in ground prepared the previous Fall, dropped in lines made on the surface, and covered by the action of the frost and Spring rains. The great point is to get the rows straight and at uniform distances. Then if the seed is sown thickly enough it may be thinned out sufficiently after the plants come up.

About Testing Seeds.

The following, from the pen of John M. Stahl, of Illinois, is given as a further reply to a recent inquiry on the subject: Test all seeds. To test seed is easy and inexpensive. If you have hotbed room, you need no further reflection. But the test may as well be made in a box of earth kept properly moistened and in a room—the kitchen preferred; not too near the stove during the day, but near it at night. Test your seed corn—taking a grain from each of fifty or one hundred ears picked up at random. Select one hundred grains of oats from as many different places in the bins. Test your grass and clover seeds, your vegetable seeds, etc. A succession of tests may be made in the same box, testing first those that must be used first. Keep a careful record of the number of seeds of each planted, that you may determine accurately the per cent. of germination. By thus testing we may detect in time to avoid serious loss, seed that lacks vitality—some of which will produce no plants and some weakly plants; impure seed—always inferior to what we should use, and perhaps avoid growing a variety we did not want or a noxious weed. We certainly will gain many times the cost and trouble.

Poor People's Chances.

Some years ago a city missionary was crossing one of the parks in New York on the Sabbath day and said to a lad, "What are you doing here, breaking the Lord's day? You ought to be at Church and worshipping God instead of breaking the Sabbath in this way." The poor lad in his rags looked up at the city missionary and said: "Oh, sir, it's very easy for you to talk that way, but God knows that we poor chaps ain't got no chance."

The sentiment seems to be growing that in the United States the time has arrived when "the poor chaps don't have no chance."

There is some truth in it. The poor are not shut out from making a livelihood, but the gulf between riches and poverty continually grows more difficult to cross. As the country becomes densely populated keen business competition decreases the chances for accumulating wealth by ordinary buisness methods.

But the same condition vastly improve the chances for great success to those who can strike out in the new paths, can furnish something to the world that others cannot.

True merit in commodity or ability, will win easily and with grand results in this country, if the masses can be induced to recognize it. This recognition can only be accomplished by what are sometimes sneeringly alluded to as advertising methods.

What a marvelous success has attended the thorough introduction to the world of the merits of that wonderful remedy for kidney disease—Warner's Safe Cure. Hon. H. H. Warner first came to know of its curative power by being restored to health from what the doctors pronounced a fatal kidney trouble. He concluded the world ought to know of it and in the ten years since he began its manufacture he has spent millions of dollars in advertising the Safe Cure.

His methods have been ingenious—sometimes, perhaps, open to criticism, but they had a purpose, which has been accomplished.

But mark! he never would have secured a four fold return of the vast sums thus expended if the real merit of the remedy had not been fully proven to the millions of people reached by his advertisements.

Ten years of increasing success of Warner's Safe Cure is due, first, to intelligent and pleasing advertising, by which the people were made acquainted with the remedy. Second, to the true worth of the remedy, proved by actual experience, showing it to be the only specific for kidney disease, and all diseases growing out of kidney derangements.

Mr. Warner has something the people want, tells them so, then proves it to their satisfaction—success follows as a matter of course.

Sponging a Tiger.

When Pezon, the lion tamer, was at Moscow with his menagerie, he had occasion to employ a Cossack to clean out the cages of the wild beasts. The Cossack did not understand a word of French, and the terms of the contract were settled in dumb show. By way of instructing him in his new duties, Pezon went through a sort of pantomime with the broom, sponge and water bucket. The moujik watched him closely and appeared fully to understand the details of the lesson given. Next morning armed with a broom a bucket and a sponge, he opened the first cage he came to and quietly stepped in, as he had seen his master step on the previous day into two cages of harmless brutes, but this one happened to be a splendid but untamed tiger, that lay stretched on the floor fast asleep. At the noise made by opening and closing the door the creature raised its head and turned its green eyes full on the man, who, all unconscious of his danger, stood in the corner dipping his big sponge into the bucket. At that moment Pezon came out of his caravan and was struck dumb by the terrible sight that met his gaze. What could he do to warn the man of his danger? A sound, a movement on his part might enrage the great beast and hasten its attack on the defenseless Cossack. So Pezon stood awaiting developments, ready to rush to the scene when the crisis came. The moujik, sponge in hand, coolly approached the tiger and made ready to rub him down with the stolidity of a military bootblack polishing his captain's boots. The sudden application of cold water to his hide evidently produced a very agreeable effect on the tiger, for it began to purr, stretched out its back and complacently offered every part of its body to the vigorous treatment of the moujik.

All the while Pezon stood there with his eyes wide open and as if nailed to the spot. When he had finished his job the Cossack left the cage as quietly as he had entered it, and it required the most energetic and expressive gestures on the part of the lion tamer to prevent his repeating the experiment on a second beast.—London Times.

The Rarity of a Perfect Foot.

In a certain studio in New York the place of honor is occupied by a series of studies in marble of a beautiful foot. It is taken in every position that a foot could be supposed to occupy—in repose, as it would appear walking' running, balanced on the toes. Once the sculptor saw a human foot, a woman's foot, that was fit to take a cast from. He never expected to get another model of any use to him, and he perpetuated that in a variety of attitudes.

Iron cross-ties have proved a failure on the Pennsylvania Railroad, where they have been tried for several months, and white oak ties are being substituted. The wooden tie yields sufficiently to the motion of the train to make the riding easy and comfortable, while the iron fails to give on the roadbed of broken stone, and the riding hard and unpleasant to the passengers, as well as wearing on the locomotive and rolling-stock. More frequent repairs to the roadbed were found necessary with the iron ties, too. In England and France, where iron is much cheaper than here and wood much dearer, ties of the latter are used in preference.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Probable Policy of Secretary Windom in the Matter of Further Bond Purchases.

Vague Talk of the Government Reviving the Notion of an International Conference.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—There are intimations ahead that this administration may soon seek to revive the old notion of an international conference to agree upon a general restoration of the coinage of silver and its use as money in connection with gold. There have been two such conferences since the beginning of the silver discussion in the United States, that of 1878, which met upon the invitation of this country alone, and that of 1881, held upon the joint invitation of France and the United States. Nothing came of either but voluminous reports. Since the last of these conferences the convention of the Latin union in 1885 has given a slight check to the threatened complete extinction of silver coinage in Western Europe. That is to say, the union, threatened with destruction, has been maintained, though with closely limited power of new coinage. The Cleveland administration did nothing towards the settlement of the international silver question except to send Manton Marble abroad to observe and report upon the proceedings of the Latin union. His admirable report is the freshest literature on the subject. The rumored movement for a conference on the part of the United States is still nebulous, but there is excellent reason to believe that it will take definite form in due season. The executive is certainly impowered to take the preliminary step towards such a conference during the recess of congress. If suitable encouragement were received from the nations of Europe, authority to appoint delegates might be asked of congress in the annual message next December, and the conference might be held some time during the winter. If an international conference had no other result, it might do good by demonstrating anew the impossibility of bringing other nations to our point of a bimetallic coinage.

There has been some newspaper discussion of the domestic policy of the new administration in relation to silver, as though it were in any way unsettled or subject to change. A definite and uniform policy has been pursued by the treasury for ten years past, through four different administrations, and the rule of two different political parties. It is unlikely that any secretary of the treasury would change it without good reason. It is especially unlikely that a change would be made by Mr. Windom, who approved the uniform policy of the department by his course when at the head eight years ago. The law gives the secretary discretion to coin from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 of silver per month. For ten years the coinage has been kept as near the minimum as possible. There will be no change in the policy of the department in this respect. There is certainly no reason for a change in the condition of the treasury balances. To-day's statement shows $10,000,000 silver lying idle in the treasury vaults besides that which is represented in the circulation by silver certificates.

A more urgent question awaiting the decisive action of the secretary is that of the policy to be adopted in relation to the rapidly accumulating surplus and the purchase of bonds. The treasury has bought no bonds since the 4th of March. The daily offerings are small and all at prices above the maximum fixed by the secretary. This is 108 for 4½ per cents. The treasury is buying no 4 per cents, though pressure is brought upon the secretary to induce him to do so. There is pretty clear evidence of a concerted purpose on the part of holders of bonds to keep the price a fraction above the department's maximum. It is not believed that this obstacle to purchases would be overcome by inviting offerings of 4s instead of 4½s. To-day's offerings were a little more than $2,000,000 of 4½s at 108½ and above. The opinion prevails at the treasury that some new steps or different policy will have to be adopted to stimulate offerings of bonds, unless the entire plan of reducing the surplus in this way is to be abandoned. In the meantime, the cash balance in the treasury is creeping up. At the close of business to-day it was something over $54,000,000.

F. A. CARLE.

The Bond Buyers.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—Secretary Windom to-day rejected large offerings of 4½ per cent bonds at 108⅜, 108¼ and 108½. This action is regarded at the treasury department as indicating his purpose of not paying over 108 for these bonds, for the present at least. When asked why he had not accepted any of to-day's offers the secretary replied "The rates were too high," and declined to say anything more on the subject. A prominent official of the department said that it was strange that there were so few offerings of 4 per cents, as there was no good reason for supposing the secretary would not buy bonds of that loan, provided they are offered at reasonable rates. The last offer of 4 per cents was at 129¼. It was rejected, the official said, because it was above the prevailing market rates, and not necessarily because the secretary does not wish to apply any of the surplus to the payment of that particular loan, as has been conjectured. It is believed that Secretary Windom will outline his policy in this matter more definitely in a few days. He has been busy with so many other matters up to this time that he has not been able to give it the consideration he proposes.

Indian Affairs.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram April 4.—The senate committee on Indian affairs has about decided on the investigation tours to be taken by the sub-committees during the present vacation. One portion of the committee, headed by Mr. Dawes, will go to Alaska to investigate the condition of the Alaskans with respect to the necessities of education. It will also look into the treatment of the island Alaskans by the Alaska commercial company and its agents. The rumors of outrages which over-zealous missionaries have brought back here and which Gov. Swineford has so energetically denied, lead the senate committee to believe that steps may be taken at least to benefit and improve the condition of the natives on St. Paul's and St. George's islands. Another sub-committee, consisting of Senators Platt and Morgan, will visit Indian territory and investigate the condition of the Indians occupying lands therein outside the five civilized tribes. No visits will be made to the Northwest. The Chippewas of Minnesota will this year be left to the tender mercies of the commission to be appointed under the Nelson bill. The unfinished investigation, started two years ago by a subcommittee into affairs at will be allowed to drop. Senator Morgan has been trying for two years to get a report fixed up on this matter, but has finally given it up. It was intended that witnesses should be brought down here to finish up the investigation, but that has also been given up. Inspector Armstrong, of the Indian service, has gone to Montana, where he will enter into a general examination of the condition of the agencies in that section. The agencies have not been investigated for some time, and, as several of the agents seem likely to retire at an early day, it was thought best to give them a general looking over. It is fully expected that Agent Briscoe will be removed early in the coming week and a new agent for the Crows appointed. Secretary Nobles said to-day that he would probably have the names of the Sioux commission ready to announce to-morrow or Saturday. Warner of Missouri, Fuller of Iowa and Father Willard are variously spoken of to-night as probable members of the commission. The secretary has not as yet given a moment's thought to the Chippewa commission for Northern Minnesota, and it will probably be some weeks before the matter is taken up.

WHITE EARTH AGENCY

Pensions.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—Assistant Secretary Bussey has rendered a decision upon the application of John P. Davis for a dependent father's pension on account of the death of his son, Samuel P. Davis, formerly of Company G, 100th Ohio volunteers. In 1863 the soldier was detailed as regimental hospital nurse, and while on duty at Crab Orchard, Ky., one night, feeling ill, he took a swallow of tincture of aconite, mistaking it for brandy—a bottle of which was on the same table—from the effects of which he nearly died at the time; and never afterward recovered. He died from disease of the lungs and all the vital organs, produced by poison. The former decision, which held that the soldier's death was not the result of any disability incurred in the line of duty, but the result of his own indiscretion, is reversed and the application is allowed. The former rejection of the applications of William L. Warnick, late private Company F, 1st Pennsylvania light artillery, and John Derenzy, late of Company L, 12th Illinois volunteers, is also reversed and the claims allowed.

The Consulships.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, April 4.—The New York Times pursues Mr. Blaine with a deadly malice. Its Washington correspondent announces this morning with solemn seriousness that Mr. Blaine is anxious to see personally the gentlemen who have filed applications for places in the consular and diplomatic service, and that he has appointed next Tuesday to receive them. It is a new application of the old day application joke. Ex-Senator Riddleberger of Virginia is here and wants the Dublin consulship. He made the mistake of applying to the president in person for it, and his mistake pointed a moral. He was courteously but firmly referred to the state department. The president has laid down the rule for consular appointments that they must be considered first and recommended by members of the cabinet, whom he will hold responsible for the character and fitness of appointees in the absence of members of congress. Dakota has three candidates for consulates who are likely to receive some consideration at the state department in a day or two. T. F. Canniff of Watertown wants to go to Horgen, Switzerland; Sam T. Clover of Sioux Falls to Sheffield and H. Ray Myers of Huron to Birmingham.

Ordway and Allen.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, April 4.—Ex-Gov. Ordway intended to start for Bismarck to-day, but was detained by the illness of a member of his family. He will start Saturday without fail. Ordway says he is going to take charge of the operations for the organization of the new State of North Dakota and see it safely through the constitutional convention before he begins his campaign for the senatorship. He is full of cheerful confidence as to the territory's future and his own. Gen. Harrison Allen of Fargo, who has seen a good deal of Ordway since he has been here, follows him West one day later, leaving Washington Sunday. Dakota people here believe that Ordway and Allen have made a combination to capture the North Dakota senatorship, and state that this combination may be the means of a powerful syndicate to be formed later for the control of the election of the officers of the territory generally; what "Cal" might call a band wagon.

Minnesota Iron Lands.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, April 4.—Secretary Noble has affirmed the decision of the commissioner of the general land office in the land cases of Svend Oleson, E. F. Krelwitz and Fred M. Krelwitz against Charles Fiedler, James Wegner and Frank Lakewitz and the Minnesota Iron company. The lands involved are iron lands on the Vermillion range. E. F. Krelwitz and an agent of the company hired the three last named men to enter these lands for the company, paying them $125 apiece. The improvements were made, and at the end of six months final proof was made and the entries transferred to the company. Krelwitz fell out with the company, and got a relative and Oleson to contest the entries. As a result the entries were canceled. The company took an appeal to the secretary, who to-day decided that the company had no standing in this case, and that the entries should be canceled.

Some Minor Offices.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—James A. Vose of Maine, who for fourteen years prior to the incoming of the last administration was appointment clerk of the postoffice department, has been reappointed to his old position. C. F. Clarkson, Jr., of Iowa, has been appointed private secretary to the first assistant postmaster general. Hamilton Reeves, Jr., of New York has been appointed assistant chief clerk of the pension bureau. The attorney general has appointed Herbert Hess of Indiana to be law clerk of the department of justice, vice N. T. N. Robinson, resigned, and O. P. M. Hubbard of the same state to be stenographer and confidential secretary, vice Miss Lydia M. Bull, resigned. J. G. Meem, chief of the computing division of the treasury architect's office, has resigned, and F. W. Pease of Massachusetts has been selected for the position. Mr. Pease was formerly in the office, but was dismissed by the last administration.

Colonizing Washingtonians.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—A movement was put on foot recently to start a township in the Oklahoma country to be peopled with Washingtonians. Assurance is now had that 100 ex-Union soldiers will join the movement, and applications have come in so rapidly from department clerks that it has been found necessary to limit the membership in the colony. The advance guard will start on the 20th on a special train to be made up by the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and filled with delegations from Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and other cities.

Hasn't Bayard to Deal With Now.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The secretary of state has been informed by the United States charge ad interim at St. Petersburg that due action has been taken at the request of this government for the liberation of Herman Kempenski, the American citizen arrested on Dec. 24 last in Poland, on a charge of having evaded military duty in Russia, of which country he was a native. There are features in this case that make it probable that a favorable answer may soon be returned by the Russian government.

Maj. Lydecker's Case.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The trend of opinion at the war department is that the court martial has found Maj. Lydecker guilty of neglect of duty, but that the sentence does not amount to a dismissal. A reprimand is the least that could be given, and it is thought that the sentence will lie between the two—something like a suspension from rank and duty.

The Force Reduced.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The reduction of force at the goverment printing office, which always follows an adjournment of congress, took place yesterday, when about fifty employes were discharged. The discharges caused great commotion in the office, as is usual. There are to be a few more discharges from time to time until the number of employes corresponds with the amount of work.

Fourth-Class Postmasters.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, April 4.—Fourth-class postmasters were appointed today as follows: Dakota—Mrs. M. A. Batchelder, Grand View, Douglas county. Iowa—Elias Cook, Wever, Lee county.

Desperate Criminals Escape.

BILLINGS, Mont., Special Telegram, April 4.—Joseph Golden and George Knight, two of the most desperate of the prisoners, while the jailer was at supper, effected their escape from jail by sawing a hole through the roof over the women's cells. Had the turnkey been five minutes later a wholesale delivery would have resulted. When last seen they had taken refuge under a culvert under the railroad about a quarter of a mile east of town. Sheriff Spendiff organized a posse immediately and has resolute men scattered in every direction over this locality. Both are hardened criminals and would not hesitate to commit murder to effect their escape. Golden was charged with having forged the name of S. R. Miller, a stockman of Huntley, for whom he had worked as cowboy, to checks of various amounts, aggregating some $200, which he had presented at various points about fifty miles from town. Knight would have answered to highway robbery, having garroted a Rocky Fork grader. Sheriff Spendiff was brought to town to-night suffering from a severe wound in the head, caused by running against the cable of Kennedy's ferry as he was attempting to stop two men whom he saw walking down the track and toward whom he was riding in the dark at full speed horse back. He received a cut over the left eye about three inches long and was otherwise bruised and injured but not seriously.

Wonders of Disaster.

Dr. Talmage Reviews the Strange History of the Earth Which is Now Being Duplicated.

KANSAS CITY, MO., March 31.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage preached a sermon here to day on "Wonders of Disaster and Blessing," his text being, "I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth." Joel ii., 30. He said:

Dr. Cumming—great and good man—would have told us the exact time of the fulfilment of the prophecy. As I stepped into his study in London on my arrival from Paris just after the French had surrendered at Sedan, the good doctor said to me: "It is just as I told you about France; people laughed at me because I talked about the seven horns and the vials, but I foresaw all this from the Book of Daniel and the Book of Revelation." Not taking any such responsibility in the interpretation of the passage I simply assert that there is in it suggestions of many things in our time.

Our eyes dilate and our heart quickens its pulsations as we read of events in the third century, the sixth century, the eighth century, the fourteenth century, but there are more far-reaching events crowded into the nineteenth century than into any other, and the last quarter bids fair to eclipse the preceding three quarter. We read in the daily newspapers of events announced in one paragraph and without any special emphasis—of events which a Herodotus, a Josephus, a Xenopon, a Gibbon would have taken whole chapters or whole volumes to elaborate. Looking out upon our time we must cry out in the words of the text: "Wonders in the heavens and in the earth."

I propose to show you that the time in which we live is wonderful for disaster and wonderful for blessing, for there must be lights and shades in this picture as in all others. Need I argue this day that our time is wonderful for disaster? Our world has had a rough time since by the hand of God it was bowled out into space. It is an epileptic earth: convulsion after convulsion; frosts pounding it with sledge-hammer of iceberg, and fires melting it with furnaces seven hundred times heated. It is a wonder to me it has lasted so long. Meteors shooting by on this side and grazing it and meteors shooting by on the other side and grazing it, none of them slowing up for safety. Whole fleets and navies and argosies and flotillas of worlds sweeping all about us. Our earth like a fishing smack off the banks of Newfoundland, while the Etruria and Germanic and the Arizona and the City of New York rush by. Besides that our world has by sin been damaged in its internal machinery, and ever and anon the furnaces have burst, and the walking-beams of the mountain have broken, and the islands have shipped a sea, and the great bulk of the world has been jarred with accidents that ever and anon, threatened immediate demolition. But it seems to us as if our century were especially characterized by disaster, volcanic, cyclonic, oceanic, epidemic. I say volcanic because an earthquake is only a volcano hushed up. When Stromboli and Cotopaxi and Vesuvius stop breathing let the foundations of the earth beware. Seven thousand earthquakes in two centuries recorded in the catalogue o the British association. Trajan, the emperor goes to ancient Antioch, and amid the splendors of his reception is met by an earthquake that nearly destroys the emperor's life. Lisbon, fair and beautiful at 1 o'clock on the 1st of November, 1755, in six minutes 60,000 people perished and Voltaire writes of them: "For that region it was the last judgement nothing wanting but a trumpet!" Europe and America feeling the throb; 1,500 chimneys in Boston partly or fully destroyed.

But the disasters of other centuries have had their counterpart in our own. In 1812 Caraccas was caught in the grip of the earthquake; in 1822, in Chili, 100,000 square miles of land by volcanic force upheaved to four and seven feet of permanent elevation; in 1854 Japan felt the geological agony; Naples shaken in 1857; Mexico in 1858; Medosa, the capital of the Argentine Republic, in 1861; Manilla terrorized in 1863; the Hawaiian islands by such force uplifted and let down in 1871; Nevada shaken in 1871; Antioch in 1872; California in 1872; San Salvador in 1873; while in 1883 what subterranean excitement! Ischia, an island of the Mediterranean, a beautiful Italian watering place, vineyard clad, surrounded by all natural charm and historical reminiscence; yonder Capri, the summer resort of the Roman Emperors; yonder Naples, the paradise of art—this beautiful island suddenly toppled into the trough of the earth, 8,000 merry-makers perishing, and some of them so far down beneath the reach of human obsequies that it may be said of many a one of them as it was of Moses, "The Lord buried him." Italy weeping, all Europe weeping, all Christendom weeping where there were hearts to sympathize and Christains to pray. But while the nations were measuring that magnitude of disaster, measuring it not with golden rod like that with which the angel measured heaven, but with the black rule of death, Java, of the Indian archipelago, the most fertile island of all the earth, is caught in the grip of the earthquake, and mountain after mountain goes down, and city after city, until that island, which produces the healthiest beverage of all the world, has produced the ghastliest accident of the century. One hundred thousand people dying, dying, dead, dead.

But look at the disasters cyclonic. At the mouth of the Ganges are three islands—the Hattiah, the Sundeep, and the Dakin Shabazpore. In the midnight of October, 1877, on all those three islands the cry was: "The waters, the waters!" A cyclone arose and rolled the sea over those three islands, and of a population of 340,000 215,000 were drowned. Only those saved who had climbed to the top of the highest trees. Did you ever see a cyclone? No? Then I pray God you may never see one. I saw one on the ocean and it swept us 800 miles back from our course and for thirty-six hours during the cyclone and after it we expected every moment to go to the bottom. They told us before we retired at 9 o'clock that the barometer had fallen, but at 11 o'clock at night we were awakened with the shock of the waves. All the lights out! Crash! went all the life-boats. Waters rushing through the skylight down into the cabin and down on the furnaces until they hissed and smoked in the deluge. Seven hundred people praying, blaspheming, shreiking. Our great ship poised a moment on the top of a mountain of phosphorescent fire and then plunged down, down, down; until it seemed as if she would never again be righted. Ah! you never want to see a cyclone at sea. But I was in Minnesota, where there was one of those cyclones on land that swept the city of Rochester from its foundations and took dwelling-houses, barns, men, women, children, horses, and cattle and tossed them into indiscriminate ruin, and lifted a rail train and dashed it down, a mightier hand than that of the engineer on the air brake. Cyclone in Kansas, cyclone in Missouri, cyclone in Wisconsin, cyclone in Illonois, cyclone in Iowa. Satan, prince of the power of the air, never made such cyclonic disturbances as he has in our day. And am I not right in saying that one of the characteristics of the time in which we live is disaster cyclonic?

But look at the disasters ocanic. Shall I call the roll of the dead shipping? Ye monsters of the deep, answer when I call your names. Ville de Havre, the Schiller, City of Boston, the Melville, the President, the Cimbria. But why should I go on, calling the roll when none of them answer, and the roll is as long as the white scroll of the Atlantic surf at Cape Hatteras' breakers? If the oceanic cables could report all the scattered life and all the bleached bones that they rub against in the depths of the ocean what a message of pathos and tragedy, for both beaches! In one storm eighty fishermen perished off the coast of Newfoundland and whole fleets of them off the coast of England. God help the poor fellows at sea and give high seats in heaven to the Grace Darlings and the Ida Lewises and life-boat men hovering around Goodwin's Sands and the Skerries. The sea, owning three-fourths of the earth, proposes to capture the other fourth and is bombarding the land all around the earth. The moving of our hotels at Brighton Beach backward 100 yards from where they once stood, a type of what is going on all around the world and on every coast. The dead sea rolls today where ancient cities stood. Pillars of temples that stood on hills geologists now find three-quarters under the water or altogether submerged. The sea, having wrecked so many merchantmen and flotillas, wants to wreck the continents and hence disasters oceanic.

Look at the disasters epidemic. I speak not of the plague in the fourth century that ravaged Europe, and the Neapolitan dominions and Marseilles wrought such terror in the eighteenth century, but I look at the yellow fevers, and the choleras, and the diptherias, and the scarlet fevers, and the typhoids of our own time. Hear the wailing of Memphis, and Shreveport, and New Orleans, and Jacksonville of the last few decades. From Hurdwar, India, where every twelfth year 3,000,000 devotees congregate, the caravans brought cholera, and that one disease slew 18,000 in eighteen days in Bossorah. Twelve thousand in one summer slain by it in India, and 25,000 in Egypt. Disasters epidemic. Some of the finest monuments in Greenwood and Laurel Hill and Mount Auburn are to doctors who lost their life battling with southern epidemic.

But now I turn the leaf in my subject and I plant the white lilies and the palm trees amid the night shade and the myrtle. This age characterized by wonders of disaster than by wonders of blessing. Blessings of longevity, the average of human life rapidly increasing. Forty years now worth 400 years once. Now I can travel from Manitoba to New York in three days and three nights. In other words, three days and three nights now are worth three months of other days. The average of human life practically greater now than when Noah lived 950 years and Methusaleh lived his 969 years. Blessings of intelligence: The Salmon P. Chases and the Abraham Lincolns and the Henry Wilsons of the coming time will not be required to learn to read by pine-knot lights, or seated on shoe-maker's bench, nor will the Fergusons have to study astronomy while watching the cattle. Knowledge rolls its tides along every poor man's door, and his children may go down and bathe in them. If the philosophers of the last century were called up to recite in a class with our boys and girls at the Polytechnic, or our girls at the Packer, those old philosophers would be sent down to the foot of the class because they failed to answer the questions! Free libraries in all the important towns and cities of the land. Historical alcoves and poetical shelves and magazine tables for all that desire to walk through them or sit at them. Blessings of quick information. Newspapers falling all around us thick as leaves in a September equinoctial. News three days old, rancid and stale. We see the whole world twice a day—through the newspaper at the breakfast table, and through the newspaper at the tea table, with an "extra" here and there between.

Blessing of gospel proclamation: Do you not know that nearly all the missionary societies have been born in this century? and nearly all the bible societies and nearly all the great philanthropic movements? A secretary of one of the demonstrations said to me the other day in Dakota: "You were wrong when you said our denomination averaged a new church every day of the year; they established nine in one week, so you are far within the truth." A clergyman of our own denomination said: "I have just been out establishing five mission stations." I tell you Christianity is on the march while infidelity is dwindling into imbecility. While infidelity is thus dwindling and dropping down into imbecility and indecency the wheel of Christianity is making about a thousand revolutions in a minute. All the copies of Shakspeare and Tennyson and Disraeli and of any ten of the most popular writers of the day less in number than the copies of the bible going out from our printing presses. A few years ago, in six weeks, more than 2,000,000 copies of the new testament purchased, not given away, but purchased because the world will have it.

More Christian men in high offical position to day in Great Britain and in the United States than ever before. Stop that falsehood going through the newspapers—I have seen it in twenty—that the judges of the Supreme court of the United States are all infidels except one. By personal acquaintance I know three of them to be oldfashioned evangelical Christians, sitting at the holy sacrament of our Lord Jesus Christ, and I suppose that the majority of them are stanch believers in our Christian religion. And then hear the dying words of Judge Black, a man who had been attorney-general of the United States and who had been secretary of the United States—no stronger lawyer of the century than Judge Black—dying, his aged wife kneeling by his side and he uttering that sublime and tender prayer: "O Lord God, from whom I derived my existence and in whom I have always trusted take my spirit to thyself and let thy richest blessing come down upon my Mary." The most popular book today is the bible and the mightiest institution is the church, and the greatest name among the nations and more honored than any other is the name of Jesus.

Wonders of self-sacrifice: A clergyman told me in the northwest that for six years he was a missionary at the extreme north, living 400 miles from a postoffice, and sometimes he slept out of doors in winter, the thermometer 60 and 65 degrees below zero, wrapped in rabit skins woven together. I said: "Is it possible? You do not mean 60 and 65 degrees below zero?" He said: "I do, and I was happy." All for Christ. Where is there another being that will rally such enthusiasm? Mothers sewing their fingers off to educate their boys for the gospel of ministry. For nine years no luxury on the table until the course through grammar school and college and theological seminary be completed. Poor widow putting her mite into the Lord's treasury, the face of emporer or president impressed upon the coin not so conspicuous as the blood with which she earned it. Millions of good men and women, but more women than men, to whom Christ is everything. Christ first and Christ last and Christ forever.

Why, this age is not so characterized by invention and scientific exploration as it is by gospel proclamation. You can get no idea of it unless you ring all the church bells in one chime, and sound all the organs in one diapason, and gather all the congregations of Christendom in one gloria in excelsis. Mighty camp-meetings. Mighty ocean groves. Mighty Chautauquas. Mighty conventions of Christian workers. Mighty general assemblies of the Presbyterian church. Mighty conferences of the Methodist church. Mighty associations of the Baptist church. Mighty conventions of the Episcopal church. I think before long the best investments will not be in railroad stock or Western Union, but in trumpets and cymbals and festal decorations, for we are on the eve of victories, wide and world uplifting. There may be many years of hard worn yet before the consummation, but the signs are to me so encouraging that I would not be unbelieving if I saw the wing of the apocalyptic angel spread for its last triumphal flight in this day's sunset, or if to-morrow morning the ocean cables should thrill us with the news that Christ the Lord had alighted on Mount Olivet or Mount Calvary to proclaim universal dominion.

O you dead churches, wake up! Throw back the shutters of stiff ecclesiasticism and let the light of the spring morning come in. Morning for the land. Morning for the sea. Morning of emancipation. Morning of light and love and peace. Morning of a day in which there shall be no claims to break, no sorrows to assuage, no despotism to shatter, no woes to compassionate. O Christ, descend! Scarred temple, take the crown! Bruised hand, take the scepter! Wounded foot, step the throne! "Thine is the kingdom."

These things I say because I want you to be alert. I want you to be watching all these wonders unrolling from the heavens and the earth. God has classified them, whether calamitous or pleasing. The divine purposes are harnessed in traces that can not break and in girths that can not slip and in buckles that cannot loosen and are driven by reins they must answer. I preach no fatalism. A swarthy engineer at one of the depots in Dakota said: "When will you get on the locomotive and take a ride with us?" "Well," I said, "now, if that suits you." So I got on one side the locomotive and a Methodist minister, who was also invited, got on the other side, and between us and the engineer was the stoker. The train started. The engineer had his hand on the agitated pulse of the engine. The stoker shoveled in the coal and shut the door with a loud clang. A vast plain slipped under us and the hills swept by, and that great monster on which we rode trembled and bounded and snorted and raged as it hurled us on. I said to the Methodist minister on the other side of the locomotive: "My brother, why should Presbyterians and Methodists quarrel about the decrees and free agency? You see that track, that firm track, that iron track; that is the decree. You see this engineer's arm? That is free agency. How beautifully they work together! They are going to take us through. We could not do without the track and we could not do without the engineer." So I rejoice day by day. Work for us all to do, and we may turn the crank of the Christian machinery this way or that, for we are free agents; but there is the track laid so long ago no one remembers it, laid by the hand of Almighty God in sockets that no terrestrial or satanic pressure can ever affect. And along that track the car of the world's redemption will roll and roll to the grand central depot of the millennium, I have no anxiety about the track. I am only afraid that for our indolence God will discharge us and get some other stoker and some other engineer. The train is going through with us or without us. So, my brethern, watch all the events that are going by. If things seem to turn out all right give wings to your joy. If things seem to turn out wrong through out the anchor of faith and hold fast.

There is a house in London where Peter the Great of Russia lived awhile when he was moving through the land incognito and in workman's dress that be might learn the wants of the people. A stranger was visiting at that house recently, and saw in a dark atic an old box; and he said to the owner of the house: "What's in that box?" The owner said: "I don't know; that box was there when I got the house and it was there when my father got it. We haven't had any curiosity to look at it; I guess there's nothing in it." "Well," said the stranger, "I'll give you £2 for it." "Well, done." The £2 was paid, and recently the contents of that box were sold to the czar of Russia for $50,000. In it the lathing machine of Peter the Great, his private letters and documents, of value beyond all monetary consideration. And here are the events that seem very insignificant and unimportant, but they incase treasures of divine providence and eternities of meaning which after awhile God will demonstrate before the ages as being of stupendous value. As near as I can tell from what I see there must be a God somewhere about.

When Titans play quoits they pitch mountains; but who owns these gigantic forces you have been reading about the last two months? Whose hand is on the throttle valve of the volcanoes? Whose foot suddenly planted on the footstool makes the continents quiver? God! God! He looketh upon the mountains and they tremble. He toucheth the hills and they smoke. God! God! I must be at peace with him. Through the Lord Jesus Christ this God is mine and he is yours. I put the earthquake that shook Palestine at the crucifixion against all the down-rockings of the centuries. This God on our side we may challenge all the centuries of time and all the cycles of eternity.

Those of us who are in midlife may well thank God that we have seen so many wondrous things, but there are people here today who will see the twentieth century. Things obscure to us will be as far ahead of the nineteenth as the nineteenth is ahead of the eighteenth, and as you caricature the habits and customs and ignorance of the past others will caricature this age. Some of you may live to see the shimmering veil between the material and the spiritual world lifted. Magnetism, a word with which we cover up our ignorance, will yet be an explored realm. Electricity, the fiery courser of the sky that Benjamin Franklin lassoed and Morse and Bell and Edison have tried to control, will become completely manageable, and locomotion will be swiftened, and a world of practical knowledge thrown in upon the race. Whether we depart in this century or whether we see the open gates of a more wonderful century—we will see these things. It does not make much difference where we stand, but the higher the standpoint the larger the prospect. We will see them from heaven if we do not see them from earth. I was at Fire island, Long island, and I went up in the cupola from which they telegraphed to New York the approach of vessels hours before they come into port. There is an opening in the wall and the operator puts his telescope through that opening and looks out and sees vessels far out at sea. While I was talking with him he went up and looked out. He said: "We are expecting the Arizona tonight." I said: "Is it possible you know all those vessels? Do you know them as you know a man's face? He said: "Yes, I never make a mistake; before I see the hulks I often know them by the masts; I know them all, I have watched them so long." Oh, what a grand thing it is to have ships telegraphed and heralded long before they come to port, that friends may come down the wharf and welcome their long absent loved ones. So to-day we take our stand in the watchtower and we look off and through the glass of inspiration of providence we look off and see a whole fleet of ships coming in. That is the ship of Peace, flag with one star of Bethlehem floating above the top-gallants. That is the ship of the church, mark of salt wave high upon the smoke-stack, showing she has had rough weather, but the captain of salvation commands her and all is well with her. The ship of heaven, mightiest craft ever launched, millions of passengers waiting for millions more, prophets and apostles and martyrs in the cabin, conquerors at the foot of the mast, while from the rigging hands are waving this way as they knew us, and we were back again, for they are ours; they went out from our own households. Ours! Hail! Hail! Put off the black and put on the white. Stop tolling the funeral bell and ring the wedding anthem. Shut up the hearse and take the chariot. Now the ship comes around the great headland. Soon she will strike the wharf and we will go aboard her. Tears for ships going out. Laughter for ships coming in. Now she touches the wharf. Throw on the planks. Block not up that gangway with embracing long-lost friends, for you will have eternity of reunion. Stand back and give way until other millions come on. Farwell to sin. Farewell to struggle. Farewell to sickness. Farewell to death. All aboard for heaven!

Dangers of Tree Sawing.

From the North-western Lumberman.

In California the saw has largely supplanted the ax in bringing down redwoods, but the change is severe upon the woodmen. After being sawed partly through, a tree is forced over by inserting a number of steel wedges in the kerf, which are driven in with steel sledges. They are set in as close together as possible, and the driving of the wedges frequently requires three hours or more. The constant contact of the steel sledges with the steel wedges results in chipping off fragments which fly with great force, and in numerous instances become embedded in the flesh of the workmen, requiring surgical operations to remove them. Many eyes have been lost in this way, while arm and shoulder wounds are frequent. Some means of protection against the sharp missile is needed.

"In The Spring."

Philadelphia Record.

Gentleman: "Have you the American Horticulturist, the Eastern Farmer, the Harvest Home Monthly and the Great Crop Weekly?"

Newsdealer. "Yes sir. Here they are."

"Thank you. Let me see. Have you the Farmer's Friend, the Rural Register and the Agricultural Epoch?"

"Yes, sir; right here."

"Thanks: I'll take them all, and I guess I'll take this book, too—'Scientific Farm Life.' Yes; never mind I can cary them; no time to have them wrapped up; must catch the train."

Friend, "who is that man?"

Newsdealer. "Mr. Brickrow. He has just rented a suburban Queen Anne, with about 10 square feet of garden."

MINNESOTA IN BRIEF.

ARBOR DAY.

Gov. Merriam by Due Proclamation Appoints April 26 as the Day of Observance.

Gov. Merriam yesterday issued his proclamation fixing Arbor day on Friday, April 26. The document reads as follows:

Arbor day may be considered as one of the most pleasing festivals of the year, and its observance is now so general throughout the states and territories of the Union that it has become almost national in its character. The day possesses the rare feature of being one of pleasure to those who participate in the work to which it is dedicated, and of being in far greater degree fruitful in blessings to the children, the children's children and the generations to follow. Certainly no labor can better engage the hands of the men, women and children of our state, upon a designated day, than the planting of trees, shrubs and vines to beautify the home acre, and to make the nucleus of groves similar to those that now dot the prairies of our state, and which the years will develop into forests that will charm the eye, enchance the beauty of our landscape and prove benificial to the commonwealth.

Complying with the custom requiring the chief executive of this state to designate the day, I, William R. Merriam, governor of the state of Minnesota, do hereby name Friday, April 26 instant, as arbor day, and do earnestly hope that all citizens of the state, individually or as communities, and through the medium of their churches and societies, shall observe the same in manner as shall seem most fitting, enjoyable, and which shall accomplish the most for the work to which the day is set apart. It is desirable that the day be made as attractive as possible to the school children of the state, and that some features interesting to them may be made a part of the exercises. It is also hoped, that so far as practicable, all commercial and industrial operations may be suspended throughout the state on this day.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the state, at the capitol, St. Paul, this third day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, and of the independence of the United States the one hundredth and thirteenth.

WILLIAM R. MERRIAM, Governor,
H. MATTSON, Secretary of State.

Samuel Speer, in jail at Wabasha awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of larceny, escaped one night and is still at large.

The acting controller of the currency authorized the National Bank of Commerce of Duluth, Minn., to begin business with a capital of $100,000.

Jessie Lindsley of Vernon Center, aged sixteen, was arrested for stealing $16 worth of laces from Mrs. John Root, her employer. She pleaded guilty and was committed to jail for thirty days.

Lars Larson, living five miles north of Cokato, was fatally injured while leading a horse. It suddenly turned and kicked him in the face, breaking his jaw and dislocating the teeth. He is still alive, but there is no hope of his recovery.

Charles Kondler and Moses Lampreux, two farmers from the town of Sauk Center, were arrested at Red Lake Falls on complaint of Thomas Daragan, charging them with grand larceny by stealing fifty bushels of seed wheat from the complainant.

The municipal election at Winnebago City, resulted in the election of the entire temperance ticket by majorities of from sixty to eighty-five. John S. Robertson is elected president of licensing saloons, and resulted in the defeat of license by a majority of eighty-six.

Last fall Aug Stahl, a young man, single, aged twenty-eight, living in Star Lake township, disappeared. He left word that he was going to Fergus Falls. Nothing was heard of him until his body was found in Lake Maria. He was drowned before the lake froze up last fall.

A sudden and singular death occurred about fifteen miles southwest of Mankato which caused considerable excitement. Mrs. Knute Knudson was attending the funeral of a friend, and on opening the church door fell dead of heart disease. She was sixty-five years old and leaves a family.

Frank Osborne was convicted at Brainerd of grand larceny in the first degree. This means imprisonment for from five to ten years. A motion for a stay of sentence has been made. William Bently, who was indicted for the same offense as Osborne's accomplice, plead guilty to grand larceny in the second degree.

The house of Charley Johnson, a bachelor living alone in Wang township, Renville county, was discovered by the neighbors to be on fire, and before they could reach there it was entirely enveloped by flames, and nothing could be saved. Johnson's remains were taken from the ruins a charred mass.

The two Minneapolis & Northern elevators at St. Cloud were burned with about 12,000 bushels of wheat, entailing a total loss of about $20,000. The fire caught from a hot box and but little could be done by the fire department, the elevator being so far distant from the hose houses, but they saved the adjoining railroad property.

A young man living at Elmore named Burt Greenman eloped with Mrs. M. Richardson of the same village. The couple went to Blue Earth city, and securing a livery deported, the young man returning here with the team the same day. Immediately on his return he was arrested, charged with adultery, and a second warrant was served upon him, charging him with passing counterfeit money. The whereabouts of the woman are unknown.

Robert Henderson, one of the earliest settlers of Fillmore county, was burned recently. Early last fall deceased had a cancer removed from his lip, and the physicians forbade smoking. The wound healed rapidly and Mr. Henderson again took to smoking, which brought back the malady in so malignant a form that death resulted on the 25th inst. The cancer had eaten away the right side of the jaw and into the jugular vein. He suffered untold agony for nearly five months.

HOUSEHOLD.

Hints for the Home.

SUGAR COOKIES.—Seven eggs, one pound of sugar, one half-pound of butter, one teaspoon of soda and flour to make a dough.

SPONGE CAKE.—One cup sugar, three eggs, beat well; add one cup of flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder; mix well and bake.

Eggs are as digestible raw as cooked, and one easily comes to like the taste of a fresh raw egg beaten to a foam and mixed with a little milk or milk and sugar.

A simple remedy for neuralgia is to apply grated horse-radish, prepared the same as for table use, to the temple when the face or head is affected or to the wrist when the pain is in the arm or shoulder.

Biscuits of all sorts, even when several days old, may be made nearly as good as fresh by wetting the tops and setting in a hot oven for about five minutes. A convenient way of having warm biscuit for breakfast.

A towel folded several times and quickly wrung out of hot water and applied over the seat of the pain in toothache or neuralgia will generally afford prompt relief. This treatment in colic works like magic.

PASTE FOR ROACHES.—Make a flour paste into which has been stirred, while hot, phosphorus, in the proportions of a dime's worth of the phosphorus to a half-pint of paste; when nearly cold add a quarter as much grease. Put on pieces of board where the roaches are. They will die while eating the paste.

Nothing is more useful in sickness than a small flannel bag filled with salt. For toothache, colic, or any disease requiring warm applications, it is invaluable, as it retains its heat a long time; and it is greatly to be preferred to hot, wet emolients, which soon get cold and uncomfortable. The bag and all can be put on a tin pan and warmed in the oven; but it is better to rip a small hole in the bag and empty the salt out into a pan to heat. After it is hot it can be put back with a large spoon and the hole sewed up in a moment.

Umbrellas will last much longer if, when they are wet, they are placed handle downward to dry. The moisture falls from the edges of the frame and the fabric dries uniformly. If stood handle upward, as is commonly the case, the top of the umbrella holds the moisture, owing to the lining underneath the ring; it consequently takes a long time to dry, and injures the silk or other fabric with which it is covered. Umbrella cases are responsible for the wear of the silk. The constant friction causes tiny holes that appear so provokingly early. When not in use the umbrella should be left loose, and when wet left loose to dry.

A Pernicious Habit.

Why is it that our young men and boys can't or won't "let up" in the practice of the pernicious and health destroying habit of cigarette smoking? A few days ago a lad of eighteen who had lost his head from the cause, died in a lunatic asylum. Another young New Yorker who used six packages of cigarettes a day committed suicide while suffering from temporary insanity which the attending physician ascribed to his indulgence is this vice. Every week or two brings to light some other case in which a bright boy has become a wreck. It is only necessary to look at the fingers of the confirmed cigarette smoker and see how the nicotine has penetrated through the outer skin or cuticle to the flesh below, in order to understand the effect of this insidious poison upon the more delicate mucous membranes of the throat and lungs. Will the youngsters ever learn that they are carrying their lives in their hands and eventually must pay the penalty that reaches in one form or another, the opium eater and drunkard?

Hot Water.

"The soothing effects of hot water are not fully appreciated," said a physician the other day. "I recommend it to many of my patients who suffer from insomnia, produced by nervous irritation of the stomach, and also for certain forms of indigestion. Many of them object to it, at first, but soon come to like it and are generally much benefited by it. A glass of hot water now and then will work no appreciable good, of course, but a steady habit of hot water drinking once formed, and sustained regularly for a few months, works wonders with certain constitutions. I generally recommend its use just before going to bed. It is a great soother. The captain of an immigrant steamship I sailed on as surgeon for one season demonstrated its quieting influence once, when he turned a hot stream from the boiler-hose on a crowd of fighting immigrants who had fairly taken possession of the hold and defied the ship's crew. It healed those inflamed spirits, I tell you, though the application was only external."—New York Tribune.

Parasols for the spring have very long sticks, mostly of natural wood, with large loops as handles. Many have silver handles, however; and on these, the handle frequently reaches halfway up the stick. Wide stripes are principally seen; then there are lace parasols, in black and white, over some dark-colored silk. Some of the plainer silk ones are embroidered in floral designs. If a lady wishes to dress stylishly, her parasol matches the toilette worn.

CROOKSTON, - - MINNESOTA.

The man who wrote, "Nothing is impossible," never tried to find the pocket of his wife's dress when it was hanging up in a clothes-press.

A Grand Rapids man, who was arrested for gambling, alleged that he had lost all his money, had bet his clothes and lost them and was sleeping in the gambling-room for shelter when pulled.

At Brussels, an elephant attached to a circus, becoming enraged at an attendant, seized him by the leg and dashed him against a wall. Death was instantaneous. The unfortunate man had been teasing the animal.

The reports of gold discoveries in Lower California are proved to be greatly exaggerated. The new mines said to contain inestimable treasure are simply old mines known to the Mexicans and Indians for many years.

Miss Mildred Maddox, of Brewton, Ala., dressed up as a tramp and attempted to frighten her mother. The disguise was perfect, and Mrs. Maddox emptied the contents of a shotgun into her daughter's body. The girl will recover.

A Brower (Me.) woman, while hanging out her wash, discovered what appeared to be a patch in the hem of a skirt, and, investigating, found it to be a $5 bill, which she had long before sewed into the hem for safe keeping and forgotten.

An old fisherman at Norwich, Conn., makes the consoling prediction that the high water prevailing this season will be the cause of some astonishing good trout-fishing next Spring. The muskrats cannot get at the trout, upon which they ravenously feast when the streams are covered with ice.

"Mr. Chamberlain, in Scotch phrase, has 'a fine conceit of himself,'" says London Truth. "At Glasgow he informed his audience that his marraige had drawn closer the bonds which unite Great Britain and the United States. Even the marriages of sovereigns have ceased to affect the policy of nations."

Mr. Windom is the oldest member of the new cabinet, being nearly sixty-three years of age. Mr. Miller is the youngest, not having reached his 48th year. Mr. Blaine and Mr. Rusk are about the same age—59. Mr. Proctor is 58 and Mr. Tracy 60. Next to Mr. Miller the youngest man in the cabinet is Mr. Wanamaker, who is not quite 52.

California fruit-growers will soon meet to devise ways and means for successfully coping with a very troublesome pest, the ground-squirrel. A great deal of time, labor and money has been expended by individual growers throughout the country in their endeavors to rid their orchards and farms of the very destructive ground-squirrel.

A plan for rendering paper as tough as wood or leather has been recently introduced on the continent; it consists of mixing chloride of zinc with the pulp in the course of manufacture. It has been found that the greater the degree of concentration of the zinc solution the greater will be the toughness of the paper. It can be used for making boxes combs, for roofing, and even for making boats.

One of the attractions in a cheap circus that showed at Albany, Ga., the other day, was a large baboon that proved very interesting to a lot of little darkies. From admiring it they fell to teasing the baboon, and were having great fun, when the big monkey, worried beyond endurance, grabbed a brick and flung it at one particularly aggravating negro boy. The baboon's aim was good, his strength great, and the brick, hitting the boy behind the ear, knocked him senseless. For a long time it was thought he was killed, but he got over it.

A curious cause of death was recently recorded in India. A native who was fishing in a stream caught a flat, ell-like fish, about 15 to 16 inches in length. Being desirous of killing it, he put it into his mouth in order to bite off his head. The fish, however, scarcely appreciating this clumsy attempt at decapitation, vigorously essayed to make other arrangements, in which it was partially successful. Gifted with a sliminess, which made it very difficult to hold, it slipped through the man's fingers into his mouth, and conveyed itself partly down his gullet. The situation now was bad for the fish, but still worse for the man, for, owing to the sharp fins on the back of the fish, it was not possible to withdraw it. The man died in great agony within an hour.

Washington Budget.

The president appointed Joel B. Erhardt collector of customs at New York, and Cornelius Van Cott postmaster of the city of New York. These appointments give general satisfaction to the persons interested. This is the reason they were made. There was general agreement upon Erhardt among all the New York factions and the opposition to Van Cott had dwindled down to a trifle. There is not yet perfect harmony as to the other custom house places, though John W. Knapp, who was chairman of the Republican state committee in the late campaign, will probably be settled upon for the naval officer.

Pension Commissioner Tanner issued an order reciting that the act of congress approved March 1, 1889, provides that whenever a pension certificate of any character, original, increase, restoration, arrears or otherwise, shall have been issued by the pension bureau and the beneficiary mentioned therein is found to have died before payment, the amount on the certificate to the date of the pensioner's death will be paid to the widow of the pensioner. If there be no widow, then it is to be paid to the minor child or children of the deceased pensioner. If there be neither widow now minor children, then the amount will, in the discretion of the secretary of the interior, be paid to the executor or administrator of his estate.

Of the 350 nominations sent to the senate during the special session by President Harrison the following were rejected: Murat Halstead to be minister to Germany; Isadore S. Lowenthal to be postmaster at Modesta, Cal. The following remain unacted upon (and therefore died) at the end of the session: William H. Whiteman to be associate justice of the territory of New Mexico; Edwin L Kursheed to be marshal for the eastern district of Louisiana. Postmasters: Kittel O. Walders, at Minot, N. D.; Carl C. Crippen, at Eustis, Fla.; Burt C. Drake, at Gainesville, Fla.; Robert F. Bebout, at Rushville, Ind.; George E. Nicholson, at Ness City, Kan.; Samuel C. Moore, at Findley, Ohio. President Harrison's nominations were contained in 284 messages. During the special session of the senate at the beginning of President Cleveland's term he sent to the capitol 418 messages, eighteen of his nominations failed to receive confirmation, and there was no rejections. At the last session of congress during the administration of President Hayes, the senate failed to act on 106 of his nominations and rejected three. This record has never been equalled.

Calendar of Casualties.

Rev. Dr. V. Edward Beecher, aged eighty-five years, a brother of the late Henry Ward Beecher, fell beneath a train at Brooklyn, and his left leg was run over and crushed. Dr. Beecher was returning from Parkville, where he is pastor of a church. Owing to his advanced age the injury may have serious consequences.

Fire broke out in the Standard Iron works building, at West Superior, and before the fire department could get to the ground the building with its valuable machinery, patters, etc., was in ruins. The loss will reach about $45,000, with no insurance. The firm has just entered upon a very busy season with numerous large contracts for machinery for the new coal docks and other public works.

Crimes and Criminals.

The unusually large number of incendiary fires in Des Moines, Iowa, within the last ten days has aroused public sentiment. The mayor has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest of the firebugs, and an extra police force with shotguns will patrol the city at night. The first man caught in the act of setting fire to property will be shot.

Arthur Kruschinski, the $80,000 boy said to have been kidnapped from Chicago, was sent back home to his mother by Inspector McKelvy of Pittsburg. The inspector received a letter from Mr. Kruschinski enclosing a railroad ticket, and thanking the police for the kindness they had shown her boy and requesting the inspector to send the lad home.

The body of E. C. Mahr, a homestender, was found in the sand hills four miles from his home at Madrid, Neb. He had been shot in the head and robbed. He went to Imperial, proved up on his claim, and borrowed $500 on it. With $250 of this in his pocket, the rest having been paid out in Imperial, he started for home. A neighbor who went with him to prove up, purchased a draft at Ogallala the day following the murder, and has not been seen since.

Gen. H. K. McConnell, one of the most prominent attorneys of Osage City, Kansas, committed suicide in his room in the Fifth Avenue hotel at Topeka by shooting himself in the head. About two months ago Gen. McConnell figured in a sensational shooting affair at Osage City. Mrs. McConnell had good reason then to suspect her husband of infidelity, and she has been prostrated ever since. It is this, it is said, which caused McConnell to kill himself, Gen. McConnell was prominent in G. A. R. circles, and also an influential politician.

The smuggling operations of Allard & Sons, of Paris and New York, was the main topic of conversation at the office of the custom house at New York. Special Treasury Agent Simmons, who unearthed the swindle, is of the opinion that the evidence that the firm smuggled hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of dutiable goods into this country in the seats of antique chairs and quaint mirrors is conclusive. It is not expected that anything further will be done in the matter until Secretary Windom is heard from.

A tremendous sensation was created at Sault Ste. Marie by the arrival of a deputy sheriff from Detour, a point on the St. Mary's river sixty miles distant with the news of the bodily theft of a saw mill building, including machinery, etc. The officer came overland with a dog team. He says the Molles Bros., well known lumbermen, arrived at Detour with a tug, two towing barges and nearly two-hundred men, and immediately began the work of tearing down the mill and loading it on the scows. They had all the machinery and most of the mill loaded when the sheriff left. The mill was owned by the Molles Bros., but was mortgaged to Hurd & Havenstein of Buffalo for $60,000. The telegraph lines are cut and there is no communication with Detour. Nothing in history equals the move in boldness. The mill was worth $100,000, and had a capacity of 125,000 feet a day.

Rev. Charles Sidney Hurd, lately of the Palmerston Unitarian chapel, Boston, committed suicide by taking opium in the Euston hotel, London, Mr. Hurd wrote to the Rev. Stopford Brooke, asking pecuniary assistance. Mr. Brooke made inquiries and promised to pay Mr. Hurd's passage to Boston, although Mr. Hurd was a stranger to him. At the inquest on the body a letter from Mr. Hurd to Mr. Brooke, was found. In this the unfortunate man thanks Mr. Brooke for his kindness and apologizes for having troubled him. The letter concludes: The sole way by which I can escape my difficulties is through the gates of death. I am the most unlucky mortal on earth. Give my body to a medical school for dissection. My brother's address is No. 4 Parker street, Malvern, Mass.

It looks, as if Denver would furnish the country with another sensation. At the recent municipal election, Wolfe Londoner, the Republican nominee, was elected mayor by a small majority, after one of the most corrupt fights ever known in politics. Voters were offered money at the polls, while many were assulted for not allowing themselves to be bribed. The citizens' committee, composed of Republicans who declined to support their party nominee, held a mass meeting at which the present incumbents Mayor Lee and Mr. Londoner, were denounced, and subscriptions were received to contest the late election. Among the speakers was C. L. Rockwell, who denounced Mayor Lee in most unfitting terms. This has aroused the ire of the mayor, and he sent word to Mr. Rockwell that if an apology was not forthcoming within the next 48 hours he would kill him on sight. Rockwell says he will never apologize, and thus the matter rests. The affair has caused a great sensation.

Joseph Golden and George Knight, two of the most desperate of the prisoners in Billings Montana while the jailer was at supper, effected their escape from jail by sawing a hole through the roof over the women's cells, Had the turnkey been five minutes later a wholesale delivery would have resulted. When last seen they had taken refuge under a culvert under the railroad about a quarter of a mile east of town. Sheriff Spendiff organized a posse immediately and has resolute men scattered in every direction over this locality. Both are hardened criminals and would not hesitate to commit murder to effect their escape. Golden was charged with having forged the name of S. R. Miller, a stockman of Huntly, for whom he had worked as cowboy, to checks of various amounts, aggregating some $200, which he had presented at various points about fifty miles from town. Knight would have answered to highway robbery having garroted a Rocky Fork grader.

A plan to wreck a passenger train was included in the programme arranged by the four men, John O'Brien, John Williams, Jacob Wilburth and Earnest Seefluth, who were arrested at Milwaukee for robbing Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul freight cars. When they were arrested the matter was under consideration, and they had not got to the point of fixing upon any particular train, but O'Brien said the idea was to fasten a timber upon the rails in a curve south of the city, and in the confusion following the derailment to get away with as much plunder as possible. Whether they were really equal to the execution of such a diabolical piece of business or not, they will probably remain for some time where they can do no harm, as they have confessed to having robbed cars on the Chicago & Northwestern as well as on the St. Paul road, and have likewise implicated another man, James Cooper, who is also under arrest. Cooper was released several months ago from the penitentiary at Stillwater, Minn., where he served a term for burglary.

United States Marshal Atkins brought from Alaska five prisoners, en route to San Quenten, Cal., Lewis Sharp, who murdered a man in western Alaska, was sentenced to the penitentiary. He was taken to Sitka via San Francisco, nearly 10,000 miles, for trial. Norman Dubuque, three years for robbing in June; Louis Rankins, Russian, to two years for selling whisky to Indians; Aaron, Indian chief of the Chicat tribe, who is said to have murdered or caused to have been killed eleven white miners at different times who were entering the Rukon country, is sent to prison for four years charged with mayhem. He defied twelve marshals to arrest him and gave them ten minutes to leave his mountain retreat. His tribe numbered two thousand people. Kootwat, another Indian, goes to prison with his nose bitten off, the result of getting married, his bride biting off that member, whereupon he threw her in a brush fire, where she received severe injuries. The authorities have instructions to send all the prisoners to San Quentin serving over one year.

People Talked About.

Edwin Booth, the great actor, was stricken with paralysis, while playing in Othello at Rochester, N. Y. The engagement suddenly closed, though seats to the amount of $5,000 had been sold.

Foreign Jottings.

Gen. Boulanger, in an interview said he was about to send a communication to M. Beaurepaire, procureur general at Paris, in which he would offer to appear at the assize court, and meet any charges that might be brought against him in a proper and legal manner. He declared that he would never submit to the senate. He denied that he harbored designs against England. Gen. Boulanger said that he would go to London if he was expelled from Belgium.

News in General.

The concerted action of river land settlers to forcibly regain possession of lands from which evictions were made last fall continues uninterrupted. Three additional farms, from which occupants were ejected ast fall, were seized by sturdy farms and crops sown in the name of the evicted tenants. A small army of men and teams with machinery and seeds will make a tour of the entire river land district and sow crops wherever evictions have been made. The excitement attendant on this bold action of the settlers has been greatly heightened by the proposed institution of legal proceedings charging all who participate in this latest move with conspiracy.

The members of the state board of railroad assessors, just returned from a trip through Oklahoma, report army officers as saying that thousands of boomers are still concealed in the brush, and that if the whole United States army was there it could not drive them out. Names are taken, but nine out of ten are fictitious. Capt. Woodson and Lieut. Carson are in receipt of telegrams daily to hire horses, have them saddled and bridled and in waiting on the arrival of the trains at Oklahoma City, April 22, at noon. The object is to mount at once and by fleet steeds distance rival boomers on foot and capture choice claims. A party of four Hoosiers with a balloon are camped near Antelope hills. They make an ascent in the morning, drifting in midair until noon, and then descent hours in advance of teams and speedy horses.

Political Riot in New York.

Albany telegram, April 5. Cohoes has been in the hands of a Democratic mob all day, and the condition of affairs is unchanged, with drunken brawlers and excited adherents of the two Democratic factions still excitedly discussing the situation. The Democratic primaries to nominate supervisors, aldermen and a city ticket were held. On the side was the Cleveland following, directed by D. Cady Herrick from Albany, with Postmaster Larkin and ex-County Clerk Larkin in immediate command. On the other side was the Hill following, directed by Edward Murphy, Jr., from Troy, with Maj. Garside in immediate command. The rioting was confined to three of the wards. In the other two, the Larkin regulars had things their own way, and nominated their men by majorities of four and seven. In the other three wards violence was the rule. The Larkin men had the inspectors. The Garside men had the police. Some time ago one of the police commissioners was "induced" to turn the force over to the control of the mayor, who turned out the old force and formed an entirely new one. The police were present at the polls in force. Civilians, sworn in as specials, were left in control of the station house. In one of the wards after the regulars had admitted the watcher of the other side to the polling place, one of the police endeavored to force his way in. He was warned to desist, but persisted, and with a sledge hammer battered down the door. He was struck on the head with a lead pipe, a hole was cut through his cheek, and he staggered back covered with blood and fell outside the poll. Then the riot began. Pistols, knives and clubs were used, the ballot box smashed and both sides claimed the victory. No one was fatally injured, except possibly the policeman. While this was transpiring, in another ward a policeman endeavored to make his way into the polling place through a saloon next door. He was choked by the proprietor until black in the face, thrown over the bar and kicked into the street. In another ward a policeman battered a man over the head, inflicting injuries which are reported fatal. Small fights were of constant occurrence. A dozen men are reported seriously, if not fatally, disabled. The factional feeling runs so high and the disturbance is so great that it is almost impossible to secure full and reliable news. After the regular primaries were broken up they were continued in the midst of groups of the opposing factions. Two Democratic candidates in each ward will be the result. The condition of the policeman who was struck with the lead pipe cannot be definitely ascertained.

Disastrous Prairie Fires.

The village of Mount Vernon Dakota was almost entirely consumed by fire. All the business part of the town is burned. Every business house, and nearly all the residences are destroyed. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul depot, together with about fifteen or twenty freight cars and four large elevators are gone. The loss will be nearly $300,000, with but very little insurance, and a hundred families are left homeless and utterly destitute. It was caused by a prairie fire, which came in from the northwest. One hundred citizens from Mitchell went up to help fight the fire, but a roaging wind prevailed, and their efforts availed but little. A special train, carrying provisions, was dispatched from Mitchell.

Volin, a station on the Northwestern road ten miles east of Yankton, was also burned. The buildings burned were the station agent's residence, depot, two houses belonging to Louis Volin and a large flouring mill. A thousand tons of hay was destroyed, and all the barns in the place. The fire invaded a large cattle corral, and forty or fifty cattle were badly burned, the rest breaking through the enclosure and escaping. Loss fully $10,000. The destruction was caused by a prairie fire, which was burning at last accounts.

A prairie fire started one mile northeast of Rapid City at noon, and was driven in a southeasterly course by a gale of sixty miles an hour. Three houses were burned. The first was unoccupied and owned by C. H. Kingman of Chicago; loss, $2,000. The second was occupied by Mrs. G. E. Bailey, a girl companion aged seventeen years, named Eloise Madison, and a hired man named Ashton. The three left the house and ran through the flames, Mrs. Bailey and Ashton escaping with some severe burns. Miss Madison fell, and the fire catching her clothing burned it completely from her body. She was taken to a neighbor's, and lies at the point of death. The house and household goods are a total loss. George Hunt's house, barns and furniture were burned; loss, $1,800; insurance, $5,000. The family escaped.

The residence of A. E. Swan, about one mile from Andover was burned, together with most of its contents. The inmates were at dinner when a prairie fire was discovered near the house, and all rushed for the door barely in time to save their lives. Mrs. A. E. Baynes, who was visiting there, did not have time to get her wraps and her two little children and self were compelled to face the fierce gale about a mile, with but little covering.

A prairie fire has raged all day north of Brookings, H. Fishback's farm dwelling, occupied by Mrs. Stephens, with all its contents, was consumed. Messrs. Hobbs and Conrow lost all their farm buildings and contents. A terrible gale has been blowing from the northwest and nothing could be done to quell the flames.

A terrific wind storm has prevailed throughout a wide area in the vicinity of Sioux Falls. Rumors come that the entire population of Beaver Creek, Minn., thirty miles east, are fighting the fire; also that extensive fires prevail in various parts of Southwestern Minnesota. Grave fears of a wide-spread calamity are felt.

MORE PRAIRIE FIRES.

Leola, the county seat of McPherson county, thirty-five miles northwest of Aberdeen, Dakota, was destroyed by a prairie fire. The fire came from the west and was not noticed until it struck the town. Sixty dwellings and business houses were burned. Loss, $150,000. The only buildings remaining are the court house, two stores and six dwellings. C. W. Old and Thomas Wardell were terribly burned, and couriers from the demolished village say they cannot live. Parties who drove across the country to Westport, the nearest railroad station, say that the surrounding country is nearly devastated. Hundreds of farm houses are in ashes and carcasses of burned stock are lying along the road.

The most devasting prairie fire ever known raged over the prairies west and north of Lake Benton. The wind was a hurricane for nearly twenty-four hours, and swept the fire along with a resistless force, passing the widest fire breaks as nothing; and, leaping plowed fields with a wild bound, it licked up houses, barns, stock and in different places human lives.

Huron Special:—No prairie fire in the history of this part of Dakota equals that of April 3rd. In this county the losses are much less than in counties west. Half a dozen houses burned and many settlers lost barns, some stock and a large quantity of hay and grain. The wind was from fifty to sixty miles an hour, and sent the burning embers over the plowed ground and fire breaks several rods wide, setting fire to everything in their course. The fire came up so rapidly that settlers had only time to save themselves, leaving their property to the mercy of the flames. In Sully and Hughes counties $200,000 worth of property was destroyed. Near Highmore Miss Sweeney was burned, and near St. Lawrence Mr. Babcock perished in the flames. Reports from Millbank, Vermillion, Parker, Miller and other places in Dakota, and from Marshall, Jackson, Faribault and Rochester, in Minnesota give many details of losses by prairie fire.

The destruction by prairie fires proves to been much greater than was supposed, and accounts are not all in yet. In Yankton county not less than fifty farmers were burned out, losing buildings, stock farm implements, and some stock. A conservative estimate makes a loss in the county not less than $100,000. The town of Olivet, in Hutchinson county, was partially destroyed, the postoffice, two stores, a printing office and a residence burning. The strength of the gale was much greater out on the prairies than in Yankton, and the prevailing drouth made everything highly inflammable, so that a spark was quickly kindled into a blaze and a fire, which moved on at the rate of a mile a minute before the furious wind. No loss of life is reported.

Minnesota Swamp Lands.

The secretary of the interior has rendered another decision affecting the validity of the field notes of surveys of public lands in Minnesota, by which the state secured a large amount of alleged swamp lands. Margaret S. Spence applied to enter the northwest quarter of section 29, town 63, range 11, Duluth land District, but was met with the protest from the state that those were swamp lands and belonged to the state. A hearing was had; and it was shown that the lands were high, dry and even hilly. The commissioner of the general land office affirmed the decision that Spence should take the land. The state appealed to the secretary, claiming that the government could not go back of the field notes. The secretary, quoting from the old decision of Minnesota against Lachance, showed that while the state might elect whether it would select its lands from field notes of the surveys or by selections by agents, the goverment retained the right to overturn the field notes and resurvey the ground it it saw fit. In this case the secretary decided that the field notes were false and fraudulent and that the lands are not swamp lands. He allows Spence to complete her entry. This is but one of two or three cases which will lead up to an entire resurvey of the alleged swamp lands in the northern part of the state. It is alleged by officials of the general land office that great frauds have been perpetrated in noting swamp lands and that the government can only protect itself by resurveys. The secretary of the interior has dismissed the appeal of the Northern Pacific road from the decision allowing William Daw to enter a quarter section in section 13, township 134, range 41, Fergus Falls land district. The land lies within the indemnity limits of the Manitoba and Northern Pacific roads.

The Dakota Post Office.

Orders issued from the postoffice department established postoffices and appointed postmasters at new points in Dakota as follows:

Alfred C. Carroll, Aubrey, Minnehaha county; George Brown, Banner, Lincoln county; Arthur McConville, Garland, Union county; John Pekelder, Hull, Emmons county; William M. Kruse, Humboldt, Minnehaha county; Daniel B. Thompson, Kelley's Grand Forks county; Anson J. McCain, Laverne, Pennington county; Mary E. Bailey, Martin's Valley, Custer county; Wells N. Burdick, Smyth, Moody county.

The following fourth-class postmasters were appointed from the Northwest on Monday.

Dakota—W. E. Reppels, Auburn, Walsh county; P. E. Higgins, Castlewood, Hamilton county; J. K. Fairchild, Drayton, Pembina county; A. B. Vinco, Holabird, Hyde county; J. T. Scott, Monough, Dickey county; J. W. Jones, Oelrich, Fall river county. James McClair, Tripp, Hutchinson county. Minnesota—C. H. Vorse, Delano, Wright county; N. R. Evarts, French, Otter Tail county; J. H. Higgerman, Newport, Washington county.

Dakota Disasters.

Yankton telegram, April 4.—The list of losses by Tuesday's prairie fires in this vicinity increases, and the visitation assumes the form of a widespread calamity. Yankton county alone has suffered to the probable extent of $150,000, and as many as seventy-five families are homeless, most of them losing everything except their lives and the lives of their families. Farmers hereabouts are generally possessed of valuable improvements, and individual losses range from $1,000 to $6,000 in buildings and machinery. The Janesville neighborhood has suffered most severely. It is peopled by Russians who had covered their farms with timber, fine buildings and fences. These are now a blackened waste, and the losses are generally without insurance. It was no ordinary prairie fire In its fearful force it licked up everything combustible, and grass and stubble and wood broke into flame seemingly without coming in contract with fire. The combustion was almost spontaneous in the dry and heated condition of the atmosphere set in motion by the terrific gale that prevailed. The conditions seemed similor to those existing at the time of the great Chicago fire and the fires in the Wisconsin woods, when the atmosphere was almost ready to ignite and burn. An illustration is given in the case of a Yankton county farmer who placed his valuable papers and money in a wood-box and deposited the box in the middle of a plowed field with its contents. The box was reduced to ashes, though there was no way for the fire to cross the plowed surroundings.

ASHTON, April 4.—Tuesday was the worst day on record in Dakota except, perhaps, the famous blizzard of January, 1888. The wind blew from the northwest a furious gale all day. The air was so full of dust that a person could not see a hundred yards distant. Several buildings in this town were stripped of their tin roofs while numerous small buildings and fences were blown down. To-day news comes in from Faulk county, west of Athol, that a furious prairie fire raged all the afternoon and evening, and the light from the fires could be plainly seen from this place. The whole heavens seemed aflame. Numerous farmers lost all they had.

WOONSOCKET—April 4.—The most disastrous wind storm ever known visited this section Tuesday and was a perfect hurricane. It blew off nearly the whole south side of the Bank of Woonsocket, a brick veneered building; outhouses were tipped over, sidewalks torn up and cornice taken off of several business houses. The most destruction, however, was from prairie fires. The large cattle sheds, barns, etc., of W. M. Posey, four miles northwest of here, with six head of oxen and a large number of cattle, were entirely destroyed; also barns and one horse of R. Eastmen and residence with all out buildings James Eastman. Nearly a dozen settlers are known to have been burned out, with more to hear from. During the afternoon the smoke and cinders were so dense in town one could hardly see across the street, and great fear was entertained least the fire might get in town.

ARMOUR, April 4.—Douglas county was visited by one of the worst prairie fires ever known. Many farmers lost everything, and are homeless and destitute.

A. R. Cornwall of Aberdeen writes the Pioneer Press:

A terrible fate has befallen the village of Leola, McPherson county, South Dakota. A prairie fire came down from the Coteau mountains like a cyclone, and the entire village is in ashes. The court house, two stores one bank and school house are all that are left out of twenty business places. Forty to fifty families are entirely destitute. Both printing offices, one bank, six stores, including drug stores, hardware, etc., are all swept away. Nothing was saved. The men fought to save the town, and neglected their household goods. No lives were lost in the village, but one or two from farm houses are reported. I came by one farmer who had seven horses and twice as many cattle, together with house and barn, all lost. The family have nothing left but the clothing they wore. How many farm houses are gone cannot now be ascertained. Will not friends send clothing, bedding and anything to Westport for Leola? A committee will receive them.

John Wolfenberger, the escaped convict who shot and killed Sheriff Greenleaf, of Granger county, Tennessee, was taken from the county jail at Rutledge and hanged by the citizens. When captured Wolfenberger was suffering from a wound inflicted by the Sheriff's posse. The citizens surrounded the jail, but concluded to wait for daylight. The jail was strongly guarded by citizens to prevent Wolfenberger's escape. Before noon nearly 400 of the male population of Granger county was in Rutledge. About noon the jail was broken open and the prisoner taken out and hanged. The hanging was as orderly as a legal execution.

OUR NAVY MOURNS.

Admiral Kimberly Confirms the Sad News of the Terrible Disater at Samoa.

WASHINGTON, March, 30.—The following cable message was received at the navy department this morning:

Auckland, March 30.—Secretary of the Navy, Washington: Hurricane at Apia, March 15. Every vessel in the harbor went on shore except the English man-of-war Calliope, which got to sea. The Trenton and Vandalia are total losses. The Nipsic was beached. Her rubber is gone, but she may be saved. The chances are all against it. Will send her to Auckland if possible. The Vandalia lost four officers and thirty-nine men. The Nipsic lost seven men.

All were saved from Trenton. The Trenton and Vandalia crews are ashore. The Nipsic's on board. All stores possible were saved. The German ships Adler and Eber are total losses. The Olga was beached, but may be saved. The German losses are ninety-six. It is important to send 300 men home at once. Shall I charter a steamer? Can charter in Auckland. Lieut. Wilson will remain in Auckland to obey your orders. Fuller accounts by mail. KIMBERLY.

THE LOST OFFICERS.

As soon as the confirmation of the news of the wreck of the war ships in Apia harbor was received by Secretary Tracy, he sent telegrams to the relatives of the dead officers of the Vandalia informing them of the sad affair. The dispatch concerning Capt. Schoonmaker was sent to his widow at Kingston, N. Y., where his brother, Judge Schoonmaker, of the interstate commerce commission, also resides. Capt. Schoonmaker entered the navy from New York as acting midshipman, Sept. 28, 1854. He was made midshipman in June, 1859, and successively passed through the grades of passed midshipman, master, lieutenant commander and captain. He was promoted to the last named position on Oct. 7, 1886, and on Oct. 5, 1888, was placed in command of the Vandalia. Lieutenant of Marines Francis E. Sutton was appointed to the naval academy from New York in 1877. He graduated six in a class of 96, and after a cruise returned to the academy for examination for promotion and passed second. On his own application he was appointed second lieutenant of marines being the first graduate of Annapolis to enter the marine force. He was promoted to first lieutenant March 9, 1888, and has been stationed at Mare Island. He had just been detailed to command the marine guard of the Mohican, but the Vandalia sailing suddenly for Samoa, before the arrival of her commanding marine officer, Lieut. Sutton took his place, expecting to fall in with the Mohican on the cruise. His father is a resident of Rome, N. Y. At the navy department Lieut. Sutton is regarded as having been one of the brightest and most intelligent officers of the marine corps; and his loss is greatly deplored. Paymaster Arms was appointed from Connecticut in 1864, and he has been on duty on the Vandalia since May, 1887. His family reside at the Crawford house, New London. Paymaster's clerk, John Roche, was appointed from Ilion, N. Y. He was twenty-eight years of age and a man of athletic build. His nearest relative is J. Jeffrey Roche, who is a poet and assistant editor of the Boston Pilot.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

LONDON, March 31. Further particulars of the disastrous storm at Apia have just been received. The hurricane burst upon the harbor suddenly. The German man-of-war Eber was the first vessel to drag her anchor. She became unmanageable and was driven helplessly on the reef which runs around the harbor. She struck broadside on. The shock caused her to lurch and to stagger back, and she sank in a moment in deep water. Most of her men were under hatches, and scarcely a soul of them escaped. The German war ship Adler was the next to succumb. She was lifted bodily by a gigantic wave and cast on her beam ends on the reef. A terrible struggle for life ensued among the officers and sailors aboard. Many plunged into the raging surf and struck out, some reaching the shore in safety. Others clung to the rigging until the masts fell. Of those in the rigging only two gained the shore. The captain of the Adler and several other officers were saved. Meantime the U. S. S. Nipsic had been dragging her anchors and drifting toward the shore. The captain, however, managed to keep control and ran her on a sand bank. Boats were immediately lowered and the whole company were saved, with the exception of six men. These were drowned by the capsizing of a boat. The U. S. S. Vandalia was carried before the gale right upon the reef. She struck with a terrible shock, hurling the caption against a gatling gun and he fell stunned. Before he could recover a great wave swept the deck and washed him and others away into the sea. The vessel sank fifty yards from the Nipsic, and several of the officers and men went down with her. Others perished while making desperate efforts to swim to the shore. Some of the ship's company tried to save themselves by clinging to the rigging, but heavy and swift running waves dashed over them, and one by one they were swept away. By this time night had set in. Many natives and Europeans had gathered on the shore, all anxious to render assistance to the unfortunate crews, but owing to the darkness they were wholly unable to be of service. Soon after the Vandalia had sunk the American war ship Trenton broke from her anchorage and was driven upon the wreck of the Vandalia, whence she drifted to the shore. The bottom of the Trenton was completely stove and her hold was half full of water. As morning broke the German man-of-war Olga, which had hitherto withstood the gale, although much battered by the heavy seas that constantly broke upon her, became unmanageable and was driven upon the beach, where she lay in a tolerably favorably position. The following is a record of the officers and men lost:

Eber—The captain and all other officers except one, and seventy-six men.

Vandalia—The captain, four officers and forty men.

Nipsic—Seven men.

Adler—Altogether fifteen persons.

Mataafa sent a number of his men to the assistance of the wrecked ships. They rendered splendid aid in trying to float the Olga.

Requirements of a Sexton.

Baltimore News.

"As one who has considerable experience with sextons, I can say that it requires as much talent, or rather adaptation for the business, to be a good sexton as it does to be a minister," remarked one of the ministers at the recent M. E. conference at Grace church to the scribe who was industriously noting down its proceedings. "When the man is suited for the position everything moves like clockwork, and the church has a treasure. But the church is not always so blessed. There is the fidgety sexton. He is always doing something to unnecessarily attract attention. When the minister is in the middle of his discourse, and all eyes and ears are fixed on him, up starts the sexton from the other end of the church to march up the middle aisle. He distracts everybody, even the minister himself, and everybody wonders what it is all about, but nobody will ever know. He don't know himself. Then there is the lazy sexton. He hangs about the vestibule during service, and is never on hand when wanted. People are not seated, and they go away complaining about the management of the church. The good sexton is one of the strongest pillars of the church. He has it in his power to make the church popular by the attention he shows to strangers as well as to the members. If he is a little vain and proud of his position, so much the better. It does not hurt any man to have some pride in his position. Take it all in all, the position of sexton in our modern church is much more important than most persons imagine."

Minnesota Legislature.

MONDAY, APRIL 1.

SENATE.—The senate judiciary committee will again tackle the Duluth & Winnipeg question if present plans are carried out. The forfeiture bill comes up in the committee as a special order.

The delegation of senators that made a friendly call on the Badger state legislature last week have not finished talking over the incidents of the trip yet. According to accounts they had a right jolly time on the way down to Madison and while in that capital were the recipients of every possible attention at the hands of the Wisconsin lawmakers.

HOUSE.—Petitions were presented from Red Wing, Winona and other places remonstrating against the passages of the meat inspection bill, while two petitions were presented praying that it be passed.

The senate amendment to the bill requiring each town in Stevens county to support its own poor, by applying its provisions to Grant county, was concurred in by the house.

Judge Fleming's bill prohibiting the playing of pool or billiards in saloons by minors came back from the senate with an unimportant amendment, which was concurred in, and the bill was then passed.

TUESDAY, APRIL 2.

SENATE.—The senators had their say and vote on Mr. Scheffer's inspection-before-slaughter bill. The measure came up in the senate as a special order, and was tackled vigorously and with a determined will on both sides of the question. And the bill as amended was passed by a vote of 33 to 7. The announcement of the vote was received with a round of applause by the lobby, and the sergeant-at-arms was called on to restore order. The debate had taken all the time, recess excepted, from 10:30 in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and while it was going on the galleries and floor were filled with spectators.

HOUSE.—The question of abolishing capital punishment bobbed up again yesterday when the house went into the committee of the whole, and the bill was finally lost, yeas 27, nays 41.

The House votes by a large majority to indefinitely postpone the bill extending the terms of county officers.

Mr. Keyes election law came up at the conclusion of the capital punishment debate, and after some debate, was made the special order for Thursday.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3.

SENATE.—The senate finished tinkering up the general appropriation bill and carried it through its final passage. The amendments that have been agreed upon increase the total amount of appropriations for state institutions from $260,750 to $295,750, and miscellaneous appropriations, a trifle—between $200 and $300—while the current expense list is not disturbed.

When the Red river drainage bill came up for debate in the senate, Mr. Day moved its reference to the committee on roads and bridges, to be considered in connection with several other measures appropriating money. The bill gave rise to general debate, and was then referred to the financial committee.

The bill to prevent the adulteration of dairy products was passed after an amendment had been tacked on providing that skim milk offered for sale shall be labeled and sold as skim milk.

HOUSE.—The apportionment bill came up, was argued and discussed and finally passed by a vote of 65 for to 29 against.

Mr. Stebbins' bill fixing the salaries of members and employes of the legislature came back from the judiciary committee with an unfavorable report, but on the motion of the author it was placed on general orders with the report. Mr. Smout's bill to provide a ballot box at the next election for an informal vote on the prohibition and high license question was treated in a similar manner by the committee on elections, but the same course was pursued in the house. The bills to organize Sheridan county and to detach Cass county from Crow Wing and to attach it to the new county, were indefinitely postponed, as was the bill to organize Itasca county. The bill to regulate the election of the clerks of courts was recommended to pass, as was the bill introduced by Mr. C. R. Davis, allowing liquor licenses to be transferred. The Eastman bill, calling for commissioners to report a simpler method of dealing in land, was indefinitely postponed.

THURSDAY, APRIL 4.

SENATE:—Mr. Durant's civil service bill had an inning in the senate but will be further considered before it is acted upon. The bill enacts a law similar to that in force in Massachusetts and New York.

A Skirmish and pitched battle took place over the third regiment appropriation bill, which was finally recommended to pass.

Mr. Hixon put in a resolution in the senate providing for the appointment of a committee of three to call on the regents of the state university and ascertain from them what disposition has been made of the Hatch fund. The president appointed as such committee Messrs. Hixon, Leode and Gibson. The Hatch fund is a fund amounting to $30,000, received from the national government to aid in the maintenance of an agricultural experimental station. Mr. Hixon, interviewed in relation to his resolution, stated that he had heard that a portion of this money had been expended in the erection of the school house on the agricultural farm. He knew nothing about the matter personally and had no charges to make, but he believed the people of the state had a right to know what disposition had been made of the money.

HOUSE—The bill reducing the fees of the clerks of district courts was recommended for passage, with an amendment excepting the counties of Ramsey, Hennepin and St. Louis. The bill to except the Labor temple at Minneapolis from taxation was recommended for indefinite postponement as unconstitutional.

The house judiciary committee decided last night by a vote of 8 to 6 to recommend that the Scheffer meat inspection bill be indefinitely postponed, on the ground of its unconstitutionality.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5.

SENATE.—Mr. Keller presented his report on the twine trust in the senate. The gentleman comes to the conclusion, after a thorough investigation, that the twine trust is a myth: that it has no existence except in the imagination of people. The rise in the price of binding twine he finds is due to natural causes—chiefly to the scarcity of the raw material. The gentleman gives interesting facts and figures; and in conclusion calls attention to the new process for manufacturing twine, from the fiber of certain weeds. The encouragement by the farmers of this state of the new industry, he suggests, may result in securing lower prices.

HOUSE.—Mr. Hoy's bill providing that a grand jury shall consist of 7 to 11 jurymen will have to be repealed. It passed both houses and received the governor's signature some time ago. But now, having been put all the way through the legislative mill, incidentally receiving the endorsement of several lawyers, it is found to be unconstitutional.

The Keyes election bill came up in a new shape yesterday, when Mr. H. F. Stevens moved that the bill be withdrawn from the committee of the whole and referred to a special committee of five, to so amend the bill as to remove its objectionable features. Mr. Eastman at first opposed the motion, and Mr. Morgan thought it was simply deferring the day of judgment. Judge Fleming explained that the friends of the bill were willing to concede something, if by so doing they could secure the main point of secrecy of the ballot. The motion was then carried, and the speaker named as the committee Messrs. Keyes, Fleming, Searle, Jacobson and H. F. Stevens. The bill is safe in the hands of this committee, as Messrs. Keyes, Fleming and Stevens are strongly in favor of it.

Col. Richard Long, treasurer and general manager of Long's Truss Rail Joint company, of Chicago was run over by a train and fatally injured at Pittsburg. He was the inventor of truss rail joint that has been adopted by a number of leading railroad companies. He left Chicago March 18, and was about to take the train for home when the accident occurred. He has resided in Chicago for about two years. His home is in Columbus, Ohio. He is a widower, without children, and is about fifty years of age. Col. Long had command of the Seventy-third Ohio regiment during the Rebellion, and served under Gen. Fremont. He gained historical prominence by capturing Belle Boyd, the notorious rebel spy.

WEST FOSSTON

IS THE

CHICAGO OF THE NORTHWEST.

NEXT WEEK

WE WILL TELL YOU

WHY!

CROCKSTON, Minn., Apr. 4, 1889.

ED. JOURNAL: County officers all expect a little roasting through the papers and consequently they don't care much. The Times is a professional roaster and consequently no one minds it much, neither will I, though I wish to explain a short article in its issue of March 30th. In it our sheriff is attacked under cover of an invective against Representative Roberts, and according to it the two have engaged in a gigantic steal. The editor of the Times is surprisingly ignorant in regard to this, by no means new subject. He seems to have overlooked the fact that the matter has twice been in our courts, and that Judge Mills in his charge to the jury strongly insisted upon the right of the sheriff to charge mileage upon each and every tax certificate he might have, be it one or a thousand miles, but owing to a defect in our statute these could not be collected from the county in cases where no collection could be made by law without the special act which lately passed the house. Judge Stearns advised W. F. Zwickey to get such a bill passed. This was done and Zwickey got his money. The bill is identical with bills passed by the majority of counties throughout the state, and it does not, as the Times states, authorize the payment for work not done or collections not made, but simply for services rendered as required by law. Whether Mr. Paulsrud has overcharged in this matter is not for me to say, but this I will say that his bill is in the neighborhood of $400, while Zwickey's bill for services of like nature was more than $800. It would be well for the editor of the Times, if he has any regard for the truth (?) to look things up a little before he speaks.

Respectfully,
ARNY GRUNDYSON.

Kittson County Enterprise: Gov. W. R. Merriam soon forgets political favors, and the old adage "out of sight, out of mind" is very appropos. George J. McManus of Crookston was one of the hardest workers and most ardent supporters of Mr. Merriam throughout the Red River Valley and this last winter made bold to ask for the office of surveyor general, backed by thousands of the best republicans of the state. Then there was Hugh Thompson of Fisher who came to Hallock and talked McGill for governor until he was hoarse, he rakes in the persimmons of surveyor generalship while the man who did the work and paid hundreds of dollars out of his own pocket gets nothing. Consistency, thou art a jewel.

Grading Up.

Philadelphia Record.

The average yield of the milch cows is so small compared with what it should be as to make it surprising that dairymen succeed at all; but their success is not from the milk sold, but from the manure made and increased fertility of the farms. This annual increase of value may not be apparent, but it is demonstrated in a few years, as the cows not only produce milk to be sold but contribute to the growth of crops. The curse of the dairymen is their failure to recognize the fact that they must raise their cows and breed for the kind best suited for yielding milk, instead of attending sales to purchase cows and selling off their calves. Many farmers will not believe that individual cows of the best milking strains have yielded over forty quarts of milk per day, yet it is true, as is well known with the Holsteins, and it is admitted that but few cows will produce so largely, but the fact that well bred cows can be made to perform such service should stimulate the dairymen to discard all animals but pure breeds or grades.

Dairymen would make large profits if each cow in the herd should yield twenty quarts of milk per day during her milking period, as the average is not one half that quantity in dairies, and yet the herd can be made to give twenty quarts per cow by careful breeding and judicious management. But if only fifteen quarts should be obtained it would amount to a large difference for a herd in a year, compared with the quantity got from mongrel cows. Large yields permit of the keeping of fewer cows to obtain the same results as from former yields, while the care and work are lessened. The milk business is laborious, calling for work from early in the morning until into the night, with no cessation on Sundays, and the only way to be amply rewarded is to grade up the herd by the use of pure bred males.

Bolstering the Trust.

A Paper Which Appears to be a Binding Twine Circular.

Special to the Globe.

Forestville, Minn., April 3.—Every farmer of the Northwest is being flooded with copies of the Sunday Courier, a paper which purports to be published in New York, but which seems to be really a circular in the interest of the binding twine trust. These papers have fallen in showers throughout this and adjoining counties and the evident intent is to convince the farmers that there is no trust in binding twine, and that on the contrary the increase is due solely to the growth of the wheat industry and the general use into which the binder has come. All of this paper is made of "plate" except the series of articles on the question of hemp and seed grass and an insolent editoral which assumes the Northwestern farmer is an ignoramus and is suspicious of trust, without an atom of foundation. The paper is an insult to the intelligence of the farmers of the Northwest and its object too transparent to deceive.

Interest on Public Money.

The Western Rural.

The people at large are not aware of the immense sum of money they anally lose as the result of getting no interest upon the moneys which are paid in taxes and not immediately paid out. In some cases the treasurer gets the interest; in other cases it is deposited in banks and they get the interest. The city council of Chicago has just passed an ordinance making it obligatory upon the city treasurer to deposit the public money where he may be directed by the council, and permit it to draw interest for the people. It is an excellent move and suggestive to other towns, to the State and the Nation. The public money is the people's money and no individual has any more right to pocket the interest upon it than he has to pick the citizen's pocket. Who is drawing interest on the money in your town, reader, or in your State? Some of the banks are drawing it on a big pile of the national funds.

Profanity.

The Western Rural.

Why do you swear, friend? It does you no good and it does nobody else any good. It does not make you think more of yourself and we assure you that it makes nobody else think more of you. If you believe in a God who created you, to take his name in vain, is as if you should treat your father with contempt and ridicule, and a son who would do that is utterly unworthy of respect and confidence. If you do not believe in a God your profanity is meaningless gibberish, like the chattering of a monkey. Down in the purlieus of vice, where manhood is utterly sunk into the brute, we presume that profanity rolls from the lips of the degraded, without the slightest effect upon the besotted men and women who hear it. But the moment you step out from amidst such horrible surrounding, profanity becomes disgusting to those who are compelled to listen to it. A profane man himself dislikes to hear gross profanity in another and actually despises lowdown profanity in others. We can understand why men may be addicted to any vice except this. But the man who would attempt to offer a reason for being profane would be a fit subject for a lunatic asylum. It is a low-down, meaningless habit, except that it means the profane man is an unmitigated nuisance among men who make use of language to convey ideas.

The Whitney Carriage

Is the best in the market. There can be no doubt about this as that large array of Whitney carriages received by Herb Mason a few days ago—Where are they? All sold but a half dozen of the cheaper ones and an order has gone east for another lot, expected about April 20th. Meantime if you want a GOOD buggy for a medium price call on Herb. Substantial, durable, neat and cozy, they are just the thing for the average Polk County infant to enjoy the spring time of life in.

FOUE NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication March 28th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of that certain mortgage made, executed and delived by Clement A. Brown and J. F. Brown, her husband, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 19th day of April, A. D. 1887, and duly recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of April, 1887, at 1:40 o'clock p. m., in book 35 of mortgages, on pages 441 to 445 inclusive. And the said default having continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared to be due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of said default and declaration aforesaid there is claimed to be due, and is due and payable on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of sixteen hundred forty and 60-100 (1640.60) dollars, and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise have been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: Lots three (3) and four (4) of Section four (4), and lot one (1) of section five (5) all in township one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range forty-four (44), and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter (sw¼ of the sw¼) of Section thirty-three, (33) in Township one hundred and forty-eight, (148) Range forty-four, (44) containing in all one hundred and fifty-six (156) acres more or less according to the United States government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest and twenty-five (25) dollars attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage, to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of the County of Polk in the State of Minnesota, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 13th day of May, A. D. 1889, at the hour of two o'clock p. m., subject to redemption at any time within one year in manner provided by law.

The Sugar Trust.

The Western Rural,

As villainous a trust as we have to contend with is the sugar trust. It is reported that the issued capital of the trust is $35,000,000, and that there will remain after the present stock dividend some $10,000,000 to be given away later, and on this prospect 150 to 200 is predicted for the stock. The other report, and it comes from a President of a suger refinery now in the trust, is this: He says the capital of the trust is $50,000,000, all of which was apportioned among the companies embraced in the trust. These companies, or the share-holders of the same, returned fifteen per cent of the amounts received —$7,500,000—to the trust treasury, to be used in absorbing the Portland and other refineries. Several refineries have been absorbed by the use of a portion of this stock and by cash payments from earnings, and the trust now distributes eight per cent, or $4,000,000 stock, which makes the authorized and outstanding capital the same—to wit: $50,000,000. And all this capital and the impudence and conscienceless greed, behind it, are being used to rob the American people. Not only is the price of sugar high under manipulation but it is not pure sugar. The farmer is compelled to sell his corn at a low price, and this conspiracy of robbery turns the cheap corn into glucose with which to adulterate the sugar that it sells back to the farmer at a high price. It would be a good plan to apply to this trust a little of the medicine that we are administering to the twine trust. If the farmers would refuse to use trust sugar, or if they use it with the strictest economy, the result would be felt. In addition to this more attention should be given to the growing of sorghum. While it is true that the manufacture of sugar from sorghum has not generally proved profitable in the North, it might be profitable enough as a club to beat the life out of this trust. We advise farmers to try the sorghum plant. Seed can be had of the seedsmen and no doubt from some farmers.

The Man of Judgment.

The Western Rural.

Good judgment is a good thing. It is excellent capital for a man to possess. But there is a great difference between the Simon-pure article and that which a man often beleives he possesses. Men are sometimes deceived into the belief that their stubbornness is good judgment. We have seen men who set what they called their judgment against the judgment of scores of men, and without knowing it, they exhibited the monstrous and disgusting egotism of absolutely refusing to yield their "judgment" to the judgment of the many. Ordinarily when a large number of men calmly reach a conclusion, it may be safely assumed that they have reached a sounder conclusion than some energetic kicker has reached, and he ought to have sense enough to see it. But unfortunately the stubbornness of human nature often so blinds men that they cannot see themselves as others see them. The disturbances in organizations' churches, etc., is ordinarily the result of the few refusing to submit to the judgment of the many, and the very first duty that any person who goes into an organization should recognize is to quietly and gracefully submit to the will of the majority. It is right, and it will save a world of truble in the aggregate.

Northwestern Agriculturist: Up to a certain point the value of any crop is balanced by the cost of production and there is no profit, but every bushel beyond that point is profit. Double the crop and you make one hundred per cent profit. This is where the profit comes in on all farm operations, if it comes at all, and the careful farmer who puts in his crops well, and gathers them in a timely harvest, is sure to get ahead of his shiftless neighbor in the long run.

Northwestern Agriculturist: One of the drawbacks of a new country is the lack of good roads, and yet it is an easy matter to make first class all-the-year-round roads on the prairie, with the new road machines. When a good road bed is once made, a few days work devoted to repairs will keep it good. One of the requirements of road repairing should be cutting weeds on the roadsides and burning them to prevent their seeds being scattered by the winds to adjacent farms.

Address of Mayor Lilly.

TO THE HONORABLE, THE PRESIDENT AND CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CROOKSTON.

GENTLEMEN:—Following the custom of my predecessors and the directions contained in the city charter, I have the honor to submit for your consideration, certain information and recommendations which a brief inspection suggests as pertinent and timely, in view of the present condition of affairs in our city. First as to the state of our FINANCES.

The report of the city treasurer of March 19th, gives the total receipts for the year up to that date into the general fund at $16,119.10 and the total disbursements from said fund at $21,741.94. As the fiscal year ends on the last day of March these amounts are necessarily incomplete, there having been received into said fund from various sources since said date and prior to April 1st the sum of $1,563.65 making the total receipts into the geneal fund for the entire year $17,672 75. The amount, $21,741.94 is also subject to some modifications as showing the running expenses of the city, for of this sum $3,561.70 was expended in the purchase of ground and improvements on city hall property, $266.15 for water pipes and hydrants. These being in the nature of permanent improvements their cost may properly be deducted for the purpose of showing the actual current expenses. Referring again to the report of the treasurer and also to that of the financial committee; these reports do not show what portion of the amount expended on streets, (which was paid out of the general fund) was used in the construction of sidewalks and repairs, which is or will be taxed against the abutting property and ultimately returned into the general fund. Section 6, chapter VIII, of the city charter, provides that "the street commissioner shall keep accurate account of all his work and expenditures and make detailed and itemized report thereof to the city council at least once in every two months, and oftener, if ordered by the council." So far as appears from the published reports, it might reasonably be inferred that this provision of the charter has not been complied with, and in this connection I would suggest to the consideration of the council the expediency of consolidating the office of street commissioner with that of city engineer. This arrangement is supported by the fact that the office of city engineer is one created by the charter, while that of street commissioner is left to the discretion of the council. By the terms of the charter the city engineer is required to keep an office in a convenient place in the city, and the reports show that his entire compensation for the past fiscal year was less than $300. I would recommend that he be given entire charge of all public and street work and that he be paid a salary commensurate with the labor and skill required.

But to return to the subject of the finances: The report of the finance committee discloses the further fact that there are bills amounting to several hundred dollars now before the council and not acted upon on account of a lack of funds to pay them. From the best information obtainable it appears that the disbursements for the running expenses for the year just past, have exceeded the receipts into the general fund, and that the excess of bills for which orders have been issued has been paid with monies borrowed from other funds of the city. I have thought it not improper to lay these facts before the council, as the situation would seem to suggest retrenchment in some of the departments of the municipal government. Owing to the pressure of other duties I have necessarily omitted many subjects to which I may direct your attention hereafter Prominent among these is that of the necessity for a proper classification of accounts, and the proper disposition of the monies belonging to the sinking fund. To most of you however these subjects are as familiar as to myself. It can hardly be considered a reflection upon former councils, that confusion exists in some of the departments of our governmental system. The growing needs of our city necessitated the enacting of a new charter in 1885, and the four years that have elapsed have not been sufficient to make plain all that was obscure, nor to remove all the evils which the new system was designed to cure. It is only by patient, earnest effort that we will be able to bring our municipal affairs to anything like a perfect system, and your honorable body, will, I have no doubt set zealously to work for the material advancement and well being of those whose interests you have been elected to subserve. Trusting that our communications may be always of the most pleasant nature and that our efforts for the good of our fellow citizens may be crowned with success. I have the honor to be

Your obedient servant,
JAMES W. LILLY.

Nothwestern Agriculturist The farmer does not handle so much money in a year as the business or professional man but on the average as much of the money stays with him. He is independent. The farm is the grandest and best place for the family. The town children are an expense, and idleness brings the boys especially to ruin. On the farm all help and are taught habits of industry which make them self-reliant men and women in after life. In the city boys and girls are generally ciphers so far as helping maintain the family is concerned. In the country, both aid in developing the possibilities of the farm as property. And both boys and girls who learn these lessons of helpfulness early, have taken the first correct steps in life, and are not likely to go wrong afterwards.

Can Frosted Seed be Relied On?

The Northwestern Agriculturist.

This is now a question of immense importance. There are millions of bushels of wheat, that must be sold for a low price as feed which, if good as seed, would save frost injured farmers large sums if they can be used with a reasonable degree of confidence to seed the crop of 1889.

The experience of many farmers are very encouraging. All over Northern Dakota and Manitoba, well attested examples might be found of "hard up" farmers who in 1883 and 1885 could only afford to buy in small quantities the No. 1 hard at $1 or more a bushel which they would have liked to use. Under the pressure of necessity they sowed their own badly damaged grain worth at a distant town from 15 to 25 cents a bushel. They sow a half more sometimes double the quantity, of that seed per acre that they did of the choice seed they brought in, and I know that many of them reaped as good grain from that rubbish as after the high price seed. I kept till middle of last summer a sample of 12 cent wheat from which such results were got in 1886, in a badly frosted district in the Pembina Mountain. I give here two illustrative examples:

R. G. O. Malley, M. P. P., for Lorne Manitoba, had a large field of wheat on flat rich soil, that got ruinously frosted in the fall of 1885. He burnt it off because anything that was on it would not pay for collecting. The land lay untilled and a volunteer crop that grew from the seed shed before burning, was also frozen next fall. That shed seed enough to start a second volunteer crop from which a fifteen bushel crop of good wheat was harvested next season. This section of country has large patches of luxuriant vegetable mould, and being too full of growth is specially liable to frost, but equally favorable to free plant growth which explains this free growth of volunteer grain twice over on the same ground.

At Crystal City, Manitoba, Mr. McKay sowed some years since 100 acres of wheat the seed so poor that it was scarcely worth hauling to the nearest market. A neighbor who told me this case, took home a sample from the seed bag on the field, found 58 per cent, germinate in a warm box on his own window sill, and watched the result. He says the result was a rather better crop than that from 1 hard, a few bushels of which was sown in the same field. This was a "stretcher," and I have since cross questioned Mr. McKay himself, who entirely corroborated the story and told me further that having still a lot of the old stuff on hand he sowed it a second year with entirely satisfactory results.

The Bathgate "Democrat" published a similar case which occurred in Pembina county, Dakota, showing that where seed has been so frosted as to be of very low milling value, and will germinate from 40 to 60 grains out of every 100 tested, you may, by sowing double the quantity needed of first rate seed for an acre, be pretty certain of a good thrifty crop provided the spring season is any way decent.

It is very like a tempting of providence to sow some of the seed that I have seen used by poor homesteaders, who had land lying ready for seeding and not a dollar to buy better seed. What I am quite sure of is that, that frosted stuff has done well in hundreds of cases and is quite likely to do so again. But it should be tested before being used. Either send a small sample of it by post to the experimental Farm at St. Anthony Park, or at Brookings, Dakota, where they will be tested for you for percentage of vitality, free of cost, or try them in a warm house for a week between two folds of damp flannel or cotton batting. Try an average sample of your grain say from 40 to 70 grains, if half grow, you may trust it in the field.

This year's damaged grain needs to be very sharply looked after, for much of the damage charged to frost, was actually done by blight, the result of a hot wave from the South, or rust, which the rains of June, and following heat did very much to aggravate. If your seed was first blighted and then frosted, it may be found that a good deal of wheat that has not germinated was more weakened by blight than frost. I believe in frozen wheat I would be very cautious where smut, blight and rust have all had a share in lowering the vitality.

Frozen oats and barley you should be very shy of doing much with. I believe that bad handling subsequent to the frost is to blame for some of the poor results from frosted seed grain. It is carelessly harvested and threshed, then thrown damp into a granary. A little heat will ruin the best seed ever raised and I counsel farmers to test most thoroughly seed that has apparently got little harm from frost. Don't sow any oats or barley this year till they have been carefully tested. Frost or damp or heat it matters not but if you are not watchful, you will get taken in with samples of both oats and barley that appear to have nothing amiss with them. Test the very best looking samples almost as carfully as meaner ones. OLD HAND.

Northwestern Agriculturist: In managing the farm, so many things need doing, that most of us attempt too much and as a consequence do nothing well. The only successful way is to do only one thing at a time and to do that well to the finish. A half finished job might as well not have been begun. Take tasks that may be completed in the time at command when it is possible to choose, and carry them through to the end. With that off your mind you will begin the next with more courage and will make better progress. The state of the mind has a good deal to do with the progress of any kind of work, and one job well-finished leaves mind as well as hand ready for the next.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., APRIL 18 1889.

'Round Home.

No. 1 Hard wheat 82.

W. N. Godfrey was down from Maple Bay on Tuesday.

Mrs. Casper Sands returned on Sunday morning from a visit to St. Paul of two weeks' duration.

Governor Merriam, attended by his staff, will visit New York to observe the centennial inauguration ceremonies.

John Hunter came down from Maple Bay on Tuesday, en route for St. Paul where he goes to look after the interests of his patent switch.

Herb says that during the dry discussion pending the voting on the bonds he can supply the thirsty crowd with Dr. Bowker's celebrated Birch Beer; the most healthy drink in the market.

Mr. E. M. Halleckson died at the residence of his parents at Maple Bay, on Monday night about 12 o'clock of quick consumption. Mr. H. was a merchant and the postmaster, unmarried, about 30 years old.

Fertile Journal: We notice that nearly all the farmers who come to town take home creamery cans with them. Indications are that the creamery will be liberally patronized. The farmers evidently know a good thing when they see it.

Mrs. J. B. Copeland and family left on Wednesday morning for their suburban residence at York, N. D., whither the conductor preceded them on Monday to build the residence. Their many sympathizing friends in the city will unite with THE JOURNAL in wishing them a very pleasant summer on the claim and a safe return in the fall.

Personally, Mr. Roberts was not in favor of the meat inspection bill as first presented, but being deluged by petitions from his constituents requesting him to favor it, he did so, after seeing the $2 fee clause, and one or two other objectionable clauses amended. He has not been in the Legislature long enough to get the idea that he knows more than anybody else yet, and he is not the kind of a man to get the big head, anyhow. None but an ignoramus is liable to an attack of that kind.

At the banquet on Thursday evening, when Col. Kerr mounted the table to respond to a toast, Mr. Sampson, who sat next the writer, said with great enthusiasm: "Look on that man, that is Col. Kerr, the man that drew up my bonding bill. He knows more than every damphool in Crookston and YET your council rejects that bill! I cannot see how they could expect a more carefully worded bill than that was, drawn up by the smartest man in the state and advocated by—me. I don't know what greater safeguards could reasonably be asked!"

It was our pleasure to attend the banquet, given to the members of the Legislature and the State officers; though given by the common council of St. Paul, it was by no means a common banquet. Six long tables filled the capacious dining hall and ladies' ordinary of the Merchants' to which it is estimated over 600 guests sat down to do ample justice to the many good things set forth between 9 o'clock and 12. The room was gaily decorated with banners and flowers, while beautiful bouquets adorned the tables and each guest was presented with a beautiful little buttonhole bouquet. (It is also said that the wine had a most excellent "bouquet," but of this the writer cannot affirm positively, being obliged to depend entirely on hearsay). All of the most notable men were present, including Sampson and Jim Hill. At 12 the speeches commenced and it was 3 or 4 a. m. when the orator wound up his talk, addressed chiefly to empty seats and wine bottles. It is said to have been the biggest event of the season in that line.

While in St. Paul last week we had a long talk with Senator Sampson on the subject of the Duluth & Winnipeg land grant. We told him that his action in the matter convinced the people of his district that he was in some way committed in the interest of the Manitoba road, so that he could not vote as they wish him to for the D. & W. Mr. Sampson assured us that he was not committed to that road, nor any other, that he was entirely independent and he would prove this to the people by his vote on the pending forfeiture bill then before the Senate. On Saturday the question came up in the Senate and Mr. Sampson left the hall, went as far as the street on the way to his boarding house and then weakened, went back and voted as he heretofore has done, with the enemies of the road and the people. If Mr. Sampson is not wholly owned and controlled by the Manitoba road, he is certainly in a very awkward and unfortunate position, as he certainly has all of the symptoms of a tool of that road. It is for the interest of the Manitoba road to prevent the building of the D. & W. and for the interest of the people in this country, particularly, to have it built. Mr. Sampson admitted to us that he is well aware that the large majority of his constituents desire him to support the road but he excuses himself from doing so by saying that he knows better what they need than they do. He says that if built, the D. & W. will build to Leech Lake, thence via Red Lake to Winnipeg, and not come into the Red River Valley at all. Well, suppose for the sake of argument this was true, would it not be better for us to have that country settled up and become profitable than to have it as it now is, a trackless wilderness? But his idea is wholly erroneous as can readily be seen when you consider that the very object of building the road is to obtain the most business, and the most business is to be had in the Red River Valley. Again, Mr. Sampson says he is opposed to taking these lands from the school fund and giving it to this road well knowing that if the rights of the D. & W. road are taken from them the land does not revert to the State, but should the legislature forfeit the rights of the D. & W., the Brainerd & Northwestern (the Manitoba road) then becomes the owner of them, and in no case will the schools get them. Mr. Sampson uses the very same line of argument used by the Manitoba company, and yet he seems surprised that some of his constituents regard him as one who has been bought up.

M. R. Brown went to St. Paul last week on a combined trip of business and pleasure.

Ladies do not fail to call and see the lovely new spring millinery goods at Mrs. I. U. Jennings.

C. A. Chiniquy spent the Sabbath in the city. Charlie is as good-natured and handsome as ever.

Warren Register: Misses Flanders and Alice Childs and Mr. Ernest Childs, of Crookston visited in Warren the fore part of this week.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings has rearranged her millinery rooms and received a large and new stock of spring and summer millinery which she will sell at her usually low prices. [52-1]

The only place in the city where you can find the famous Dr. Bowker's Birch Beer is at Herb's. Healthy, refreshing and not intoxicating. Try it once and you will take no other.

The creamery is now ready for the summer business. N. H. Fulton, who had charge of the St. Hilaire creamery last summer, will preside over its destinies for the season. The price paid for cream will be 14 cents to start with.

John Morqve came down from Sletten on Tuesday's train. He reports losses from prairie fires. Among them the loss of a house by Ole Dovery. Says he will sow much wheat this spring from which he hopes to realize a large crop.

Northfield News: Common justice demands that the Duluth & Winnipeg be given an extension of their land grant. They invested thousands in good faith and that section of country will never be developed without a railroad. The legislature should give them the time asked.

The refreshing showers of Monday made the grass start and the grain sprout in a way that is truly surprising. Probably more than one-half of the seed grain was in the ground last Saturday night, and this week will see it all in. None will regret the loss of a few hours by Monday's rain as the benefits derived therefrom and more than commensurate for the delay.

The Northfield News came to us last week clothed in an entire new dress—an evidence that the News is enjoying a prosperous business, gratifying to its friends. Mr. Heatwole is one of those genial, wholesouled, broad minded men for whom nothing attainable is too good—a man who has hosts of friends and believes in sticking to them through thick and thin, and is well worthy the success he is attaining in his profession. One of these days the people will all know him better.

Ex-mayor J. S. Eshelman was buried at Grand Forks on Monday with Masonic honors. Mr. E. was one of the men who helped to make the city of Grand Forks what it is. Coming in an early day he found employment as a roustabout on one of the river boats; later he formed a partnership with Mr. Budge, at Turtle River, removing eventually to Grand Forks and going into business there. He was ever known as a wide-awake, energetic, business man and had acquired a competency. Not long since he went to Hot Springs, Ark., for his health where he was taken down with paralysis and died. Grand Forks mourns the loss of one of its foremost citizens.

The meat inspection bill passed the House on Friday by a good majority. It was vigously opposed by the Farmers' Alliance, while, on the other hand, it was supported by petitions signed by very many prominent farmers and others. It is claimed for it by its friends that it will have a tendency to exclude Chicago beef, thus giving the market here to home production. It is said that it will benefit us here by the exclusion of Montana beef that comes to us in the shape of steers that through weakness by disease, or some other cause, have got down in the cars and so badly injured as to make it unsafe to try to ship them to Chicago. Heretofore such animals have been sold for beef in this market at whatever price they would bring, and the public takes its chances on the health of the animal. It may also have a tendency to remind some good honest farmer that it is not quite honest to sell pork that is rendered unfit to eat through disease, which fact he might have innocently overlooked only for the law which makes his crime punishable. It may be that without this law no farmer in this county would be dishonest enough to try to sell diseased pork; however that may be, under this law he don't have to, the temptation, if not removed, is not so great, as that little imprisonment business will reach even the poorest debtor whom honor nor judgments cannot phase. Taken as a whole we can see no good reason for not giving the law a fair trial.

In Mr. Roberts the district has a man of whom it can well feel proud and his course in the house has been one to win him lots of friends. Careful and conservative he is ever on the alert looking after the interests of his constituents and any errors he may have committed were honestly done. His whole aim is to represent the people, he has worked hard to that end and no amount of money could cause him to swerve from his purpose to act for their highest good. He does not stubbornly set up his will against the wishes of his constituents, thus assuming that he knows more than the whole country, (and forcing the country to suffer from his lack of judgment) but he first tries to ascertain the wishes of his constituents and then tries to carry out those wishes to the letter. In his action on the Duluth & Winnipeg matter he is deserving of very great credit, for he has worked early and late for the people's interests and it is largely due to his individual efforts that the road went through the house in such good shape. If Mr. Sampson in the senate had been as faithful to the people's interests as was Mr. Roberts in the House there is no doubt but that the grant would have been extended and road would have reached the Red River Valley inside of 18 months. Mr. Roberts' efforts to build up his country by building this road, will be a lasting monument of honor to his name while Sampson's will be to him an everlasting shaft of infamy. To him will belong the unenviable reputation of having defeated the grandest improvement ever offered this country. Again Mr. Roberts has been indefatigable in his efforts to secure the passage of his drainage bill and if it were a possibility to get a cent appropriated beyond the actual requirements of the running expenses of the government he would get it. If he has failed in anything it is due more to the fact that we have not members enough than to any other cause. He has done all he could.

On Dit.

That I. Fortier intends to quit the hotel business and go to Helena.

That E. LePage takes possession of the St. Louis house and will become a genial landlord.

That Assistant Sergant-at-arms Zwickey spent the Sabbath at home with his family.

That the wheat is nearly all in the ground and doing nicely.

That Herb has Birch Beer on tap.

That Penlope will be worth hearing. Try it and see.

That mayor Lilly takes hold of the reins of government with becoming grace and dignity.

That the bonds will be voted and Crookston have another road before snow flies.

That the building of the new road will make business lively and everybody happy.

That when postmaster McKinnon surrenders the wand of power to Dawley he may do so with the consciousness that Crookston never had a better postmaster.

That everybody votes "aye" on the bonds.

That Henry Wight has his eye on a consulship. Says, if sufficiently urged he might accept an appointment as consul to Sampson's Addition. We have been of the frequent opinion that Sampson's condition needs good counsel.

That seeding in the valley will be completed at least three weeks earlier than usual.

That Roberts' drainage bill was killed in the house on Monday, notwithstanding all the hard work he did for it. It will no doubt require another session and greater representation to obtain justice in these matters.

That G. H. Palmer goes about the street abstractedly singing "Peter, dear Peter, Oh, come-home-ah!" or something that sounds like that. It may be "Oklahoma," as that is one of the things now running in his head.

That the action of the council on the bond question may not be an unmitigated evil after all. Opposition often crystalizes forces and ensures success.

Have you tried Herb's Birch Beer?

There will be centenial anniversary services in Christ church on Apr. 30th.

Park Region Pioneer: The two oldest children of Robt. Lacy—Ella and Willie—came to the village last Saturday from their home in Rockstad, Polk County to make their father a visit.

When a boy you used to enjoy the birch? Well that depended wholly upon how it was administered. Try a dose of Birch that Herb mixes and if you don't like it you are too old for any use.

C. H. Saako was called to Tilden on Tuesday to examine a certain mysterious substance that is found on the farms of Jas. McNulty and J. G. Carroll which has been by some suspected to be as base a metal as gold. Mr. S. procured samples which when tested indicated the presence of gold so far as to warrant an assay being made and a sample was sent to Chicago for that purpose. Some pronounce the stuff mica and iron pyrites simply but the assay will decide the point.

The citizens of Crookston, their committee and the company formed by said committee all appear anxious to obtain the full worth of the $50,000 bonds to be issued and in the light of the facts we can see no reason why every obtainable safeguard possible to get should not be thrown around the proposition to vote the bonds. We think our people would hardly be satisfied with a road giving us less than Mr. Child's proposition contemplates and we can see no reason why the company could not give a guarantee that the attempt to secure it will be made.

A great deal of noise and confusion was experienced at the council meeting on Tuesday evening so that at times it was almost impossible to hear a speaker. A great deal of this noise is incident to the condition of the audience standing through a long session. The council might remedy this in a great degree if seats were furnished which might be done at a slight expense. On occasions like this the general public naturally like to listen to the proceedings and they should be gratified. Chairs could be furnished cheaply and when not needed could be put away in the rear room, or even plank would be a vast improvement. We would suggest to the council a trial of this plan to see if most of the complaint would not be done away with.

In his reply to our criticisms of last week the editor of the Chronicle entirely dodges the point and tries by insinuations that are wholly unworthy of the character he has sustained to besmirch our character. By methods that are too cowardly for a noble brave soldier to use he attempts to impeach our actions as a member of the state central committee. In reply we will simply say that the insinuation that our bills as member of that committee are unpaid is false in every particular. Our duties on that committee were faithfully performed in every particular and at an expense for which we have never been fully re-imbursed. Every dollar that ever came into our hands was expended under the direction of the state central committee, and the only reason we can imagine for Mr. McGrew's course is the fact that we would not misapply certains funds in our hands to pay the bill which he now says was ordered by McGuire. He presented that bill to us with the statement that "it was ordered by the authority of the state central committee, at a time when he know that we had a certain sum from the committee." We told him for what purpose the money was intended, showed him a letter containing explicit instructions, yet, in the face of all that he was unhappy because we would not dishonestly appropriate the committe's money to pay his bill (which he now says was ordered by P. J. McGuire.) If, as he says, the bill was ordered by P. J. McGuire and nobody else why did he present it to the state central committee to pay? We hold that he has far less just cause to kick than we but no one has yet heard a whimper out of us and we don't expect to burden the public that way.

Inconsistency.

In his reply to the communication of P. J. McGuire, the editor of the Chronicle says: "The arrangment was made with Mr. McGuire and we expected him to see that the bill was paid." Again in a personal attack upon the editor of THE JOURNAL in the same issue he says of the same work that he says McGuire ordered "and that even our bills for printing, ordered by the county central committee should not be paid!" The county central committee never, to our knowledge ordered a dollar's worth of printing of Bro. McGrew; who in one breath says McGuire ordered it and in the next that the county central committee did.

Bro. McGrew says that in our defence of the bosses we make a mistake of admitting that he rendered some faithful services in defence of the union. No, Bro. McGrew, you wrong us as wilfully in that as in your other charges, as wilfully as you do other of your friends who have honestly tried to help you in the past and why you take this stand we confess is a mystery to us. There was nothing malicious in our criticism of what we considered an unjust attack upon some of our personal friends and it did not call for the malicious and venomous reply you make. We are willing to give you every bit of the credit you deserve everywhere but we don't see why we should give you more than that because you were a soldier. If our memory serves us right we saw something of that struggle but we are not prepared to claim the earth for that reason.

Entertainment.

The entertainment to be given by the young people of the Presbyterian church, will be held in the Opera House, Tuesday evening, April 23d, commencing at 8 o'clock sharp, and will consist of two parts, as follows:

PART I.

Will be opened with instrumental music, followed by the exhibition of Mrs. Jolly's wax work—a most wonderful collection of figures, representing characters of renowned fame. The figures are supposed to contain machinery which, when wound up, will cause the figure to act and perform in a most laughable manner. After this, will be a beautiful trio, rendered by three young ladies; this, followed with solos and instrumental will close the first part.

PART II.

"Penelope, or the Milk-man's Bride," one of the prettiest little comic operattas ever written. It consists of solos, duets, trios, quartetts and choruses. Five characters are represented of which "Penelope" is chief. The music is taken from some of the most popular operas and words of a comic character are fitted to it. Every one who has heard it speaks very highly of it.

The young people, having been fortunate enough to obtain the assistance of some of the best vocalists of our city through their kindness, can assure the people of Crookston a first-class amateur entertainment. The program will be of two hours length and there being no change of scenery, the audience will not have to be kept waiting.

The proceeds are to go toward purchasing a new library for the Sunday school. Tickets for sale by ladies and at Tom Morris' jewelry store, at which place all seats can be secured. Come everybody and enjoy a good evening's entertainment.

NOTICE.

Whereas, my wife, Hannah F. Nelson, has left my bed and board without reasonable cause, I hereby warn all persons not to harbor or trust her on my account, as I shall pay no debts of her contracting after this date.

Council Proceedings.

SPECIAL MEETING APRIL 12, 1889.

Pursuant to a call from the mayor for the purpose of appointing a day for an election to be held in the city of Crookston, for the purpose of voting upon the question of issuing bonds to the Duluth, Crookston & Northern Railroad company.

Meeting called to order president Watts in the chair. Members present, Alds. Lally, Childs, Morrisey, Bjoin, Jerome, Marlette, Buhn and Jennings.

Moved by Ald. Lally, seconded by Ald. Childs that the petition in reference to voting bonds be referred to a committee of three to be appointed by the chair to ascertain if the parties signing the petition are qualified electors and freeholders and to report on same at next regular meeting, moved in amendment by Ald. Morrisey seconded by Ald Jerome that a committee of three by appointment and that the assessor be requested to assist them in ascertaining the legality of signatures and to report on same at once, the amendment was declared lost, the original motion was put to a vote and carried. The chair appointed the following committee to examine the signatures of the petition and to report on same at the next regular meeting held May 14, 1889.

Ald. Childs offered the following resolution which was seconded by Ald. Lally:

Resolved,—That a committee of one be appointed by the chair whose duty it shall be to prepare a blank form for any bonds which may hereafter be issued by the city of Crookston under authority of the bonding act approved April 4th 1889, and designated an act to authorize the city of Crookston, in Polk County, Minn., to issue bonds to aid in the construction of any railroad or railroads which may hereafter run into said city and to provide for bond commissioners to hold such bonds in escrow, and to deliver the same when earned, said form when prepared, to be submitted to the council for its approval or rejection, and in the discharge of this duty said committee is authorized and empowered to employ legal advice to an amount not to exceed fifty dollars as in their judgment may be necessary. Carried.

The chair appointed Ald. Childs as a committee of one to prepare such blank form of bonds.

On motion council adjourned.

JOHN PATERSON, Clerk.

TUESDAY, April 16.

At the adjourned meeting of the city council, on Tuesday evening, all members were present. Action occurring on the nominations in the order in which they were made, resulted as follows:

For comptroller, E. W. Wile was unanimously confirmed.

D. E. Hatlestad, city attorney, by a vote of 8 to 3.

The question now arose as to whether the four nominations for police should be confirmed; decided to employ but two.

M. B. Hayes, chief, 9 to 2.

Louis Gonyea, patrollman, 6 to 5.

Ole L. Hamery was confirmed as city engineer with no opposition, and his duties made to include street commissioner and purchasing agent. The council could think of nothing more to keep him busy, but if they happen to find anything later they may give him something to do. The clerk was instructed to personally notify the city publishers that bids for city printing will be received at next regular session. The clerk asked if the usual notice to printers should not be inserted, but Alderman Morrisey objected on the ground of economy, and carried his point. Under the present contract the notice would have cost the city about 10 cents. The sidewalk committee reported favorably on the project to build a walk from the railroad to the bridge on Sampson's Addition, the total cost not to exceed $250. The report of city engineer concerning sidewalk in 4th ward was referred to the alderman in that ward with instruction to report at next meeting. The salary of comptroller was fixed at $300. A motion was made to fix the salary of city attorney at $200; amended, $300; carried as amended. Moved that the salary of city clerk be fixed at $250; amended to $400; carried as amended. City engineer, including services as street commissioner and purchasing agent, at $550; amended to $600; carried as amended. The salary of chief of police was fixed at $60 per month; patrolman at $50. City treasurer at $300. The report as amended was then adopted as a whole by ayes and nays, unanimously. Bond of Scan. Am. bank referred back for correction. Bonds of 1st Nat'l and Merchants' Nat'l, approved. The subject of the care of the poor, under the new law, being under discussion, a committee comprising one alderman in each ward was appointed, as follows: 1st ward—Geo. Buhn; 2d ward—A. Walters; 3d ward—H. Steenerson; 4th ward—F. Jerome; 5th ward—R. G. Marlette, with instructions to ascertain the amount of money in the county treasury to which the city is entitled under the law and report at next regular meeting. The statement was made that trouble had been experienced at the pump house, owing to saw dust, and Jerome, Walters and Buhn were appointed as a committee of investigation. The regular routine being now completed, the bonding question was called up for discussion. Judge Montague was called upon to present the case from the company's standpoint, which he did in a clear and forcible manner, showing that the company is composed of citizens just as anxious as any one to have a competing line and to get the best terms obtainable for the interests of the city. Alderman Childs replied that the object of the council was to obtain at least the minimum for the city's money, and he was of the opinion that at least a daily train service and a continuous freight rate should be guaranteed. He moved the appointment of a committee of three to confer with the Crookston, Duluth & Northern Railroad company at an early date to secure amendments that would cover his point. The chair appointed as such committee H. Steenerson, E. D. Childs and Geo. Buhn. Steenerson then said that, as chairman of that committee, it became his duty to fix the date of said meeting, and he would name, Thursday, at 2 p. m at the office of Steenerson & McManus. He then moved that the council be called to meet on Thursday evening, which motion prevailed. He then moved that the committee appointed at the extra session to inquire into the legality of the petition be instructed to make their report on Thursday evening. This brought Mr. Childs to his feet, who said that this motion, if it prevailed, would defeat the object of the appointment of the council committee of conference, and that he should decline to serve on that committee. He was willing to work hard when he had a chance to accomplish anything, but he was not willing to spend his time in an attempt to accomplish an impossibility. He said that the conference should be held, the result obtained and then the committee could be ordered at the Thursday night meeting to report. The motion prevailed and somebody moved to adjourn. Mr. Childs said the chair had better fill the vacancy on the committee before entertaining that motion. However the motion was voted down and the chair appointed I. U. Jennings, who declined, stating that he held the same views as Mr. Childs in the premises. Mr. Buhn was appointed and declined. Some one moved that Mr. President Watts act, who also declined. At last, in despair, the president ordered the council to fill the vacancy by vote, and Mr. Watts was unanimously elected. The motion to adjourn to Thursday evening was reconsidered and Saturday evening substituted. A motion to rescind the instruction to the committee to report at said adjourned meeting was by the chair declared lost, and the council adjourned.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, the Congress of the United States has declared the 30th day of April, 1889, a national holiday, it being the centenial anniversary of the birth of the nation, to-wit: The inauguration of the first president under the national constitution.

And, whereas, it has been suggested as fitting and propper that all the citizens throughout this entire republic should join in commemorative exercises appropriate to such an occasion, and in acknowledgement to the Supreme Being for the blessings which have been conferred upon our people as a nation.

Now, therefore, I, James W. Lilly mayor of the city of Crookston, in accordance therewith, and pursuant to the proclamation of the President of the United States, do recommend, that on Tuesday, the 30th day of April, A. D. 1889, at 9 o'clock in the morning, that all the people of this city repair to their respective places of divine worship to invoke the favor of Heaven that the blessings of liberty, prosperity and peace may abide with us as a people forever. That all places of business be closed from 9 o'clock in the forenoon until 4 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, and that all the people participate in such exercises and ceremonies as may most fittingly attest their gratitude and happiness.

Done at Crookston, the 15th day of April, 1889.

JAMES W. LILLY, Mayor.

Pursuant to the foregoing and at the suggestion of members of the clergy and patriotic citizens, I hereby appoint the following persons a committee to prepare and carry into execution all needful arrangements for the proper observance and celebration of the above mentioned:

M. R. Brown, Esq., Rev. O. H. Elmer, Hon. Halvor Steenerson, Rev. Edward J. Lawler, Hon. J. O. Milne, Isrdore Fortier, H. F. Brown, Alex. McKinnon, C. N. Lindell, R. J. Marlette, J. G. McGrew, Rev. R. Qvam, C. E. Sawyer, Henry Wight, G. H. Palmer, J. A. Bemis, Dr. M. Van Dyke, F. L. Durand, Geo. J. McManus.

I would also suggest that the committee meet at the city hall on Thursday evening the 18th inst., for the purpose of organization.

JAMES W. LILLY, Mayor.

M. Lefebvre has nicely re-papered his place and now has as neat a little place of business as you could wish to see. He invites a call.

A Queer Fish.

On Monday afternoon a number of urchins who had been fishing and got "extra dry," stopped into Herb's place to sample his celebrated Dr. Bowker's Birch Beer, leaving their fishing tackle outside. They had neglected to remove the fresh beef from their hooks and the tempting bait proved too much for a hungry dog who snapped up a bit. A series of war-whoops, Comanche yells, gave notice that the set lines had caught—not a cat-fish exactly, but a dog-fish as it were. The hook had caught him in the lip and had to be cut out. The boys will still continue to sample Herb's Birch Beer, but will be more careful where they leave their fish hooks hereafter.

Change in Time.

On Sunday the 14th inst., the St. P., M. & M. R'y., changed the time of their train No. 4, so that it leaves Crookston at 9:35 p. m., instead of 11:30 p. m., reaching Minneapolis at 8:50 and St. Paul at 9:30 the following morning, serving breakfast in the dining car before reaching the twin cities, thus ensuring travelers a full night's rest between Crookston and St. Paul with plenty of time to do their business and return home the same evening. This will be appreciated by residents of Crookston, and vicinity.

THE FARM.

Good Pointers for Farmers.

It may do you good long as you live. Hear it: "Keep out of debt."

Take time to read and study about your work and you will accomplish more.

Don't have four or five worthless dogs that have to be fed enough to keep fifty fowls.

Good plowing is necessary, but it is not all. Good harrowing is quite as essential.

Have a supply of hard wood lumber sawed and packed away to dry for future repairs.

Don't take any chances on poor seed. The seed is a small item, the crop a big one.

A good way to save money is to save the means of making it—your implements, for instance.

If the whiffletree breaks, don't throw it into a corner. Remove the irons. They can be fitted to new wood.

The farther you are from the market the greater is your need of condensing products by feeding grain and stover to animals.

By keeping the cattle off the pasture one day longer in the Spring you may keep them upon it two days longer in the Fall.

A handy thing to have is a box containing an assortment of bolts, nuts, rivets, nails, and a hammer, pinchers and cold-chisel.

The paint brush that proved to be a bargain was cleaned in turpentine each time its work was done, dried, and hung up by its handle.

A thrifty farmer says 50 cents' worth of awls, punches, linen thread and shoemaker's wax, will save $10 in harness repairs in 12 months.

In fact, if there were not so many blockheads trying to farm, the question would not be so often asked, "Does farming pay?"

Don't work so hard that you won't have time to read. If you read more and profit by the experience of others you won't have to work so hard.

There are too many farms where the soil is abundantly productive, and the fields and granaries filled with abundant harvests while the home is a desert.

It is a common mistake to nearly fill the churn, and then churn for two or three hours before the butter comes—when it ought to come in from 35 to 50 minutes.

It has been casually observed that a "Miller's Trust" might be expected to advance the price of flour when ever wheat went up, and keep it up when wheat went down.

A bill has been introduced in the Illinois Legislature which prohibits the clipping of manes and tails of horses in the Summer. The Chicago Times regards that a "positive cruelty to flies."

It will pay handsomely to take unusual care of the pigs, for if we mistake not hogs are going to be in greater demand, and consequently better prices will prevail than has been known for many a day. Then save the pigs.—Exchange.

Good farmers are sticklers for improving their hogs, cattle, horses, poultry, etc., but will encourage their sons and daughters in marrying any kind of two-legged scrubs.—Iowa State Register.

Prepare the soil and plant the onions at the very first opportunity in the Spring. They will stand cold and do better than they will the drouth and heat in August, and the best plan is to be ready to plant at the first opportunity.

If you have a little farm and are out of debt, don't fret and work yourself and your good wife into premature graves, for the sake of making more money. You have but one life to live and it is very brief at best.

Every farmer should give more attention to saving and retaining the fertility of his fields than even to carrying additions of manure to them, because it will profit him far more at far less cost.

The English coarse wooled breeds, says the Cultivator, including the various Downs, have been bred to produce twins, so that in many flocks it is not infrequent to have in the summer more lambs than the owner of the flock has of ewes. Breeds which do this are naturally strong and vigorous.

Experiments in feeding pigs, instituted by the Dainish Agritultural Society, go to show that skimmed milk has double the feeding value of buttermilk; that rye and barley are of about equal value, with a slight percentage in favor of rye; and that six pounds of skimmed milk have the same feeding value as one pound of rye or barley.

When the cream foams in the churn and it will not make burter, it may be, and most probably at this season is, due to too much acidity in the cream. If the milk be kept at a steady temperature of 60 or 62 degrees for two days, and the cream kept for two or three days longer at the same temperature, there should be no difficulty in churning.

I respond to the health of my friend the hog—the most profitable, the most neglected and most afflicted of all our animal servants. In the absence of a bank account he is a handy substitute. With health he comes nearer 5 per cent a month than any investment on the farm. He is the only fellow in our employ that we can trust to tackle a mortage.—C. H. Walker.

Eight or ten pigs are more than a sow can raise properly if she is too thin at farrowing time, as the pigs must have more nourishment than can be furnished from the food consumed by the sow, for she can not eat enough to develop her pigs; but if in proper condition she has a certain amount of flesh to draw upon; and the pigs will make the best possible growth.

Remarking on the influence of feed upon the quality of milk, an exchange thinks that if the feed be continued while the cow is bearing a calf, the progeny will inherit this tendency to put more milk into the cream pot. In this way our large milkers may in time be bred as equally remarkable for butter production.

Some people seem to think if cows get water once a day it is all they need; but that is not enough, unless they are living on succulent food, such as roots or ensilage. Cattle are their own best judges of their need of water, and they do best when they have their option about using it. When they drink but once a day they overload with it to their injury.

A fact not to be forgotten in sheep husbandry is that while one may raise fine wool and very poor mutton, you cannot raise good mutton without raising good wool also. All authorities agree that the best fed sheep that fatten and mature in the shortest time make the best and soundest wool, so that this by-product from such sheep will always find a ready market. If we can raise mutton on the basis of making the meat pay the cost, we shall have the wool for clear profit.

A Couple of Campaign Stories.

Ever and anon we see in the daily papers reports of marvelous voyages made in the human system by needles, pennies and other bric-a-brac, introduced therein either by accident or design. As a general thing we are loth to give credence to these yarns, which too frequently seem invented by ingenious writers of fiction for the delectation of the marines. But the following incidents have come under our personal observation, and we are prepared to vouch for their authenticity:

Xerxes Smith, an aged colored man of Shotgun County, Texas, when a boy ran a needle into his hind foot. The accident caused him no serious annoyance and was forgotten. A few days ago Xerxes felt a sharp pain in his left wrist, and when an incision was made much to his astonishment a paper of needles worked its way to the surface. The needles were two dozen in number and they were neatly done up and labeled. Mr. Smith will exhibit the paper of needles to all who may be curiously inclined.

Little Willie Perkins, son of the Postmaster at Perkinsville, Neb., swallowed a dollar just two years ago, and recently he extracted from his left ear a dollar and twelve cents, the twelve cents being interest on the dollar for two years at six per cent. Little Willie is now kicking because he did not receive a higher rate of interest.—America.

How a Congressman is Made Weary.

Washington Critic.

There is a Congressman in town who is very mad. Perhaps it's hardly to be wondered at. A short time before Congress adjourned one of his constituents asked him if he would be kind enough to send him the Offical Register, which as most people know just at this time, is a work very much in demand, and contains the name and salaries of every position under the Government. The book was promptly sent. A week or so ago he received a long letter from this constituent containing a list of the prominent and well-paid places outside of the Civil Service. He started the list with the consul-generalship at London, perhaps the best paid position in the Government, and tapered down to the head of a bureau. He confessed that he would rather as he wasn't particular he would not refuse any of the offices on his list, and he requested his representative to get him one at his earliest convenience. Now this alone would not have been so bad, but this man evidently allowed a few of his intimate friends to look at the register, who also made up their little lists, and the consequence is that Representative Blank has been bothered with more requests for places from that little corner of his district than from all the rest of the State put together.

Directions for Taking.

An absent minded doctor who had considerable investment in real estate was about leaving a patient after writing a prescription, when he was asked for directions as to how the medicine was to be taken. "Oh yes," he said, "I forgot. One-third down and the balance in one or two years."—American Analyst.

ALAS! IT IS THE REVERSE.

Where snow drifts lay is seen the grass,
The Boreal breeze no longer blows,
The mecury's rising in the grass,
And men are wearing thinner hose,
The heavy ulster's put aside,
Light overcoats are taken out,
The gentle maiden in the pride
Of new spring garments goes about.
The early robin blitherly sings,—
So would the poet sing to-day
If 'twere not for the fact that things,
Alas! are all the other way!

MURDER OR SUICIDE?

By Luke Sharp.

We were sitting at the cafe, he said, one evening last summer, and discussing the new law in the state of New York for the execution of criminals by electricity. There were three of us, all medical students, who were putting in time at the hospitals at Paris. We held different opinions on the subject, and were discussing it rather warmly, when a tall young man who had been sitting at a table near us, rose and came over to where we sat.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have been listening to part of your conversation, and am very much interested in the subject which you were discussing. I have been in Paris for three months and I intend to leave the city to-morrow. I intended to go by way of the Seine. In other words, gentlemen, I proposed to commit suicide. After what I have heard you say I have been convinced that this would be a waste of valuable material. I therefore offer myself to you, gentlemen, to be executed by electricity or to have any of the experiments which you propose tried upon me as long as the experiment will result in a speedy and painless death. I am not particular as to the methods you use or to any plan you may try upon as long as it involves no extra suffering to myself. I confess I do not at all look with pleasure towards the committing of suicide by throwing myself into the river; it seems a waste of good material, and it is so absurdly conventional. Therefore, if you will take my offer, I am at your disposal."

We looked at the young man in astonishment. I know that I thought he was probably insane, and others doubtless had the same opinion. I had a glimmering of an idea that it might be a practical joke of some kind, whose point I was unable to see.

"Gentlemen," continued the young man, "if you have no objections I will join your group, that we may discuss the matter at our leisure. Please fill up your glasses, gentlemen, and drink, with me."

"You say you have been in Paris three months. Are you studying anything; I am here for treatment."

"And what is your idea—that is, what is the reason that you propose the act which you told us of? Financial difficulties? If that is the case we might able to help you out."

"No, my finances are all right, and that reminds me, I know a medical student is not too well blessed with this world's goods. If the experiment which you propose to conduct costs more than you think you would like to spend, you may draw on my bank account to whatever extent you desire. There is nobody to whom I wish in particular to leave what money I shall have to leave behind, and so if it will help you any in your experiment, my cash as well as myself is at your disposal."

"Are you fully determined on suicide?"

"Certainly, I made up my mind to it a week ago. You see I am afflicted with an incurable disease; in fact my case and that of the late crown prince are very similar. I have seen the best specialists in France and Germany and they offer me no hope. I have no desire to linger along. I have no intentions of dying a lingering death. The moment I satisfied myself that my malady was incurable I resolved to commit suicide, and I can see nothing that would induce me to change that intention. Now, gentlemen, you will probably desire to have some conversation together about this proposal, which I presume you will look upon as somewhat extraordinary, and if you will give me the address of one of you, or if you will meet me here to-morrow morning I shall keep any appointment that you choose to make. My time is entirely unoccupied, and one place of meeting is as convenient for me as another."

I gave him the address at which I, lodged, and asked him to call the next day at about eleven o'clock. With that he bade us "good-bye" in a very gentlemanly manner, and paying his bill to the waiter, disappeared down the boulevard.

"Well, boys," said Brown, "do you think he is in earnest?"

"I don't know, I am sure," I said. "It seems to me he has some kind of practical joke to work on us, but I hardly see what his object would be. It is well known that medical students never commit practical jokes on anybody else, and I therefore fail to understand why he should want to try a practial joke on us."

"He might find it rather a serious practial joke," said Smith, "If he once got into our clutches. Perhaps the quickest way of killing him would be to undertake to cure his trouble."

"If he's in earnest," said Brown, who was the most serious of our party, "suppose that we arrange an interview between him and our professor?"

"He will tell us at once whether his throat trouble is incurable or not. If it is incurable, I, for my part, think it no harm in assisting the young fellow to carry out his design. It would be, as he says, a waste of valuable material if he threw himself into the Seine and were fished out by some waterman and taken to the morgue."

"Very well," I said, "we can arrange with our professor to call up at my rooms at 11 o'clock to-morrow, and then he will examine the young man, and if he still persists in his intention, I propose that we take him at his word."

"Certainly," answered Brown. "Now the fault that I have with the proposed method of execution is not that it will not kill a man quick enough, but that the appalling preparation adds an agony to the death, which makes it quite as objectionable as hanging. It is proposed that the victim shall take his place upon a reclining chair and that a band of copper shall be placed around his temples, and another around his throat, and these bands shall be attached to sponges saturated with a solution of zinc, and that each band shall be connected with the different wires that communicate with the dynamo. Now, I maintain that it will take an appalling time to have it adjusted it will be necessary to adjust it. Although I have very little sympathy with the criminal, yet, you must admit that the amount of agony which he will spend in that reclining chair with two or three doctors around him, adjusting this cumbersome apparatus, will equal a life time of ordinary torture. What I propose is this: there can be arranged in a room certain metalic ornaments, or other fixtures that can be charged with electricity; and the victim on touching one of these will be killed instantly, and without the torturing of a long wait during cumbersome adjustment. What do you think of that?"

"Very well, then," I said, "Brown, you make all the arrangements for the execution; manage it your own way. Smith and I will see the young man to-morrow with the professor, and if there is absolutely no hope for him, and if he continues in the state of mind he is to-day, why, then, we will be ready for him."

At 11 o'clock the next morning the professor was in my room waiting for his patient. A few minutes after the hour the young man entered. The moment he did so the professor recognized him.

"Ah," he said, "you have returned from Germany?"

"Yes," answered the young man, "I have returned. I have also been in England. All the physicians I have seen agree with you in the diagnosis of the case."

Then the professor shook his head and spoke sympathetically to the young man.

"You seem to know each other," said I to the professor.

"Oh, yes," answered that gentleman. Mr. Stevens did me the honor of calling on me as soon as he arrived in Paris. Unfortunately I could give him no hope, but advised him to consult other specialists, both in Germany and in England."

With this the professor left us.

"Your name is Stevens, then," I said to the young man

"Yes, and my home is New York. Have you gone any further with the matter which I proposed yesterday?"

"Well, my friend, Mr. Brown, has that in charge, and I presume he will wish to see if you still persist in your intention."

"My dear sir, of course I persist; in fact I look upon myself as a dead man. I expected to have committed suicide before this time; perhaps last night, probably this morning. All I ask is that there shall be as little delay as possible, and that I shall know nothing whatever of the arrangements."

"Very good then. Supposing we say tomorrow at 11 at this place?"

"Thank you." Now as a token of my earnestness I wish to leave you this check. Ask Mr. Brown to see that everything is done properly, so that there will be no mistake. Don't spare money. I, in particular, am anxious for complete success.

Next morning by 11 we had all arrangements completed. Brown had taken a room next his own, which was unfurnished as far as carpet was concerned, the floor being the usual polished floor of the Parisian lodging room in the Latin quarter. Brown had attached the electric wires to the gas fixtures which depended from the ceiling in the center of the room, so arranged that if a man touched the fixture at any point, or attempted to light the gas, he would receive the strongest shock of electricity that it was possible for the Dynamo Company of Paris to supply.

Mr. Stevens came up at 11 c'clock. We asked him if he would have any objection to occupying this room, which was next to that of Mr. Brown's?"

He replied that he was perfectly at our disposal, and said that he would be ready to occupy the room by 4 o'clock that afternoon.

At five o'clock Brown turned on the electricity so that we could watch the lone tenant of the room as we sat next to the wall in Brown's room through holes made for that purpose. Brown kept his hands upon the switch so that if anyone else entered the room he would be ready at a moment to turn off the current. We watched with palpitating heart for an hour. Stevens was reading by the window. As the evening grew darker, he put down his book and sat looking out the window for a few minutes; then he arose whistling an air, went to the match safe and struck a match, which he held in his fingers until it flared up and lighted the room; then he reached up to turn on the gas. The next moment he was a heap upon the floor. We rushed in and found him quite dead. The electrical appliances were removed and a coroner called in. The verdict was the young man had died from a stroke of apoplexy.

To remove iron rust or ink spots, moisten the spots, and apply salts of lemon until they disappear, and then rinse well. Salts of lemon are made of equal parts of oxalic acid and tartaric acid. Another way is to moisten with lemon juice, sprinkle well with salt, and lay in the sun.

The Causes of Death.

Our readers are doubtless all familiar with the Robinson poisoning cases, which have recently come to light in Somerville, Mass., a suburb of Boston.

It seems that eight deaths have occurred from arsenical poisoning, seven in one family, and within five years. It is doubtful if the murderers would have been brought to justice had not an organization in which the victims were insured began an investigation as to why so many persons had suddenly died in one family.

But the sensation from a medical point of view connected with the case, took place in Boston at a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Medico-Legal Society, when it was stated by Dr. Holt that there was general ignorance of the symptoms of arsenical poisoning and because of such ignorance the Robinson poisoning cases had gone on without arousing the suspicion of medical men. The Robinson cases were all treated by regular physicians, with correct diplomas, men supposed to know what they were doctoring for, and to know the effect of drugs on certain diseases. Yet in the five deaths from arsenical poisoning of which we speak, certificates of death were given for pneumonia, typhoid fever, meningitis, bowel disease, and Bright's Disease.

Such a commentary on the general ignorance of the medical profession, made by one of its own number, we believe to be without a parallel.

Is it any wonder that patients are losing faith in their doctors? Here were five able bodied people slowly poisoned with arsenic before their very eyes, and yet these very wise medical men were doctoring them for pneumonia, typhoid fever, meningetis, bowel disease, and Bright's disease.

In the very same manner thousands of patients are being treated this day for pneumonia, heart trouble, dropsy, incipient consumption, etc., when these are but symptoms of advanced kidney disease, which is but another name for Bright's disease. The doctors do not strike at the seat of the disease—the kidneys, and if they did nine times out of ten they would fail—as they are on record as saying they can not cure Bright's disease of the kidneys. Rather than use Warner's Safe Cure, a well-known specific for this and all other forms of kidney disease they would let their patients die, and then give a death certificate that death was caused by pericarditis, apoplexy, phthisic or cardiac affection.

Is this not the honest truth? Do you not know in your own personal history very many instances where physicians doctored the wrong disease, and caused untold suffering, and many times, death? Which leads us to remark that very much can be learned by one's-self by careful observation, and that the doctors are very far from having a monopoly of the knowledge of medicine or disease.

THE WORLD OUGHT TO KNOW IT.

The world ought to know what S. S. S. has done for me in the cure of a malignant Cancer, which was so bad as to be considered incurable by the physicians in Chicago, where I went to be treated. One of my neighbors sent me a copy of an advertisement in regard to Swift's Specific, and I began taking it. I got relief from the first few doses; the poison was gradually forced out of my system, and I was soon cured sound and well. It is now ten months since I quit taking S. S. S. and I have had no sign of return of the dreadful disease.

Who Was The Robber.

"Another case of misplaced confidence."

I pricked up my ears as I heard th words. The men had halted not five yards distant, and were discussing something of seeming importance.

I sat tilted back in my old-fashioned arm-chair lost in reverie, or had been lost in one till the words opening this story fell on my ears, rousing me to a sense of surroundings.

My half-burnt cigar had gone out, and I tossed the stump aside and regarded the speakers from under the rim of my soft hat.

They are ordinary citizens, and seemed deeply interested in the subject of their conversation.

"Will it damage Mr. Sylvester to any extent?"

"Damage him? It will ruin him!"

"You don't say."

"Yes, it will. Twenty thousand don't grow on every bush. It was in clean cash, too."

"And there seems to be no doubt about the young fellow taking the money—the confidential clerk I mean?"

"Oh, no. How can there be since he has run away? It's a terrible blow to the old man, and will startle the community. Of course the thief will not stop this side of the British line. It's a case of misplaced confidence, as I said, and there seems to be no redress."

"No redress? I should think it would be an easy matter to follow and capture the young villain."

"Not so easy as you may think. Once in Canada the villain is safe, and he has good twenty-four hours the start."

The two citizens then moved on and I heard no more. I was deeply interested, however. It was no ordinary curiosity that moved me.

Bernard Sylvester was an old friend of mine whom I had not seen in nearly eight years. I had heard from him infrequently, and at these times to the effect that he was prospering in the Western town where he had made his home.

Late on the previous evening I landed in Goldburgh for the first time. I put up at the best public house in the little Western city determined to visit my old friend on the morrow.

While smoking my after-breakfast cigar, I overheard the conversation just given. It referred to the friend I had come out of my way to visit.

I resolved to go at once and pay my respects to Mr. Sylvester. I came to my feet and hurried away. I had previously examined the directory and learned the number and street where my frient resided.

I had no difficulty in finding the house, a brick dwelling of considerable pretensions. I found Bernard Sylvester in the dumps truly. He was glad to see me, however, recognizing me at once.

I noticed that he had aged a good deal since I last looked upon his handsome face. Soon after the first greetings were over he told me his misfortune.

"I brought the money into the house last night, and put it in the safe," he exclaimed. "I don't often leave so large a sum here over night, but I thought it safe enough for a few hours at least, and intended putting it in the bank to-day."

"You think your clerk took the money?"

"There can be no doubt of it."

"Was he not trustworthy—"

"Allen Gray trustworthy? Sir, I would have staked my life on his integrity till this came out."

"How long has he been in your employ?"

"More than a year. I liked him immensely, and he so far presumed on my confidence as to fall in love with my daughter Luline. I was vexed when I made the discovery, and it didn't take the young people long to discover my feeling on the subject."

"Exactly," said I.

"I put a flea in the young man's ear and sent Luline away."

"Sent your daughter away?"

"Yes. Since her mother died this has really been no place for her, Frank. I sent her to an aunt in Canada. She's attending school, there, and I flatter myself she's forgotten Grey before this time."

"How long ago did this happen?"

"Six months."

"When did you last see Allen Grey?"

"Yesterday. He came over at noon to talk about buisness affairs, and at that meeting I told him about the money I expected to receive. Had it arrived a little earlier I should have put it in the bank, and then Allen Grey would not have been tempted to commit a great crime."

I soon learned enough to convince me that the man had good grounds for suspecting his clerk. He had put the money in the safe, and but one person besides himself knew the combination—that person was Allen Grey. The housekeeper, Mrs Rexford, had seen Grey at the house after the money was received. He entered the room where the safe stood, and remained about twenty minutes.

In the morning, when Mr Sylvester went to get the package of money that he received the previous night by express, he found the safe unlocked and the key in the door.

"Are you quite sure it was not possible for a burglar to effect an entrance, unlock the safe, and escape with the money?" I asked.

"I am sure that couldn't be," assured Mr. Sylvester. "The house was all locked up at night, and my own door was secured as well as the window. Neither had been tampered with. It is plain enough that Grey came in early in the evening and secured the money."

"Did you leave the key in the safe?"

"No. I have a place for it, and Grey was the only person who knew where I kept it. In his hurry he forgot to remove the key from the lock. Had I visited the safe again last night I would have detected the theft, and might have been in time to cut off the thief's retreat. As it is he has doubtless crossed the line by this time."

This seemed likely, since a night's ride would take one to the border. I could offer but little consolation to my friend. The loss of the money would seriously cripple the business.

He insisted on my making his house my home during my stay in the city; and I consented.

Two days later a painful surprise upset Mr. Sylvester even more than the loss of $20,000 had done.

I came in from a stroll to see him standing in the center of the parlor floor the picture of rage, sorrow, and dismay.

He held a paper in his hand—a telegram—that trembled as he read. After a moment Sylvester handed the telegram to me, with a request that I read the following:

> Knox, Ontario, —18.—Father: Allen is here. We were married this morning. Forgive us. We could not live apart.
> Luline.

"The ungrateful child! I'll disown her for this!" declared my elderly friend, trembling with rage and mortification. "To think that after taking that money, after robbing me with the remorseless coolness of a burglar, he uses the money to visit Canada, and rob me of my only child, my Luline. Oh! this will kill me. The ruin! the disgrace!"

He was up, wringing his hands, and I had not the heart to offer any sort of consolation then. It was a strange case indeed. If Allen Grey was the one who had robbed Mr. Sylvester he was a man of nerve, as well as a consummate villain, indeed.

Shortly after the receipt of the telegram a letter came from the absent clerk, pleading his great love for Luline as his excuse for the course he had taken. "We are coming on in a few days," the letter said in conclusion, "and hope and trust you will forgive us. Luline sends her love and a thousand kisses."

The impudence of the young man was, indeed, wonderful. My friend Sylvester worked himselt up to a terrible pitch of excitement, so that I feared his sanity.

"I'll have him arrested the moment he sets foot in Goldburgh," declared Mr. Sylvester. "He has ruined my life, and I care not what happens now."

A crisis was surely at hand. It did seem the hight of imprudence for the runaway clerk to return after his unlawful acts. He must have had great faith in his employer, to believe he could forgive him after what had happened.

The world knew of the robbery, and there were detectives on the lookout. It was not in reality my case, yet I was deeply interested in the outcome, and was at the depot when the young couple arrived.

Allen Grey was taken into custody at once, and his bride of less than a week fainted on my shoulder. I looked into the eyes of the accused, and there saw genuine astonishment depicted, when he learned of what he was accused.

"I rob you, Mr. Sylvester, of twenty thousand dollars? You know me better than that."

But the wronged father would not argue the point, and the once trusted clerk was hurried to prison without bail.

It was an awful blow to the young wife, whom I found to be pretty and altogether sensible. I had remembered her as a child only.

She left her father's house vowing that she would not return while Allen remained under the ban of his displeasure.

It was through my efforts that Luline went back.

"If Allen Grey is not guilty he shall go free," declared Sylvester, "but I am satisfied of his guilt, and you ought not to defend him, Luline. This comes of disobeying your father."

"If he proves his innocence you will receive him back, and—and forgive us both, father?" pleaded the daughter.

"Yes, but—"

"Then I am content."

I heard this much. The outcome was somewhat surprising. All the evidence pointed to Grey as the thief, and it did not seem possible that he could escape. Both father and daughter were deeply oppressed.

I visited Grey in prison and found him, though deeply oppressed, willing to talk, and what he said was given out in perfect frankness. I was prepossessed in favor of Allen Grey, and felt sorry for the fate that doomed him. I intimidated that confession of his guilt and a return of the money would be the wisest course to pursue.

"An innocent man has no confession to make," returned the prisoner, and with this I left him.

The day of trial came. I was on hand to listen to the evidence, for I was deeply interested and had delayed my departure for some days on purpose to be present.

Allen Grey entered the court-room with a firm tread. His face was pale, and there were dark circles under his eyes. It was clearly evident that he had suffered.

The jury had taken their seats, and the trial was about to open. I noticed that neither Mr. Sylvester nor his daughter were present, a fact that puzzled me not a little.

The public prosecutor rose and faced the Judge.

"May it please your Honor, we have decided to withdraw the charges against the prisoner at the bar."

The announcement created a sensation. I was astounded. Had the old merchant at the last moment relented? Could he withdraw the case now that it had gone to the people? It did not seem possible.

The attorney for the defense was quite as deeply surprised as anybody, and even the prisoner looked his amazement.

"On what grounds," questioned the Judge, as the prosecutor paused, with a thumb in the button-hole of his vest.

"We have learned that the prisoner is innocent, your Honor. The money has been found!" Then the prosecutor advanced and laid a paper before the judge.

I waited not for further proceedings, but hurried from the room. Calling a hack, I ordered it driven to the house of my old friend Sylvester.

At the door I was met by Luline, whose face was radiant with smiles. "I am glad you have come," she said. "Father is extremely anxious to see you." I am not less anxious to see him. The old man sprang to his feet when I entered his room, the one containing the safe, the door of which stood open. He seized my arm and led me to the safe. Pointing to a package in a large envelope in plain sight on a shelf within the safe, he said: "there it is, Frank, the $20,000—not a penny touched!"

"Good gracious!" I exclaimed. "Where did it come from?"

"Ask Luline. I found it there this morning, and the key was in the lock!"

Then the old man turned away, going from the room with his face in his hands.

Luline stood in the threshold. I looked my question, and she came forward and said:

"It is easily explained. Papa was the thief. I mistrusted it. He walks in his sleep sometimes. I caught him at it last night. He visited the garret and brought out the money package and put it in the safe. I saw it all, and he was astounded to find it this morning. I suppose he was thinking about the money when he retired on the night in question, and he rose in the night and took it to the garret for safe keeping. It's too good for anything. Papa forgives Allen, and we'll have his blessing now."

The dear girl smiled through her tears, and I confess I was little less happy than she at the outcome of the robbery.—J. M. Merrill, in the Inter Ocean.

The Common Hangman.

In England the "yeoman of the halter," or common hangman, never received from the Sheriffs more than £1 a week as a retaining fee, writes a London correspondent. His "ponuses" were derived from the sale of the malefactors' clothes, and from vending by the inch the halters in which they had been hanged, those scraps of twisted hemp being ignorantly supposed to possess some curative virtues. Again, superstitious servant maids and mothers with children afflicted with glandular swellings would fee the hangman to stroke their necks with the right hand of the felon who had just been cut down. The rogue also who was sentenced to be whipped at the cart's tail, or in the sessions yard at the Old Bailey, would, if he were wise, propitiate the hangman, with a shilling or two prior to the punishment, and in very rare instances' when a "real" gentleman was so unlucky as to be hanged, the executioner would receive from 2 to 5 guineas for doing his spiriting gently. So recently as 1820. Jack Ketch seems to have lost his old cunning in heading and quartering traitors, for when the Cato street conspirators were to be executed, the hangman of the day confessed his inability to decapitate them after hanging, and a man in a mask, whose identity has never been discovered, had to be specially engaged by the Government to cut off the heads of Thistlewood and his accomplices. The public executioner of the period was one Cheshire, and he seems to have been the first Old Bailey hangman who supplemented the meager stipend allowed him by the corporation by taking provincial engagements. Old Jack Cheshire, as he was called, went specially down to Hertford to hand John Turtell, the murderer of Mr. Weare, and Cheshire's country practice was followed by his successor, Calcraft, who notwithstanding the animadversions to which he was exposed during the latter part of his career, was about as respectable a man, comparatively speaking, as could have been found in the occupation of so abhorrent a position. His pupil and successor, Marwood, performed for a time his his ghastly functions without giving particular offense either to the authorities or the public, but the man's head was eventually turned through the foolish prominence given to his individuality. He was made to pose as a kind of a hero; was lionized at music halls; distributed his autograph to all and sundry, and became, until his death, a somewhat scandalous kind of person. We do not think it advisable to recommend the American plan. The status of a good warder is too honorable to make him subject to so trying a duty, and it is better to maintain an old system, but to enforce propriety and decorum on the part of its performer. It would be found on experience, we believe, that prison warders would be most reluctant to execute the last sentence of the law, so that we may be perforce constrained to retain a public executioner, salaried and directly under the control of the Home Office; but, in any case, the official killer of his fellow-creatures should be kept under the strictest surveillance, and be made amenable to heavy penalties in the event of his misbehavior.

A Rat Who Can Sing.

Mystic, Conn., has a singing rat that attracts a good deal of attention. He is a small, brown active fellow, of social disposition, and is prepossessing in mein and manner. He belongs in Scheffield's grocery. He sings to the cracker-barrel critics nightly, and there is a let up in the local transaction of national business while he is performing. Every one listens respectfully. He has a thin, wiry voice, rather musical, like the voluntary of the simmering tea kettle just setting in, and he works his feet and his sensitive lips and whistles while doing the act. Sometimes he sings for an hour; at other times, his voice being a little off condition, he won't sing.

Mistaken Identity.

Nearly everybody in this portion of the lead mines knows or has heard of W. M. Rollins, a business man of Belmont, Lafayette County, this state, and it is in connection with this individual that one of the strangest cases of mistaken identity, with serious results following, happened, writes a Platville, Wis., correspondent.

About four months ago a man was foully murdered at Sparta, Wis. The murderer, though identified, escaped and all efforts to capture him proved futile. About two months ago Mr. Rollins went to Sparta on business, and as soon as he stepped off the train was arrested as the perpetrator of the crime. Circuit Court then being in session, the district attorney filed information against him under the name of the murderer. Mr. Rollins, of course, pleaded not guilty, and his attorney, J. M. Morrow, asked for a continuance, to enable him to get the necessary evidence to establish his innocence. But this application Judge Newman denied, and the accused was forced to trial. Several witnesses identified him as the murderer; others swore positively that they saw him commit the crime. The chain of evidence was complete, and, although Rollins took the stand in his own behalf, protesting that he was not the man; that the name he was being tried under was not his name; that he resided in Belmont and had never been in Sparta before. The twelve men good and true would not believe him, but returned a verdict of manslaughter and Rollins was sent to Waupun for eight years, and thither the sheriff forthwith took him. As soon as he recovered from his first shock he had his lawyers set about to establish his innocence and secure his pardon.

Luckily for him, the night the murder was committed in Sparta he had attended a dance at Belmont, and as soon as his friends in that place heard of his trouble they made application to Governor Hoard for his pardon, and sent the affidavits to over one hundred people who saw him at the dance in question.

About this time the real murderer was discovered, arrested, and confessed his crime, and Rollins was released and came home, passing through this city on the evening passenger.

The strangest part of the whole affair is the exact resemblance between Rollins and the murderer. People who have seen them both can hardly tell one from the other. They are both crippled exactly alike in the left hand, and otherwise are perfect doubles.

A Sneeze at a Climax.

The theatre was comfortably filled. The two leading players were in the midst of a harrowing tale of suffering the woman clearly wronged, yet loving and proud; the husband guilty, but loving also, pleading for forgiveness. The audience had become so quiet that hardly a sound could be heard. At the most critical point when the stillness could almost be felt, a big man in the rear of the orchestra chairs uttered as startling a noise as was probably ever heard in that theatre. It sounded, in quick time like "Kitchy—kitchy, bark-ar—ark—how—wow—ee—hee—ee—ee——————kow ou——————wou." It ended way up in G and jarred the roof. The response that followed could not have been more completely timed if everbody had been connected by an electric current. Every man, woman and child simultaneously burst into a laugh. The babies actually crowed. It smashed the tale of love and the reconciliation into flinders. Just as the sneeze came that actress was standing facing the audience, her face woebegone and full of pain. Before she could turn away her slim form was quivering from laughter. The husband chewed his lower lip and tried to keep up a show of grief. In vain. He bent his head in his hands and laughed with everybody else. The fun didn't subside for at least five minutes. The ushers looked about to see if the sneezer was alive. He had vanished.—Baltimore American.

A Scare Story.

One of the most familiar faces in Cincinnati is "Greeny" Horn, who formerly blacked boots in front of the Grand Opera house. "Greeny" is a bright boy and as he advanced in years he secured employment to learn the drug business and is now employed at Ben Isaacs' pharmacy, corner of Longworth and Plum streets. He is only 18 years old, but his hair is as gray as that of a man of 60. "Greeny" tells with pride how his hair came to turn gray. One night when Chester park was in its glory a crowd of sports gave a dance at the well known road house. "Greeny" was broke and he saw a chance to make some money. It was midnight, and the street cars had stopped running, so he started on foot for the dance. When he reached Spring Grove cemetery the road was as dark as could be. "Greeny" knew where he was, and visions of ghosts and other earthly things passed before him. Suddenly there was a mysterious noise, and "Greeny" became greatly frightened. He turned and ran back toward the city. When he reached home his hair had turned gray in spots. It continued to change until it is now almost white.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

How She Rejected Him.

He proposed on the way home from church with a Buffalo girl one Sunday evening. She was too young to marry, and did not want him anyway. But she said "yes," with the stipulation that he should get her father's consent. The young man was happy until he discovered the next day that his adored one's father had been dead for several years. He has removed to another city.—Buffalo News.

Some Old Fashions Revived.

There is at present a revival of old fashions steadily going on. Popular favor has returned to many of the customs of early times and our homes are rapidly assuming an air of the past.

The old spinning wheel has returned from exile and forms a conspicuous and interesting ornament in our homes.

Quaint old tapestries, rugs and articles of furniture have been restored to deserved popularity.

There is a reason for this revival.

Our ascestors were of the substantial kind and their tastes were accordingly marked.

They looked to their personal comfort and when it was attained they stopped.

Fashion's foibles had no charm for them and in mind and person they were the equal of any people the world has yet seen.

Quick in perception and accurate in judgment, they soon detected the cause of any physical discomfort and as quickly applied the proper means for the removal of it.

Conspicuous among some of the old fashions recently revived has been the reproduction of some of our grandmother's early time home cures, which are now holding a deserved position in popular favor, under the name of Warner's Log Cabin remedies and includes a Sarsaparilla for the blood, Hops and Buchu for the stomach and system, Cough Remedy for colds, Extract for internal or external pain, Hair Tonic, Rose Cream for catarrh, Plasters and Pills.

For purity, simplicity and for their genuine beneficial properties they are unequaled and are worthy of our good old grandmothers, who first produced them.

May there be a revival, by their use, of the good health and long lives of early times!

Digging for Water.

"The gift of God!" cries the water-carrier of Cario. The traveller in the desert recalls that cry, when his water-skins are empty, and his guides scan the horizon to detect signs of water. Mr. James describes, in his narratives of travels through "The Unknown Horn of Africa," the excitement in his caravan when runners reported that the Hodayu pans were dry and sun-baked, but that water might be obtained by digging.

They had been marching nine days from the wells at Burao, and during the last three days each man had been limited to a pint of water a day. Eight men were sent as an advance guard to dig into the pans, that on its arrival the caravan might find water.

But men and camels, when they reached the pans, saw only liquid mud in the holes the sixteen hands had scooped out. Every instrument which could be worked as a spade was served out. Thirty men dug in earnest.

Within an hour twenty wells had a thin surface of dark fluid overlying liquid mud. This continued rising until some of the wells contained a foot of water. It was greedily sucked down. As soon as one well was exhausted, another was started.

The work was exciting and exhausting. The result was in one well a thin layer of oily water, in another a foot's depth of fluid.

The digging had to be conducted with care, for if the sand below the mud was exposed, it immediately sucked up every drop of water collected above it. All day and all night the well-digging was continued, until the thirst of men, camels, mules and horses had been partly satisfied.

"Never be Caution."

The old Jews and the old Scotch Highlanders had one feeling in common—a dread of suretyship. The book of Proverbs contains several warnings of the danger that lurks in a surety bond, but none are more admonishing than one uttered by a Highlander.

Donald had been tried for his life, and narrowly escaped conviction. In discharging him, the judge thought it proper to say:

"Prisoner, before you leave the bar, I'll give you a piece of advice. You have got off this time, but if you ever come before me again, I'll be caution (surety) you'll be hanged."

"Thank you, my lord," said Donald, "for your good advice, and as I'm na ungratefu', I beg to gie your lordship a piece of advice in turn. Never be caution for onybody, for the cautioner has often to pay the penalty."

The wonderful cure by Salvation Oil of Mr. M. S. Culp, 220 George St., Baltimore, Md., who was for many years so prostrated with Rheumatism as to be entirely helpless has awakened wide-spread interest in this remedy. It costs only 25 cts.

"If the heart of a man is depressed with cares and suffering, the mist is dispelled when the bottle appears." Not a bottle of spirits, oh no! but a small vial of that invaluable compound known to civilization as Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, which will cure a cough or cold immediately.

Gen. Edward Hatch of the United States army is dead.

W. H. Worthington, editor of the "Patrons of Husbandry," published at Columbus, Mass., writes under date of Feb., 25, 1882: "Your great remedy Allen's Lung Balsam, I have used in my family for fifteen years for coughs and colds, and know it to be the best." 25c., 50c., and $1.00 a bottle.

James Botten, a bed-ridden paralytic, who was also suffering acutely from Bright's disease of the kidneys, was a patient at the Home of Incurables in Chicago. A few days ago, while his wi e and daughter visited him, they found his face bruised, his eyes blackened and his tongue badly cut by his teeth. He told them that these injuries were inflicted by the attendants at the institution, who were in the habit of striking him with their fists. It appears that they did this to prevent him from groaning when suffering from paroxysms of pain. Botten died, and a coroner's jury recommended that the matter be investigated by the grand jury.

Ex-President Cleveland was elected a member of the Manhattan club.

Deserving of Confidence.—There is no article which so richly deserves the entire confidence of the community as Brown's Bronchial Troches. Those suffering from Asthmatic and Bronchial Diseases, Coughs, and Colds should try them. Price 25 cents.

The village of Cannonsburg, Kent county, was practically wiped out by fire. Eight buildings were destroyed. The village has no telegraphic communication, and no particulars have been obtained.

Dr. T. Heman Brehemer, an eminent German authority, says: "Consumption is always due to deficient nutrition of the lungs, caused by bad blood." At the Brompton Hospital for consumptives, London, England, a statement has been published that 52 per cent. of the patients of that institution have unsuspected kidney disorder. This explains why the proprietors of Warner's Safe Cure claim that they have received many testimonials which they have not published because of the incredulity with which they would be received were it claimed that Warner's Safe Cure cures co nsumption. But the fact is that if your kidneys be cured and put in a healthy condition they expel the uric acid and poisonous waste matter, and prevent the irritation of the delicate substances of the lungs, thereby removing the cause. When the effect is removed the symptom of kidney disease, which is called consumption, disappears, and with it the irritation, which caused it.

Don't Get Caught

This Spring, as you may have been before, with your blood full of impurities, your digestion impaired, appetite poor, kidneys and liver torpid and whole system liable to be prostrated by disease—but get yourself into good condition, and ready for the changing and warmer weather, by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. It stands unequalled for purifying the blood, giving an appetite, and for a regulating and general spring medicine. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"For five years I was sick every spring, but last year began in February to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I used five bottles and have not seen a sick day since." G. W. Sloan, Milton, Mass.

"My son was afflicted with the worst type of scrofula, and on the recommendation of my druggist I gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla. To-day he is sound and well, notwithstanding it was said there was not enough medicine in Illinois to effect a cure." J. Christian, Illipolis, Ill.

N. B. If you have decided to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any other.

BEST AND CHEAPEST.

The last place in the world for a man to economize is in buying a Cough Medicine. Yet there are many who will go to their druggist, and, instead of asking for ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM, the best remedy he has in his store, they will take anything at all (if it is only cheap) that may be offered. These same people would exercise more care and thought while buying bread and butter for their families, when different qualities are to be had, and would always take the best. Ought they not, when life and death is at stake, exercise at least as much care?

Waste Not, Want Not.

Dr. Talmage Issues a Warning to Young Men on the Danger of Going in Debt.

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 7.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., of Brooklyn preached here this evening to a vast audience. His subject was "The Slaughter," and his text, Proverbs, vii., 2: "As an ox to the slaughter." The eloqent preacher said:

There is nothing in the voice or manner of the butcher to indicate to the ox that there is death ahead. The ox thinks he is going on to a rich pasture field of clover, where all day long he will revel in the herbaceous luxuriance; but after a while the men and boys close in upon him with sticks and stones and shouting, and drive him through bars and into a doorway, where he is fastened, and with a well aimed stroke the axe fells him; and so the anticipation of the redolent past-pasture field is completely disappointed. So many a young man has been driven on by temptation to what he thought would be a paradisical enjoyment; but after a while influence with a darker hue and swarthier arm close in upon him and he finds that instead of making an excursion into a garden he has been driven as an ox to the slaughter."

1. We are apt to blame young men for being destroyed when we ought to blame the influences that destroy them. Society slaughters a great many men who behest, "You must keep up appearances; whatever be your salary, you must dress as well as others, you must wine and brandy as many friends, you must smoke as costly cigars, you must give as costly entertainments, and you must live in as fashionable a boarding-house. If you haven't the money, borrow. If you can't borrow make a false entry, or subtract here and there a bill from a bundle of bank bills; you will only have to make the deception a little while; in a few months, or in a year or two, you can make all right. Nobody will be hurt by it; nobody will be the wiser. You yourself will not be damaged." By that awful process 100,000 men have been slaughtered for time and slaughtered for eternity.

Suppose you borrow. There is nothing wrong about borrowing money. There is hardly a man in the house but has sometimes borrowed money. Vast estate have been built on a borrowed dollar. But there are two kinds of borrowed money. Money borrowed for the purpose of starting or keeping up legitimate enterprise and expense, and money borrowed to get that which you can do without. The first is right, the other is wrong. If you have money enough of your own to buy a coat, however plain, and then you borrow money for a dandy's outfit you have taken the first revolution of the wheel down grade. Borrow for the necessites; that may be well. Borrow for the luxuries; that tips your prospects over in the wrong direction.

The bible distinctly says the borrow is servant of the leader. It is a bad state of things when you have to go down some other street to escape meeting some one whom you owe. If young men knew what is the despotism of being in debt more of them would keep out of it. What did debt do for Lord Bacon, with a mind towering above the centuries? It induced him to take bribes and convict himself as a criminal before all ages. What did debt do for Walter Scott? Broken-hearted at Abbotsford. Kept him writing until his hand gave out in paralysis to keep the Sheriff away from his pictures and statury. Better for him if he had minded the maxim which he had chiseled over the fireplace at Abbotsford: "Waste not, want not."

The trouble is, my friends, the people do not understand the ethics of going in debt, and that if you purchase goods with no expectation of paying for them or go into debts which you can not meet you steal just so much money. If I go into a grocer's store and I buy sugars and coffees and meats with no capacity to pay for them and no intention of paying for them I am more dishonest than if I go into the store and when the grocer's face is turned the other way I fill my pockets with the articles of merchandise and carry off a ham. In the one case I take the merchant's time and I take the time of his messenger to transfer the goods to my house, while in the other case I take none of the time of the merchant and I wait upon myself and I transfer the goods without any trouble to him. In other words, a sneak thief is not so bad as a man who contracts for debts he never expects to pay.

Yet in all our cities there are families that move every May day to get into proximity to other grocers and meat-shops and apothecaries. They owe everybody within half a mile of where they now live and next May they will move into a distant part of the city, finding a new lot of victims. Meanwhile you, the honest family in the new house, are bothered day by day by the knocking at the door of disappointed bakers and butchers and dry-goods dealers and newspaper-carriers, and you are asked where your predecessor is. You do not know. It was arranged you should not know. Meanwhile your predecessor has gone to some distant part of the city, and the people who have anything to sell have sent their wagons and stopped there to solicit the "valuable" custom of the new neighbor, and he, the new neighbor, with great complacency and with an air of influence, orders the finest steaks and the highest-priced sugars, and the best of the canned fruits, and, perhaps, all the newspapers. And the debts will keep on accumulating until he gets his goods on the 30th of next April in the furniture cart.

Now, let me say if there are any such persons in the house, if you have any regard for your own greatly distant part of the city. It is too bad that, having had all the trouble of consuming the goods, you should also have the trouble of being dunned! And let me say that if you find that this pictures your own photograph, instead of being in church you ought to be in the penitentiary! No wonder that so many of our merchants fail in business. They are swindled into bankruptcy by these wandering arabs, these normands of life. They cheat the grocer out of the green apples which make them sick, the physician who attends their distress, and the undertaker who fits them out for departure from the neighborhood where they owe everybody when they pay the debt of nature, the only debt they ever do pay!

Now our young men are coming up in this depraved state of commerical ethics, and I am solicitous about them. I want to warn them against being slaughtered on the sharp edges of debt. You want many things you have not, my young friends. You shall have them if you have patience and honesty and industry. Certain lines of conduct always lead out to certain successes.

There is a law which controls even those things that seem haphazard. I have been told by those who have observed that it is possible to calculate just how many letters will be sent to the dead-letter office every year through misdirection; that it is possible to calculate just how many letters will be detained for lack of postage stamps through the forgetfulness of the senders, and that it is possible to tell just how many people will fall in the streets by slipping on an orange peel. In other words, there are no accidents. The most insignificant event you ever heard of is the link between two eternities—the eternity of the past and the eternity of the future. Head the right way, young man, and you will come out at the right goal.

Bring me a young man and tell me what his physical health is and what his mental caliber and what his habits and I will tell you what will be his destiny for this world and his destiny for the world to come, and I will not make five inaccurate prophecies out of the 500. All this makes me solicitous in regard to young men, and I want to make them nervous in regard to the contraction of unpayable debts. I give you a paragraph from my own experience.

My first settlement as a pastor was in a village. My salary was $800 and a parsonage. The amount seemed enormous to me, I said to myself: "What! all this for one year!" I was afraid of getting worldly under so much prosperity! I resolved to invite all the congregation to my house in groups of twenty-five each. We began, and as they were the best congregation in all the world and we felt nothing to good for them we piled all the luxuries on the table. I never completed the undertaking. At the end of six months I was in financial despair. I found what every young man learns in time to save himself, or too late, that you must measure the size of a man's body before you begin to cut the cloth for his coat.

When a young man willfully, and of choice, having the comforts of life, goes into the contraction of unpayable debts he knows not into what he goes. The creditors get after the debtor, the pack of hounds in full cry, and alas! for the reindeer. They jingle his door-bell before he gets up in the morning, they jingle his door bell after he has gone to bed at night. They meet him as he comes off his front steps. They send him a postal card or a letter, in curtest style, telling him to pay up. They attach his goods. They want cash, or a note at thirty days, or a note on demand. They call him a knave. They say he lies. They want him disciplined at the church. They want him turned out of the bank. They come at him from this side, and from that side, and from behind, and he is insulted and gibbeted, and sued, and dunned, and sworn at, until he gets the nervous dyspepsia, gets neuralgia, gets liver complaint, gets heart disease, gets convulsive disorder, gets consumption.

Now he is dead and you say: "Of course they will let him alone." Oh, no! Now they are watchful to see whether there any unnecessary expenses at the obsequies, to see whether there is any useless handle on the casket, to see whether there is any surplus plait on the shroud, to see whether the hearse is costly or cheap, to see whether the flowers sent to the casket have been bought by the family or donated, to see in whose name the deed to the grave is made out. Then they ransack the bereft household, the books, the pictures, the carpets, the chairs, the sofa, the piano, the matresses, the pillow on which he died. Cursed be debt! For the sake of your own happiness, for the sake of your good morals, for the sake of your own immortal soul, for God's sake, young man, as far as possible, keep ou of it.

2. But I think more young men are slaughtered through irreligion. Take away a young man's religion and you make him the prey of evil. We all know that the bible is the only perfect system of morals. Now, if you want to destroy the young man's moral's take his bible away. How will you do that? Well you will caricature his reverence for the scriptures, you will take all those incidents of the bible which can be made mirth of—Jonah's whale, Samson's foxes, Adam's rib—then you will caricature eccentric Christians or inconsistent Christians, then you will pass off as your own all those hackneyed arguments against Christianity which are as old as Tom Paine, as old as Voltaire, as old as sin. Now you have captured his bible, and you have taken his strongest fortress; the way is comparatively clear, and all the gates of his soul are set open in invitation to the sins of earth and the sorrows of death, that they may come in and drive the stake for their encampment.

A steamer fifteen hundred miles from shore with broken rudder and lost compass and bulk leaking fifty gallons the hour is better off than a young man when you have robbed him of his bible. Have you ever noticed how despicably mean it is to take away the world's bible without proposing a substitute? It is meaner than to come to a sick man and steal his medicine, meaner than to come to a cripple and steal his crutch, meaner than to come to a pauper and steal his crust, meaner than to come to a poor man and burn his house down. It is the worst of all larcenies to steal the bible, which has been the crutch and medicine and food and eternal home to so many! What a generous and magnanimous business infidelity has gone into! This splitting up of life-boats and taking away of fire-escapes and extinguishing of light-houses.

I come out and I say to such people, "What are you doing all this for?" "Oh," they say, "just for fun." It is such fun to see Christians try to hold on their bibles! Many of them have lost loved ones, and have been told that there is a resurrection, and it is such fun to tell them there will no resurrection! Many of them have believed that Christ came to carry the burdens and to heal the wounds of the world, and it is such fun to tell them they will have to be their own savior! Think of the meanest thing you ever heard of: then go down 1,000 feet underneath it, and you will find yourself at the top of a stairs 100 miles long; go to the bottom of the stairs and you will find a ladder 1,000 miles long; then go to the foot of the ladder and look off a precipice half as far as from here to China, and you will find the headquarters of the meanness that would rob this world of its only comfort in life, its only peace in death, and its only hope for immortality. Slaughter a young man's faith in God, and there is not much more left to slaughter.

Now, what has become of the slaughtered? Well, some of them are in their father's or mother's house broken down in health, waiting to die; others are in the hospital; others in Greenwood, or, rather their bodies are, for their souls have gone on to retribution. Not much prospect for a young man who started life with good health, and good education, and a Christian example set him, and opportunity of usefulness, who gathered all his treasures and put them in one box, and then dropped it into the sea.

Now, how is this wholesale slaughter to be stopped? There is not a person in the house but is interested in that question. Young man, arm yourself. The object of my sermon is to put a weapon in each of your hands for your own defense. Wait not for Young Men's Christian associations to protect you. Appealing to God for help, take care of yourself.

First: have a room somewhere that you can call your own. Whether it be the back parlor of a fashionable boarding-house, or a room in the fourth story of a cheap lodging, I care not. Only have that one room your fortress. Let not the dissipator or unclean step over the threshold. If they come up the long flight of stairs and knock at the door, meet them face to face and kindly yet firmly refuse them admittance. Have a few family portraits on the wall, if you brought them with you from your country home. Have a bible on the stand. If you can afford it and you can play on one, have an instrument of music—harp or flute, or cornet, or melodeon, or violin, or piano. Every morning before you leave that room, pray. Make that room your Gibraltar, your Sebastopol, your Mount Zion. Let no bad book or newspaper come into that room, any more than you would allow a cobra to coil on your table.

Take care of yourself. Nobody else will take care of you. Your help will not come up two or three or four flights of stairs; your help will come through the roof, down from heaven, from that God who in the 6,000 years of the world's history never betrayed a young man who tried to be good and a Christian. Let me say in regard to your adverse worldly circumstances in passing that you are on a level now with those who are finally to succeed. Mark my words, young man, and think of it thirty years from now. You will find that those who thirty years from now are millionaires of this country, who are the great philanthropists of the country—mightiest in church and state—are this morning on a level with you, not an inch above, and you in straitened circumstances now.

Herschel earned his living by playing a violin at parties and in the interstices of the play he would go out and look up at the midnight heavens, the fields of his immortal conquests. George Stephenson rose from being the foreman in a colliery to be the most renowned of the world's engineer. No outfit, no capital to start with! Young man, go down to the Mechanic library and get some books and read of what wonderful mechanism God gave you in your hand; in your foot, in your eye, in your ear, and then ask some doctor to take you into the dissecting-room and illustrate to you what you have read about, and never again commit ~~the~~ blasphemy of saying you have no capital to start with. Equipped! Why! the poorest young man in this house is equipped as only the God of the whole universe could afford to equip him. Then his body—a very poor affair as compared with his wonderful soul—oh, that is what makes me solicitous. I am not so much anxious about you, young man, because you have so little to do with us. I am anxious about you because you have much to risk and lose or gain.

There is no class of persons that so stir my sympathies as young men in great cities. Not quite enough salary to live on and all the temptations that come from that deficit. Invited on all hands to drink, and their exhausted nervous system seeming to demand stimulus. Their religion caricatured by most of the clerks in the store and most of the operatives in the factory. The rapids of temptation and death rushing against that young man forty miles the hour and he in a frail boat headed up the stream, with nothing but a broken oar to work with. Unless Almighty God help them they will go under.

Ah! when I told you to take care of yourself you misunderstood me if you thought I meant you are to depend upon human resolution, which may be dissolved in the foam of the wine cup or may be blown out with the first gust of temptation. Here is the helmet, the sword of Lord God Almighty. Clothe yourself in that panoply and you shall not be put to confusion. Sin pays well neither in this world nor the next, but right thinking and right believing and right acting will take you in safety through this life and in transport through the next.

I shall never forget a prayer I heard a young man make some fifteen years ago. It was a very short prayer but it was a tremendous prayer: "O Lord, help us. We find it so very easy to do wrong and so hard to do right. Lord, help us." That prayer I warrant you reached the ear of God and reached his heart. And there are in this house a hundred men who have found out—a thousand young men perhaps who have found out that very thing. It is so very easy to do wrong and so hard to do right.

I got a letter, only one paragraph of which I shall read: "Having moved around somewhat I have run across many young men of intelligence, ardent strivers after the will-o'-the-wisp, fortune, and of one of these I would speak. He was a young Englishman of 23 or 24 years, who came to New York, where he had acquaintances, with barely sufficient to keep him a couple of weeks. He had been tenderly reared; perhaps I should say too tenderly, and was not used to earning his own living and found it extremely difficult to get any position that he was capable of filling. After many vain efforts in this direction he found himself Sunday evening in Brooklyn, near your church, with about $3 left of his small capital, Providence seemed to lead him to your door and he determined to go and hear you.

"He told me his going to hear you that night was undoubtedly the turning point in his life, for when he went into your church he felt desperate, but while listening to your discourse his better nature got the mastery. I truly believe from what this young man told me that your sounding the depths of his heart that night alone brought him back to his God, whom he was so near leaving."

The echo that is of multitudes in the house. I am not preaching an abstraction, but a great reality. Oh, friendless young man! Oh, prodigal young man! Oh, broken-hearted young man, discouraged young man, wounded young man! I commend you to Christ this day, the best friend a man ever had. He meets you this morning. You have come here for this blessing. Despise not that emotion rising in your soul. It is divinely lifted. Look into the face of Christ. Lift one prayer to your father's God, to your mother's God, and get the pardoning blessing. Now, while I speak, you are in the forks of the road, and this is the right road and that is the wrong road, and I see you start on the right road.

One Sabbath morning at the close of my service I saw a gold watch of the world-renowned and deeply lamented violinist Ole Bull. You remember he died in his island home off the coast of Norway. That gold watch he had wound up day after day through his illness, and then he said to his companion: "Now I want to wind this watch as long as I can, and then when I am gone I want you to keep it wound up until it gets to my friend Dr. Doremus, in New York, and then he will keep it wound up until his life is done, and then I want the watch to go to his youngson, my especial favorite."

The great musician, who more than any other artist had made the violin speak and sing and weep and laugh and triumph—for it seemed when he drew the bow across the strings as if all earth and heaven trembled in delighted sympathy—the great musician, in a room looking off upon the sea and surrounded by his favorite instruments of music, closed his eyes in death. While all the world was mourning at his departure, sixteen crowded steamers fell into line of funeral procession to carry his body to the mainland. There were 50,000 of his countrymen gathered in an amphitheater of the hills waiting to hear the eulogium, and it was said when the great orator of the day with stentorian voice began to speak, the 50,000 people on the hillsides burst into tears.

Oh, that was the close of a life that had done so much to make the world happy. But I have to tell you, young man, if you live right and die right, that was a tame scene compared with that which will greet you when from the galleries of heaven the 144,000 shall accord with Christ in crying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

And the influences that on earth you put in motion will go down from generation to generation, the influences you wound up handed to your children, and their influences wound up and handed to their children until watch and clock are no more needed to mark the progress, because time itself shall be no longer.

A Boy's Logical Argument.

The Up-River News gives the following reminiscence of an incident in an Old town lyceum forty years ago, to which all the ministers, doctors and lawyers of the town belonged. One evening capital punishment was the question under discussion and called out the best forces on both sides. During the evening a young boy who had been a constant member, replied to Deacon Rigby upon this question. The deacon was for hanging. The boy opposed. Said the deacon, quoting from the Mosaic law, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man his blood shall be shed," thinking this to be a bombshell to his opponents, he dwelt upon it until his time expired, when the boy sprang to his feet and said:

"Supposing we take the law which the gentleman has quoted, and which in a philosophical sense has been abrogated as null and void since the birth of our Savour, and see what the logical deduction would come to. For example, one man kills another, another man kills him, and so on until we come to the last man on earth. Who's going to kill him? He dare not suicide, for that same law forbids it. Now, deacon," said the boy, "what are yon going to do with that last man?

The boy's logic called out rounds of applause and vanquished the deacon. The boy is now chief justice of the supreme court of the United States, Melville W. Fuller.—Lewiston Journal.

Dakota School Lands.

The provisions made by Congress for public education in the States of North and South Dakota are munificent. Besides re-affirming the grant of the 16th and 36th sections in every township for common schools, it grants 46,080 acres to each university purposes. North Dakota receives 90,000 acres, and South Dakota 120,000 acres, for the support of agricultural colleges. To each of the Dakotas is also given, in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new states by section 8 of the act of September 4, 1841, now repealed, 40,000 acres for schools of mines, 40,000 for reform schools, 40,000 acres for agricultural colleges, 40,000 acres for state universities, 80,000 acres for state normal schools, and for other educational and charitable purposes 260,000 acres, making a total of 500,000 acres.

An Amphibious Spinster.

There is a maiden lady in a city not far from Elberton who is so constituted that she cannot live out of water but a short while at a time. After remaining away from a bath tub for a couple of hours she commences to faint and almost suffocates, and to procure relief must at once cover her entire body in cold water. She has in her room a pool of fresh water, and in this she spends a greater part of her time, both winter and summer. Otherwise her health is very good.—Savannah News.

Minnesota Legislature.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5.

SENATE.—Mr. Keller presented his report on the twine trust in the senate. The gentleman comes to the conclusion, after a thorough investigation, that the twine trust is a myth: that it has no existence except in the imagination of people. The rise in the price of binding twine he finds is due to natural causes—chiefly to the scarcity of the raw material. The gentleman gives interesting facts and figures; and in conclusion calls attention to the new process for manufacturing twine, from the fiber of certain weeds. The encouragement by the farmers of this state of the new industry, he suggests, many result in securing lower prices.

HOUSE.—Mr. Hay's bill providing that a grand jury shall consist of 7 to 11 jurymen will have to be repealed. It passed both houses and received the governor's signature some time ago. But now, having been put all the way through the legislative mill, incidentally receiving the endorsement of several lawyers, it is found to be unconstitutional.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6.

SENATE.—The Third Regiment bill came up which elicited debate, participated in by the same gentlemen who talked over the measure when it was up in committee of the whole a few days ago. The motion to refer was lost by a vote of 24 nays to 11 ayes, and then the bill was passed by a vote of 37 to 11.

Mr. Pope's bill repealing the law providing for the taxation of railroads on their gross earnings was acted on favorably by the senate in committee. It was explained by Mr. Pope that the repeal was desirable from the fact that the state cannot enforce the collection of taxes upon the interstate earnings of railroads; and while it was true that they paid a tax on their interstate earnings they could decline to do so if they choose. The repeal would bring the railroads under the old law, which is more satisfactory.

HOUSE.—The house spent the whole afternoon yesterday on general orders. There was not a quorum present at any one time, and before they were through, at 6 o'clock, there were only about twenty-five members present. They worked faithfully, however, and disposed of thirty-five bills, most of which were of a local or technical nature and caused little or no debate. The only bill indefinately postponed was the Sevatson bill to punish the corrupt use of money at elections. This was killed on the ground of impracticability. The bill which caused the longest debate was the Red river valley drainage bill, which was recommended to pass.

MONDAY, APRIL 8.

SENATE.—The documents relating to the sale of seedling fruit trees from the experimental farm at Lake Minnetonka were laid before the senate yesterday, but action with reference to them was deferred at the instance of Mr. Pope. Mr. Pope stated that the resolution calling for information regarding these sales was introduced by him in consequence of a statement made by a prominent citizen of Minnesota to the effect that a large number of fruit trees have been sold, the proceeds of which sales were never accounted for.

The telegrams and other communications received by the mayor of St. Paul and by the St. Paul chamber of commerce, officially, for aid in behalf of the sufferers by the prairie fires in Sully county, Dak., were read in the senate and, on motion of Mr. Scheffer, a committee of five was appointed to report a plan of relief. The committe consists of Messrs. Scheffer, Swenson, Clark, Smith and Durant.

HOUSE.—The governor yesterday recommended the introduction of a bill into the house amending the Hay bill reducing the number of the grand jurors of the state, which has been passed but deemed unconstitutional. Accordingly Mr. Hay introduced a bill yesterday which repeals the law already passed, and makes the grand jury a body of not more than fifteen, nor less than thirteen, the concurrence of twelve being necessary in finding any indictment. This satisfies the question of constitutionality, which, by the way, is more a question of spirit than of letter of the constitution.

The invitations for the banquet to be given by the city of St. Paul to the state officers and members of the legislature were issued yesterday. They are engraved in fine script, the work being of the most artistic order, and are accompanied by a bright red ribbon badge lettered in gold, which the guest is expected to wear on the evening of the banquet. A handsomely engraved card of admission also accompanies the invitation. All is in most excellent taste.

TUESDAY, APRIL 9.

SENATE.—The judiciary committee had a final struggle yesterday over the Duluth & Winnipeg land grant forfeiture bills, resulting in a vote to recommend the passage of the bill. A prior motion to recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill had failed by reason of a tie vote, and it is understood that the majority on the recommendatory vote was one only. The proceedings were held in executive session.

Unexpected strength was developed in the senate in support of Mr. Hixon's bill to take the control of the agricultural college away from the university regents and place it in charge of a board, to be known as the agricultural college board. This bill is avowedly a Farmer's alliance measure, and is similar to a bill killed at the last session. The bill may possibly pass when it is reached.

HOUSE.—For about half an hour yesterday afternoon the house gave its latest and best imitation of a lot of men endeavoring not to do any business.

The lawyers and newspaper men in the house had a war of words over Senator Day's bill granting the right to retract to country newspapers.

The bill creating an additional judge in the Eleventh judicial district came up in the house yesterday. It was Mr. Whiteman's measure which had such a fight for its life in the senate. It had little opposition in the house. The rules were suspended and it passed as a local measure, with two votes against it. Those were cast by Messrs. Hay and Flathers.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10.

SENATE.—Mr. Hixson pitched into the bill bringing county elevators doing a business for compensation under the control of the railroad and warehouse commission and providing for their licensing. The bill was drafted by the railroad and warehouse commission, and was introduced by Mr. Shields. Mr. Hixson declared that the bill was not in the interests of the farmers, but was an outrage upon them. It would also, he claimed, encourage the wheat ticket system, which system was iniquitous and ought to be abolished. After a brief debate the measure was recommended for indefinite postponement. Notice of reconsideration was given.

When the Duluth & Winnipeg forfeiture bill was reported on favorably in the senate by the judiciary committee an attempt was made to summarily kill it. Mr. Buckman moving its indefinite postponement and Mr. Edwards giving the motion a second. There were protests from two or three senators against this course, and Mr. Crandall called for the ayes and noes on the motion. The vote stood 18 for indefinite postponement and 21 against. The committee's report was then adopted, and the bill goes on general orders.

HOUSE.—The Day libel bill was the occasion of a hard-fought battle in the house yesterday. Members who have been in previous legislatures say that they never saw a harder fight. It passed—yeas, 54; nays, 35.

THURSDAY, APRIL 11.

SENATE.—There was a great difference between the vote on the Hixson bill to divorce the agricultural college from the state university, taken in the senate on the question of final passage yesterday, and the vote taken in committee of the whole two or three days ago, whereby the measure was recommended to pass. When the final vote was taken, eleven senators voted in favor of the measure, and twenty-two against it.

When Mr. Day's bill amending the libel law came back from the house, the house amendments were adopted. The senate failed, however, to concur in the passage of the bill as amended, the vote standing 21 ayes to 9 noes. The bill was declared lost, for the reason that not a majority of the entire senate voted in the affirmative; but Mr. Day bobbed up with a notice of reconsideration, and the measure has yet a chance of life.

HOUSE—The house was a veritable cave of the winds yesterday morning. It was in session two hours and fifty minutes, and when the noon recess was taken it required very close investigation to find out in what respect the business of the session had been in the least furthered.

The friends of meat inspection tried to go into committee of the whole yesterday, but Judge Fleming demanded the ayes and noes, and the roll call found 56 in favor of the motion and 25 against. So the motion was lost.

MINNESOTA CULLINGS.

The News of the Week Throughout the Entire State.

It is said the loss by prairie fire in Jackson county on the 2d inst. will exceed $100,000.

Absolem Parker, who was killed by Frank Martin, his employer at Spokane Falls, was from Sauk Center, where his relatives now live.

Harry Swayne, who robbed the Free Press, was bound over to the grand jury at Mankato, having waived examination.

John Weddendorf has been appointed route agent on the Omaha road between St. Paul and Council Bluffs, and leaves to take that position.

While C. Walkley's family were at supper in the town of St. Augusta in Stearns county, a thief entered the bed room and stole $100 in gold and a wheat receipt on F. Arnold from a trunk. He was discovered, but escaped through a window.

The Drake granite quarry has been looking over the ground with a view of erecting polishing shops at Sauk Rapids. The water power belonging to the Davidson estate will be used, and the shops will employ between 200 and 300 men.

J. B. Hyde's hardware store was entered by burglars at Northfield. Seven revolvers and a quantity of cutlery and plated goods were taken. The thieves also attempted to set fire to the store. No arrests.

Max Shapin, of Brainerd the man who was convicted of selling diseased meat and fined $300, received a letter signed "The White Caps" ordering him to leave town or suffer a penalty of tar and feathers and a ride on a rail if he did not.

J. K. Knapp of Madison Lake was arrested charged with selling liquor without a license. He waived examination and was bound over. Knapp was keeping a drug store, and the alleged liquor was in the form of bitters.

Henry Koweth, Sr., died from the effects of burns received in the fire at Lake Benton, while endeavoring to save his horses. Mr. Koweth's house was not burned as reported, but his barns and stock were totally destroyed.

Several days ago, while R. E. Brown of Mankato, was making a deposit in the bank, he laid a sack containing money on the counter. The money was stolen, and Otto Dollar, who was in the bank at the time, was arrested and charged with the theft.

Frank Sobieskie, who has been a railroad employe at Austin, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a revolver. He leaves a large family. He had been garnisheed for a liquor bill and had been discharged from his employment.

John Chapell, a brakemen on the Northern Pacific while coupling cars at Wadena, fell on the track. Several cars passed over his arm and shoulder. He was taken to Brainerd, where his arm will be amputated. He lives in Winona.

The trustees of the M. E. college met at Fergus Falls, and did important work. Rev. C. R. Kellerman, of that city, was appointed executive agent and accepted. Plans for the new buildings were adopted, and their erection will begin as soon as possible. The main school building will cost $20,000.

About a thousand citizens of Litchfield, headed by the Cornet band, marched to the depot escorting Col. T. C. Jewett, the newly appointed commissioner for the district of Alaska to reside at Sitka. The colonel was one of the earliest settlers and took active part in the Indian troubles of 1862.

H. T. Horton, proprietor of the Grand opera house of Rochester, has purchased the lease and good will of the Palace opera house, lately controlled by R. Milo Jocks & Son, and will hereafter, through his manager, W. H. Wright, control the amusement business of that city. The Grand in its present condition is one of the best houses in Southern Minnesota.

A man named Young caned another named Wad on the street at Sauk Center. Wad, it is claimed, ran away with Young's wife. Young traced the couple to Sauk Center. Young was found guilty of assault, but refused to pay a fine, and was sent to jail at St. Cloud. The parties are reported to be from Stillwater, and in appearance were both gentlemen of good character.

A distressing case of poisoning occurred about twenty miles north of Fergus Falls, near Lake Lula. A farmer named Moore was plowing, and his little boy and girl were in the field with him. He plowed up something like a wild parsnip, which his children washed and ate. In a little while they were taken ill and showed signs of poisoning, and the younger, a bright little boy of five, died in convulsions in a very short time. At last accounts the little girl was not dead, but still very sick.

A redhot county seat war is now being waged in Murray county. Since the organization of the county, 12 years ago, Currie, located in the northern part of the county, has been the county seat. Two years ago, under an unconstitutional law, Slayton claimed it and came in the night and stole away the records, but later returned them. Slayton now wants it but in order to call an election 60 per cent of the voters of the county must sign a petition to that effect. These petitions are now being circulated, and the chances are favorable that the desired number will be secured.

HOUSEHOLD.

Hints for the House.

A little saltpetre or carbonate of soda mixed with the water in which flowers are placed will keep them fresh for two weeks.

The Novel Tints in millinery are English rose, magnolia, anemone pink, wisteria, lily-leaf green, oak heart, summer sky, and opal. The same colors appear in straw and braid hats as in bonnets.

The new washing surahs that now come in all the delicate fine shades will be largely used for summer frocks, for ties, for draperies, chemisettes, and will be especially valuable for hat and bonnet trimming.

Dress shoes are slightly pointed at the toes and are cut down deep in front. They have plain pompadour heels. A narrow strap holds the shoe over the instep, this strap runs through an oblong buckle of French brilliants.

To launder red table linen: Use tepid water, with a little powdered borax, which serves to set the color; wash the linen separately and quickly, using very little soap; rinse in tepid water containing a little boiled starch; hang out to dry in the shade, and iron when almost dry.

A Disinfectant—May be made cheaply by dissolving a bushel of salt in a barrel of water, and with this barrel of water slack a barrel of lime. This forms a sort of chloride of lime which may be used freely in cellars, outhouses and drains.

Washing Colored Goods—To prevent fading, rinse in salt water, or soak first for a few minutes in salt water; or, what is better for some goods, soak in water and ox gall. A spoonful of ox gall to a gallon of water is a good preparation.

To cure a felon, fill a tumbler with equal parts of fine salt and ice; mix well. Sink the finger in the center and allow it to remain until it is nearly frozen and numb, then withdraw it, and when sensation is restored renew the operation four or five times, when it will be found the disease is destroyed. This must be done before pus is formed.

Borax water will instantly remove all soils and stains from the hands, and heal all scratches and chafes. To make it put crude borax into a large bottle and fill with water until at last the water can absorb no more, and a residum remains at the bottom of the bottle. To the water in which the hands are to be washed pour from this bottle enough to make it very soft. It is very cleansing and healthy. By its use the hands will be kept in excellent condition.

Wash dresses for home and country wear are made with belted waist, full or plain on the shoulders, at the fancy of the wearer, and straight gathered skirt four and a half yards wide. Neither lining nor foundation skirt is used. The skirt is some three inches longer at the back and has about half the fullness massed there into a narrow space. The collar is a narrow knife pleating turned down from a standing band. The sleeves are either full and gathered into turned-back cuffs or else coat-shape, with much fullness at the armhole.

Words to a Wife.

In your study to master your husband's temper, do not forget to keep a firm hold of your own. Women are less selfish and less imperious, but they are more sensitive and hasty than men, and more apt, on small occasions to mount into a flame and become indignant about trifles. Of all things in the world beware most of this fault, for by indulging it you lose the grace and vantage ground of your sex. When your husband speaks harshly to you—as even the best of husbands may do in an evil moment—either remain silent, or, if you are pressed hard, give a firm but placid reply in a tone that expresses neither exasperation or contempt.—Cassell's Magazine.

Virtue in Onions and Beef.

What is the most strengthening food for a convalescent? Well, you know the beef-tea theory has been exploded. The most life-giving and digestible food that can be given to one just recovering from an illness is chopped beef. Just take a pound of the finest round of raw beef, cut off all the fat, slice two onions, and pepper and salt. Then chop the onion and meat together, turning them over and over until both are reduced almost to a pulp. Then spread on slices of rye bread, and eat as sandwiches. People talk about celery being a nervine, but let me tell you that there is nothing which quiets the nerves without bad results like onions. The use of them induces sleep, and much strength is obtained from them. That is the ideal food for convalescing, or for any one in a weak state of health. Canners' Gazette.

Trouble With the Ear.

Dr. J. Herbert Claiborne, jr., talking in the Medical Classics about removing insects from the ear, expresses the belief that "sweet oil is perhaps the best thing to keep the insect from moving. That is the first desideratum. The oil, by its thick consistence, will so entangle and bedraggle the insect's legs and wings that the intolerable noise will be stopped. If oil be not at hand use any liquid that is not poisonous or corrosive. Water will probably be within the reach of every one. This is also more liable to float out, too, than either sweet oil or glycerine. It has been suggested to blow tobacco smoke in the ear to stupefy the insect. We cannot endorse this advice; tobacco smoke blown into the ear of a child has been known to cause alarming symptoms. When the movements of the intruder have been arrested syringe the ear gently with warm water. All manner of insects and bugs have been found in the ear, but you can never tell in a given case who the rude caller is knocking at the door of your brain until you have him out."

Corn Fed.

Some of our corn belt editors are inquiring the value of corn bread and mush as food, now that the new roller process of flour is in vogue and wheat high in price, and yet they should know that a corn diet has been proven to be the cause of the decline in vigor and hardiness in hogs, rendering them peculiarly liable to cholera and other diseases. Now, if corn is not a good steady diet for animals it is not good for men, and ought not to be recommended for them. Wheat flour, made by the roller process, has a greater per cent. of muscle-making food than that made by the old process and makes more wholesome bread, and wheat bread is far more wholesome than corn bread. Corn bread and potatoes are both very common articles of diet, but do not build up, and are not proper food for growing children. Mush is generally eaten with milk which helps it out. Corn fed people are not a high type, and the agricultural papers in the "corn belt" don't want to encourage raising corn-fed children. To find corn-fed people, go south among the "Georgia Crackers."

Robert Louis Stevenson, the novelist, whose ill-health—said to have been due to excessive indulgence in cigarettes—necessitated his long yachting cruise, is reported to have overcome his desire for tobacco in that baneful form and to be much improved physically in consequence. It is also known that F. Marion Crawford, the author, was also a victim to that habit, which, however, he successfully overcame.

A most ingenious swindle is being worked by a traveling peddler in New Jersey country towns. He carries a bottle of medicine, a box of salve and a bottle of "perfumed disinfectant," and the whole lot costs $1. He particularly urges the merits of the disinfectant, and says that when the cork is left out the stuff diffuses a pleasant and healthful odor through the house. He leaves a sample bottle to be tried, and slyly slips the cork out, leaving the open bottle behind. The liquid is very volatile, and consequently when the peddler calls again in a few days the bottle is about half empty, the stuff having evaporated. He demands 50 cents for what has been "used," and so vehement in his demands that he generally gets it. He is reaping a harvest of half dollars.

POTPOURRI OF NEWS.

Washington Budget.

Secretary Rusk finds the roll of employes of the agricultural department so largely in excess of the resources for the current year that until after June 30 there will be far more dismissal then appointments. In the seed division alone eighty of the employes have been dismissed, and the force will be still further reduced. Secretary Rusk says he is determined there shall be no deficiency in his department for congress to provide for, if he can help it, and he thinks he can.

The office seekers are using some novel means to advance their interests. Three applicants for postoffices have sent along photographs to be filed with their papers of indorsement. The last of the three exhibits a rather curious effect. The applicant had evidently endeavored to assume his most genial expression, but the skill of the country photographer who took the portrait seems to have been overtaxed, for the result is an amusing combination of mingled astonishment and dismay.

The files of the appointment officers in the various departments reveal many striking instances of curses coming home to roost. Many Republican ex-officeholders, removed by Cleveland for offensive partisanship, file among their recommendations the charges filed against them at the time of their removal. These form the strongest possible testimonials to their stalwart Republicanism and eminent services in behalf of the party, as well as pathetic evidence of their martyrdom. It has not yet appeared just how much weight and value will be given to testimonials of this kind by the administration in making appointments to office.

The collector of customs at Port Townsend, Wash., was notified by telegraph to drop Capt. Herbert Beecher from the rolls the 15th inst. Capt. Beecher is a son of the late Henry Ward Beecher. He was nominated several years ago as a collector of customs at Port Townsend. Serious charges affecting his integrity were filed with the senate commerce committee, and he failed of confirmation. Secretary Manning, who felt very kindly toward Capt. Beecher, thereupon appointed him a special agent of the treasury department, with headquarters at Port Townsend. When Gardner, the alleged opium smuggler, was arrested at Ogdensburg, N. Y., a year ago, certain papers in connection with Capt. Beecher were found in his possession. This and other matters were brought to Secretary Windom's attention shortly after he assumed control of the treasury department, and after a full investigation he decided upon Capt. Beecher's dismissal.

Calendar of Casualties.

A fatal wreck occurred on the York river branch of the Richmond & Danville railroad about two miles above West Point Va. The heavy rains washed out a culvert and a part of the dam between the tank pond and the river, and an engine and seven freight cars plunged into the washout. Two men—a colored brakeman and the fireman, a young man man named Darvin—were buried under the cars and killed. The engineer, named Lynch, was terribly scalded, but managed to crawl out of the wreck.

The storm of thunder, lightning and hail, which broke over Norfolk, Va., turned to a cyclone, the wind blowing at the rate of fifty-four miles an hour. The wind came from the northeast, and blew into the harbor and its tributaries, and the tide at high water was eighteen inches higher than ever recorded before. The lower part of the city was flooded, and fire broke out on Water street, caused from slacking lime on the wharf of John O. Gamage & Son. The entire block, with the exception of Savage, Son & Co's commission merchants was in flames.

Just as a Santa Fe passenger train was pulling out at Lorenzo, a town fifty miles from Chicago, a freight train crashed into the rear of the train, to which was attached the private car of General Manager McCool, of the California Central railroad, a western branch of the Santa Fe. The occupants were a party of Mr. McCool's friends from Massachusetts, who had been spending a few weeks with his family at Los Angeles, and were returning home. Among the party were John L. Hart, wife, niece and son, Henry W. Lamb, Miss Alice Winslow, niece of Mr. Hart, all of Brookline, Mass. Of these Mr. Hart and Miss Winslow were killed, together with the cook and the porter. Other occupants of the car were severely injured.

Crimes and Criminals.

William B. Donahee, who claims to have studied law in Hon. Grover Cleveland's office in Buffalo, has been arrested at White Plains, charged with grand larceny in obtaining money on a fradulent mortgage.

Judge Prendergast of Chicago found William Wilson guilty of interfering with the judges and clerks of election and sentenced him to 300 days in jail. His offense was stealing the ballots after they had been counted.

Mrs. Annie Lawrence, aged seventy-one years, living in the Thirteenth ward, Allegheny City, was found by her husband in the yard with her throat cut from ear to ear. She had left the house during the night and committed suicide. There is no cause assigned for the deed.

Policeman John Manning of Bessemer, Ala., went to arrest a negro named Sandy Jones on a warrant. When Manning said "Sandy, I want you," the negro replied, "No, you don't," seized a Winchester rifle and shot Manning dead. Sandy fired through the door at three policemen outside, and then dashed off to liberty. He has not been found.

John G. Thompson, the missing postal clerk of Columbus, Ohio, who left Detroit suddenly when he learned that the authorities knew of his whereabouts, is now at the British-American hotel, Windsor. Thompson is a son of the late John G. Thompson, the well known Ohio politician. The penalty for his alleged crime is from one to ten years in the penitentiary.

William Kintella, a capitalist who is buying real estate at the Canada Soo, was held up by a gang of footpads, composed of H O'Neill, J. Neville, J. Doyle and Driscoll, all from Ottawa, Can., and W. McKenna of the Soo, Ont. They brutally assaulted him with clubs and revolvers, and, after relieving him of $600 and a gold watch, left him for dead. All the gang have been arrested.

One night a man stepped into the Gate City house at Gary, Dak., and asked Mr. Barton, the proprietor, to step to the door, saying a man wanted to see him. As he stepped to the door four toughs attacked him. He was badly beaten about the head and face and had one rib broken. He broke away from them and picked up an iron poker and soon ended the riot. The men had been drinking heavily. Two of the men have been arrested.

Postoffice inspectors arrested Harry D. Darby, a register clerk in the postoffice in Washington, for stealing valuable registered letters. When arrested Darby had $70 in his hand which he had just taken from a letter. The letter was mailed to Harper's Ferry, W. Va., contained $246 and was addressed to the United States treasury. After removing $70 Darby was about to reseal it. He is an old employe, having entered the office as a carrier in 1880.

Sheriff O'Neill, of Choteau county, Montana, arrested Charles and William Farrell, Jeff Pruitt and another man on the Marias on the charge of stealing sixty horses from the Canadian mounted police. The Farells drove these horses into the Northwestern territory to sell. The Canadian custom officers claim the payment of duty was evaded on them and they confiscated the whole band. The Farrels and Pruitt surprised Lee's camp on the night of Feb. 16, recaptured the horses and ran them back to the United States.

The Mechanic's and Trader's bank of New York did not care to make any statement concerning its suit for $30,000, began in St. Paul to recover on two promisory notes made by R. McFarland and indorsed by Downs & Finch. The more important creditors of that firm declare that the firm had their bookkeeper, McFarland, make two promissory notes for the $30,000, which the firm endorsed. Their representations, it is added, were that they were perfectly solvent and had a capital of $45,000. While this procedure is not believed to be in violations of the statutes, it will go for toward making the creditors more anxious.

After one of the most bitter legislative struggles in the history of the state of Connecticut, it was decided that John H. Swift must hang April 18 for the murder of his wife. In 1884 Swift married Katie McCann, the former being nineteen years of age, the latter twenty. They frequently met but never lived together, and why they were married was a mystery. July 1, 1887, as Katie was returning from her work with two female companions, she was shot dead by her husband after refusing to live with him. Swift pleaded insanity, caused by drink, but he was condemned to death, and the higher court upheld the decision.

A plan to wreck a passenger train was included in the programme arranged by the four men, John O'Brien, John Williams, Jacob Wilburth and Earnest Seefluth, who were arrested at Milwaukee for robbing Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul freight cars. When they were arrested the matter was under consideration, and they had not got to the point of fixing upon any particular train, but O'Brien said the idea was to fasten a timber upon the rails in a curve south of the city, and in the confusion following the derailment to get away with as much plunder as possible. Whether they were really equal to the execution of such a diabolical piece of business or not, they will probably remain for some time where they can do no harm, as they have confessed to having robbed cars on the Chicago & Northwestern as well as on the St. Paul road, and have likewise implicated another man, James Cooper, who is also under arrest. Cooper was released several months ago from the penitentiary at Stillwater, Minn., where he served a term for burglary.

Another attempt to wreck the west-bound limited vestibule express on the Ft. Wayne railroad, which passes through Canton Ohio, about midnight, was made near Louisville, at the same place that the attempt to wreck the same train was made one other night. An employe of the road, who lives in Louisville, discovered the dastardly design just in time to frustrate it. Upon investigating, he found that several railroad ties were securely strapped across the rails. Knowing that the limited was almost due and that he would be unable to remove the ties before the train arrived he ran eastward along the track toward the approaching train. The man had scarcely started when he heard the rumble in the distance. For a moment he was at a loss for a signal, but luckily found a newspaper in his pocket, which he ignited with a match and waved the blazing page about his head. The engineer saw the signal of fire and applied the brakes, but the train did not come to a standstill until it struck the obstruction on the track. The train had been considerably slowed up, however, and did not jump the track, although the cars were given a good shaking up.

Sorosia S. Alexander, a spinster of Brattleboro, Vt., obtained judgment for $20,847 against her deceased brother's estate for breach of agreement. Miss Alexander taught music in Massachusetts twenty years ago. Her brother, wishing her to take care of their aged parents in Brattleboro, offered to pay her $1,000 per year for so doing, and she accepted. About three or four years before the death of her brother Miss Alexander was about to be married, when he wrote to her urging her not to marry and leave her parents. He agreed to pay her an additional $10,000 if she would remain with her parents as long as they lived. With this promise she "shipped her lover and the wedding was declared off. Miss. Alexander remained an old maid and cared for her father and mother in their declining years. The old people outlived their son, and are both still alive and enjoying good health. Up to his death Alexander did not even keep his promise to pay his sister the $1,000 a year. She received nothing. Alexander made no provision in his will for the payment of the $1,000 a year or of the $10,000 conditional upon her staying with her parents as long as they lived. A jury gave her $41,800 but Judge Clifford has decided that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the $10,000 until the death of her parents, and entered judgement against E. S. Alexander's estate for the balance.

People Talked About.

Hon. Mr. Dunsmuir, the millionaire mining king of British Columbia, was discovered at Victoria, in a comatose condition, and on a physician arriving at the house pronounced him dead. Efforts were made to restore respiration, which were finally successful. The patient is better, and will likely pull through.

Patrick Lannon, an old soldier of the late war and early settler of Credit River settlement in Scott county, Minn., died very suddenly and in a very peculiar manner. He found and ate what he thought to be a parsnip. Soon he was found in a vacant warehouse groaning terribly and clutching at his bowels. He died shortly. He was afflicted with a double hernia and hydrocile, and it is possible that death was caused by strangulation of hernia.

Foreign Jottings.

An agreement has been reached by the state department and the German foreign office that there shall be no reinforcements of vessels or troops belonging to the two governments now in duty at Samoa. This agreement will be in force until after the Samoan commissioners have finished their labors. It is understood that the proposition for the agreement came direct from Prince Bismarck to Secretary Blaine.

News in General.

At Castle Garden New York six English boys between the ages of 11 and 19, passengers on the steamer Wyoming were detained on the charge that they had been hired in England by a man named Rew to work on his brother's ranche in Iowa. The boys will probably be sent back to England.

James Botten, a bed-ridden paralytic, who was also suffering acutely from Bright's disease of the kidneys, was a patient at the Home of Incurables in Chicago. A few days ago, while his wife and daughter visited him, they found his face bruised, his eyes blackened and his tongue badly cut by his teeth. He told them that these injuries were inflicted by the attendants at the institution, who were in the habit of striking him with their fists. It appears that they did this to prevent him from groaning when suffering from paroxysms of pain. Botten died, and a coroner's jury recommended that the matter be investigated by the grand jury.

President Boynton, of the settlers' union, in an interview at Fort Dodge, Iowa, renounced responsibility of that organization for present or threatened acts of violence, but says it is the work of individuals made desperate by genuine grievances. He declares the object of union is to secure settlers' rights in a legal manner. This conservative policy does not find favor with the radical element of the organization. The receipt of telegraph news from Washington of Secretary Noble's action in urging the attorney general to prompt institution of suit to quiet title in disputed lands creates great joy in the river land district. Settlers are certain of their rights, and claim their side has never been heard in court. They say if the investigation sustains the present claimants' title immediate and undisputed possessions will be given by the settlers. There is a tinge of dismay at the action of the land owners in pushing their claims regardless of the proposed investigation. This news from Washington has spurred the evictors to fresh efforts, and made settlers more determined than ever to retain possession of their farms until final settlement.

EVICTIONS CEASE.

Marshals Restrained From Evicting Settlers on the Des Moines River Lands.

DUBUQUE, Special Telegram, April 10.—An order from Judge Shiras, of the United States district court, issued to-day, ends for the present all proceedings against the Des Moines river land settlers. When United States Marshal Desmond proceeded a few days ago to enforce the processes of eviction against the settlers he was met by armed resistance. He returned to Dubuque and laid the case before Judge Shiras, telling him that resistance had been made, and that he proposed moving with a force sufficient to overcome all possible opposition. The judge, in his order, says:

> When you undertake the execution of the process in your hands, you should have at command aid sufficient to overcome any possible resistance. But, whilst the greatest care should be exercised to prevent any wrong or insult to the feelings of those evicted, or any injury to their personal property, yet the execution of the process must be thorough and complete. There is a matter outside the line of your duty which, however, should, I think, be considered by the court upon the question of the time when the process in your hands should be executed. It has been stated in the public newspapers, and I have no reason to doubt the correctness of the statement, that the secretary of the interior has officially requested the attorney general of the United States to examine into the past history and present condition of the disputed titles to these Des Moines river lands for the purpose of determining whether it may not be desirable to bring a proceeding in the name of the United States, in which, if there is any title or right available in law or equity to the settlers upon these lands, the same may be set forth and be heard and determined. It is not known yet what course the attorney general will pursue in these matters. Certainly it is only proper courtesy to allow a reasonable time to the attorney general to make the necessary investigation, and if so advised, to take action in the premises. Should the process of the court be at once executed, it might seem to be an effort to forestall the action of the attorney general, and thus lay the court open to the charge of discourtesy toward the co-ordinate branch of the government. Under these circumstances, I have concluded that it is the duty of the court to suspend for a reasonable time the execution of the process for eviction in these cases issued from the United States court in the Southern district of Iowa, awaiting the action of the attorney general, and you will, therefore, not proceed further in the execution of such process until further order of the court.

NO HOPE FOR SETTLERS.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, April 10.—The letters from the commissioner of the general land office transmitted by the secretary of the interior to the attorney general with a request that the question of bringing suits looking to the cancellation of patents for Des Moines river lands be looked into have reached the department of justice and have been placed in the hands of Solicitor General Jenks. The latter said today that, while he had not examined the papers, he was pretty well acquainted with the history of the cases, and greatly feared that there was no hope for the settlers if suits could be maintained. He does not, he says, desire to discourage the settlers, but he thinks the only hope of relief for the settlers lies in legislation.

SETTLERS REIGN SUPREME.

FORT DODGE, Iowa, Special Telegram, April 10.—It is all the way of settlers here tonight. The rains, that delay evictions, have passed, and yet the marshals moved not on the settlers' homes. To-night Marshal Hay returned without an attempt at making an eviction since the day they were driven from Hell's Hollow. Their departure is certainly a victory for the settlers, and the bold stand which they have taken. Officials were awed at the thoroughness of the settlers' preparations for their reception, and knew that an attempt at enforcing eviction meant bloodshed. The settler reigns supreme on the Des Moines river lands to-night, and will continue to farm his lands for some days to come. It is now thought that evictions will not be resumed until action is taken by the attorney general in the proposed investigations. Settlers have thus far repossessed themselves of 200 acres from which evictions were made last fall.

SENSATIONAL REPORTS.

DES MOINES, April 10.—The report has been sent out from Fort Dodge that a posse of twenty men had gone from here to assist the United States marshal in making evictions on the river lands. There is no truth in the report, no one having gone from here recently for that purpose. Careful inquiry at the different sources of information leads to the belief that the reports from the river land country have been greatly magnified for sensational purposes, and that no such excited feeling and no intention of joining battle with the marshal, as have been reported, exist.

FIGHTING FLAMES.

Brave Work of Firemen at a Milwaukee Blaze—Killed in a Railroad Wreck—A Michigan Town Destroyed by Fire.

MILWAUKEE, Special Telegram, April 10.—The hardest fight the Milwaukee fire department ever engaged in was that which lasted for four hours to-night at Sanger, Rockwell & Co's large sash, door and blind factory. The fire broke out in the warehouse, on the ground floor, and as soon as the chief reached the place and saw there was a prospect of a large fire he turned in a general alarm and the entire department was called to the scene. For one hour they worked with fifteen streams of water without seeming to have any effect. The large warehouse was stocked full of doors and sash, and as fast as the fire in one place was extinguished it broke out in another. Several of the firemen in the basement were overcome by the smoke, and for three hours one by one the men succumbed and were dragged out, until at 10 o'clock not over fifteen men of the entire force were able to work, and all of these had been carried out from one to three times. Chief Foley and his assistant chief were carried out four times each, and when the fire was finally overcome, shortly after 10 o'clock, the chief was at the head of his men, badly used up but still able to give orders. Never was such a scene witnessed at a fire here. On the broad sidewalk in front of the building and on every bench and table in the offices of the factory were men laid out, with doctors, policemen and factory employes at work over them. It became rumored about the city that and the wives, mothers and other relations of the firemen crowded the adjacent streets, making tearful inquiries after the fate of their friends. Thousands of people gathered in the large vacant block opposite the factory, and as every procession of policemen moved from the smoky fire center with their burden of disabled firemen the crowd would surge toward them like a great wave, only to be driven back by the squad of policemen that was kept patrolling the street. Soon after the general alarm was given Mayor Brown and Chief of Police Gannesen appeared on the scene and worked steadily until the fire was out, resuscitating and relieving the disabled firemen. All of the police patrol wagons were called into requisition, and as rapidly as six or eight of the disabled men could be treated, they were taken to the hospital or to their homes. When firemen were carrying a line of hose up a ladder the ladder fell, and two of the men were seriously injured; one, it is believed, fatally. Strange to say, that though upward of sixty men were disabled, no one was killed. The loss on stock and building was comparatively light, not exceeding $30,000 on Warehouse No. 2, to which the fire was confined. There was but $12,000 insurance on building and stock. Had not the firemen worked so nobly in the smoke the fire would have been one of the most destructive of the year. The factory employs upward of 700 men, and with its adjoining buildings covers a large territory in the lumber district. Up to midnight the disabled men, with the exception of William Curran, were all doing well.

Postal Clerkships for Dakota People.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, April 10.—Delegate Mathews to-day secured the appointment of William H. Grinnell as a postal clerk between Tracy and Pierre on the Northwestern road. He has also recommended W. E. Whiting, editor of the Brookings Sentinel, for a similar position to run between Oakes and Hayarden, and O. L. Snell of Norfolk as postal agent, Sully county, to run between Redfield and Gettysburg. Mrs. Mathews is still quite ill and hardly able to travel. The delegate expects to leave for home about the last of the week. Mr. Mathews denies that either he or Gov. Mellette indorsed the application of McDowell of Highmore for the Huron land office, and says his strongest support came from outside the territory. McDowell himself says he is under great obligation to the senators from Illinois and Minnesota.

STREET CAR STRIKE.

Not a Horse Car Running in St. Paul or Minneapolis—A Thousand Men Standing out.

The street car drivers of St. Paul and Minneapolis, numbering over a thousand men, are out on a strike, and not a car is running, except on the cable lines of St. Paul. The street car company reduced the wages of drivers from seventeen cents to fifteen cents an hour, and in addition thereto demanded that the men should sign a paper pledging themselves not to join any labor union or association. The sympathies of the public seem to be almost entirely on the part of the men.

IN MINNEAPOLIS.

The company and the police attempted to run the cars, and while doing so, this incident occurred:

As this car, the third one, pulled out from the barn, and the second one, which made the round trip, moved away from the barn, a lady of rather slender form, wearing a neat black hat and a plush cloak, stepped from the outside of the crowd and quickly mounted the car. She had hardly taken a standing position beside the stout young fellow who drove before she began her mission. She was Mrs. McCurdy, the young wife of a driver who was among the strikers, but who was not at the barn at the time his wife boarded the car. The lady paid no attention to any one but the driver. She stood close to him, and she used her right hand in gesture.

I came in here to ask you not to drive this car. Will you not leave and be an honorable man?

The driver announced that if he left the car somebody else would gladly take his place.
